The loins and bacon combined represent approximately the same weight as the lard part of the carcass. With lard selling at a loss of 20 cents per pound, to make up this loss a similar number of pounds of pork chops or bacon or ham, bacon and pork chops must be sold at a higher price level. As I have pointed out, the price of pork chops advanced in direct ratio to the drop in lard prices. With pork chops or pork loins representing about 16 pounds of the carcass from a 250-pound hog, it is evident that about one-half of the loss is passed on in this way. The rest of the loss must be recovered from higher prices for hams, bacon, etc.

SUMMARY

Summarizing the effect of the price dislocation, no one has gained as the result of it, with the possible exception of the soap industry, which has had the advantage of cheap fats for their industry. The consumer has paid for the lower lard prices, the advance in choice cuts of meat having been used to offset the relatively low lard price.

The principal result has been to discourage the producer in feeding to heavier weights, thus curtailing the production of both fats and meat products. In addition, the farmer has suffered a direct financial loss. This loss can be quite accurately determined.

For example, if he markets 220-pound hogs at $30 per hundredweight, the approximate price in July for that weight, he receives $66 per head. In July the heavy hogs, 360 pounds, sold for $24.50 on the Chicago market and the farmer received $88.20, or an increase of $22.20 for the additional weight of 140 pounds. For this additional weight he received 15.85 cents per pound as compared to $30 per hundredweight for the hog sold at 220 pounds.

His comparative loss is approximately $22. This penalty for weight is not a good incentive for either the production of meat or fats and the shortage which has developed will continue.

That the price differential is entirely the result of too low a price for lard is revealed by heavy-hog and light-hog prices for the years 1925, 1927, 1929 and 1943 (OPA ceilings).

| | Prices at Chicago | |
| | Heavy hogs, 330 to 360 pounds | Light hogs, 200 to 250 pounds |
| | Per cwt. | Per cwt. |
| 1925 | $12.19 | $12.23 |
| 1927 | 10.16 | 10.45 |
| 1929 | 10.29 | 10.52 |
| 1943 | 14.41 | 14.66 |
| 1948 (July) | 24.51 | 29.66 |

The record indicates clearly that there is no great differential if lard prices are in proper ratio. This price balance has been upset by the unwise rationing of fats and oils to the extent of depressing the price.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The various departments should provide for larger allocations of tallow and lard for export. Fats are a very much needed food in Europe and represents an economical food. Fat is a highly concentrated food and there is no cost of freight for water content such as we have in meat, fruits, potatoes, etc.

In my opinion a supplemental allocation of 100,000,000 in the third quarter of 1948 would have corrected the price situation. Proper allocations should be made in the fourth quarter to restore the historical price balance which is an entirely natural one.

With a proper price ratio for fats, etc., to remove the penalty for weight, the producer should be encouraged to feed to heavier weights, thus overcoming some of the present shortage of fats and meats.

The estimated corn crop of 3,500,000,000 bushels can be turned into fat and meat, the only process we have to get increased production. Unless such a course is followed high meat prices and a shortage of fats and meat will continue and the stocks of corn will pile up as a surplus stock of raw materials for meat and fat production.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Omaha Herald.

Mr. RICH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a report from the Bristol Courier of January 3, 1949, entitled "The Year 1949."

ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I am very much grieved this morning to see in the statement of the Federal Treasury as of January 17 that, while last year we had a credit balance of $1,571,000,000 as of that date, today we have a deficit of $112,000,000. This means we should get down to brass tacks, talk economy and practice economy in our Government.

Think of what the President's messages to Congress were.

There were many proposals to spend and spend and spend. He did not say anything about economy in Government. It grieves me greatly to think that the President is not going to try to instill in the minds of the people of America, especially the Members of this Congress, that we have to economize in the many things we are doing in this Nation if we are to preserve our stability. Just look at the Government deficits we have had in the past few years.

In 1943 the deficit was $57,400,000,000.
In 1944 the deficit was $51,400,000,000.
In 1945 the deficit was $53,900,000,000.
In 1946 the deficit was $20,700,000,000.

In 1947, under a Republican Congress, we had a surplus of $754,000,000.

In 1948 the Republican surplus amounted to $8,400,000,000. It shows what the Republicans can do; besides, they cut the taxes of our American people. The Republicans believe in a solvent Government—a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people.

Look what the President has done in starting us off for 1949—he advocates spending to the extent that we have a deficit for 1949 of $873,000,000, and for 1950 a deficit of $2,700,000,000. All he thinks of is spending. Why does not the President and the Congress have some degree of sane, sensible sound business in Government operation§ With a debt of over $252,000,000,000, more deficit financing means ruin for Government, ruination for our people. Again I say to you,

Where in the world will you get the money for this ruthless spending?

Stop, look, and for goodness' sake, listen.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FARRINGTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a series of editorials favoring statehood for Hawaii.

NATURALIZATION OF CERTAIN ALIENS

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill to provide for the naturalization of certain noncitizen parents of persons who served in the armed forces of the United States, or in the merchant marine, in World War I or World War II.

The sons and daughters of these noncitizens filled the ranks of our services. Many of them paid the supreme sacrifice.

They have rightfully earned for their parents the privilege of citizenship.

Through force of circumstance or economic necessity, in many instances, these parents of large families were denied the ready accessibility to citizenship.

They were occupied with the problem of rearing the future citizens of America. They should not be penalized for devotion to so noble a duty. Rather, a medal of citizenship should be struck and bestowed for meritorious service to this country.

There can be no loftier grant, no finer gesture, than the extension of the much-cherished privilege of American citizenship to persons whose moral, spiritual, and physical contribution to our greatness produced offspring citizens who have fought and bled and sacrificed and otherwise distinguished themselves as true Americans.

Can there be any hesitancy about accepting them for citizenship when they have so capably exhibited and proved by actual practice that they possess the prime requisities for graduation to actual and official Americanization.

Is this not one of those times when all minds concur to make this possible?

They fathered and mothered our manpower for the battlefields and for our arsenals at home, for the professions and the arts, and the businesses, and for every field of contributory endeavor that has brought us to our present position as a leading world power.

We would be grateful, for we are a grateful people, to do what is clearly obvious.

They qualify in every respect but one.

Shall we refuse to adopt them legally as our own simply because, unwittingly, and perhaps unintentionally, we had thrown a road block in their path to citizenship.

They have proved their worth; they have earned their fare. Their undeniable attachment to the principles of Americanism should impel us to remove that obstacle.

In this specific instance, the educational requirements should be waived.

The bill that I present today is meant to do just that. It is a reasonable move. It is an Americanlike attitude. It is the exercise of typically American virtues. Fundamentally, it is gratitude expressed as only America could express it.

It is my hope that on both sides of the aisle there is recognized the moral obligation incurred over the years and especially during the last two World Wars.

For in the process of building the greatness that is ours, theirs was a contribution no less patriotic, no less civic-minded, and no less devoted than ours.

The flesh and blood of these fathers and mothers were bartered for the sake of our preservation on Normandy's shore, on Gaudalcanal, on the seas of the world, and in the skies over lands far from the good old U. S. A.

I urge early and favorable consideration of this bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD with reference to a bill he is today introducing to establish an immigration quota for the state of Israel.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, there was spent for unemployment insurance last year $750,000,000 in a time of full employment. When I read in the papers that thousands of people are spending their winters in Florida on unemployment insurance, it suggests to my mind the old axiom, "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise." And this suggests the following more modern axiom, "When you can cheat the Government by not working and vacation in the sunny climes of Florida on unemployment insurance, why work?"

That is what is happening in thousands of cases, because the administration of unemployment insurance has been so loose that thousands of wage earners, when through with one job, refuse to take another one, claiming that the offered employment is not suitable.

In too many instances the Government agency obligingly agrees with the job applicant who goes on unemployment insurance. Many wage earners themselves refer to unemployment insurance as rocking-chair money. To some extent it has become a Nation-wide racket for the accommodation of loafers, at the expense of those who are willing to work.

Mr. Speaker, New York papers carry the story that over 1,000 New Yorkers on unemployment insurance are vacationing in Florida and escaping the more rigorous climate of the North.

From northern Illinois the papers say that over 200 of these so-called unemployed are rocking away their time, also basking in the sunshine of Florida.

The press in Washington carries the story that over 300 District citizens are receiving their unemployment compensation while spending the winter in Florida in a climate more to their liking.

These are only a few of the many thousands throughout the Nation who are taking advantage of the loose administration of this law.

The administration has recommended more weeks of unemployment insurance be granted the workers and, in some States, more pay per week. If such a bill passes, it is to be hoped that no over-indulgent Congressman will offer an amendment to it to include for the comfort of those who see fit to spend their winters in Florida, free beach chairs, or rocking chairs, also at the expense of the taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the people generally want this act tightened up, so only those who are really in need and are entitled to unemployment insurance get it. That was the real intent of the law.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances: in each to include extraneous material.

Mr. MEYER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD with reference to the production of strategic materials.

Mr. MACK of Washington (at the request of Mr. TOLLEFSON) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

KEEPING HISTORY STRAIGHT ON CHARPENTRY, FRANCE

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCRIVNER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, much as I dislike to spoil a good story, I must correct the one related in the Washington Star of Saturday, January 22, 1949, for the sake of historical accuracy.

In substance the news story stated that Capt. Harry Truman, in command of Battery D, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Field Artillery, "forgot" an order against firing across the division boundary separating the Thirty-fifth Division—Kansas and Missouri National Guard—and the Twenty-eighth Division—Pennsylvania National Guard—on the west side of the Aire River left of the Thirty-fifth Division in the Muese Argonne.

The story goes on to say that by forgetting the order, Captain Truman trained his guns on the village of Char-pentry, knocked out six guns, and enabled the Twenty-eighth Division to capture Charpentry with little loss of life—thus saving the lives of many Pennsylvania men.

Those are not the facts.

Let us keep history straight.

The Twenty-eighth Division did not capture Charpentry.

The Thirty-fifth Division did that job.

Charpentry was in the Thirty-fifth Division sector a few miles north of Vauquois Hill, taken by the Thirty-fifth Division on the first day of the drive.

Charpentry was taken by the Thirty-fifth Division before noon September 28, by the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Infantry of which I was a member. Some troops from the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Infantry also participated in taking this objective.

These are the facts—not fiction. If there is any doubt about this the War Department, histories, battle maps, and other members of the Thirty-fifth Division will verify them all.

DR. PETER MARSHALL

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, not only is the Congress brought low in mourning for the spiritual leader lost, but his flock, the people of our National Capital, of our Nation, as well as many parts of the world, are united in grief as they lovingly recall the voice so recently stilled.

So young, fresh, strong, winsome, and thrilling, as he constantly gave the challenge to climb in the steps of his Master; so potent in prayer; our smiling friend, Dr. Peter Marshall, leaves a happier, better world because he lived; a clearer, surer hope because he still lives and beckons, where there is no death.

They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars, forever and ever.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after all business and any other special orders, I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER]?

RESEARCH IN THE CURE AND TREATMENT OF RHEUMATISM AND ARTHRITIS

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be able to join with my distinguished colleagues on the Democratic side, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS], and my distinguished colleague on the Republican side, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], in introducing the bill for research into the causes and cure of rheumatism and arthritis. I would like to underscore what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] has just said about the fact that this whole program is of a pattern and that it ties in very closely with the enlargement of the research facilities of our State universities, medical schools, and research centers around the country. I think this pattern is the most eloquent rebuttal of the idea that by undertaking this humanitarian program the Federal Government is engaged in discouraging private and individual enterprise. On the contrary, it is bringing out the best in our private economy and in private research. It is at long last doing justice to the millions of sufferers from heart disease, cancer, mental illness, tuberculosis, and now rheumatism and arthritis who have found no other adequate relief while they have seen billions expended—necessary as they are—for military weapons. A chart of the distribution of United States Public Health Service funds for these research purposes, follows:

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS] has expired.

THE LATE HONORABLE THEODORE CHRISTIANSON

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House with reference to the death of a former Member.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I report to the House the passing of a respected former Member of this body.

Theodore Christianson, three times Governor of Minnesota and a Member of the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses from that State, died suddenly at his home near Dawson, Minn., on December 9, 1948.

Born in Lac qui Parle township of Lac qui Parle County, Minn., in 1883, he graduated from the University of Minnesota in 1906 and won his law degree there in 1909. He then started practice in Dawson, Minn., 9 miles from where he was born, and also acquired the Dawson Sentinel, which he published until 1925. He served in the State legislature from 1914 until his first term as Governor.

His many friends in Congress will remember him as a friend of the farmer and small business. While in Congress he opposed huge Government spending and centralization of power in the Federal Government and as Governor of our State gave the people of Minnesota a splendid administration.

After he left Congress he first became associated with the National Association of Retail Grocers and later in 1939 became public relations counsel for the National Association of Retail Druggists. In fact, he had just retired in October from the drug association and had planned to enjoy his retirement by spending his summers on his farm near Dawson and his winters in Florida, but fate decided otherwise.

Ted was a very scholarly man and was always seeking avidly further knowledge. He was a good customer of book shops, as evidenced by his large private library in which every book was well marked with notations and comments. His was not a superficial knowledge, for from his earliest college days he had dug deep into the study of history, politics, economics, and literature.

He was the author of Minnesota: a History of the State and Its People, which is one of the most scholarly histories of our great State. He also edited the National Association of Retail Druggists Journal and wrote numerous articles on government which were published in our foremost magazines.

He had two sons, Robert James and Theodore, Jr., by his first wife, Mrs. Ruth E. Donaldson Christianson, who died in 1944. He married his second wife, Mrs. Mayme B. Bundy, of Chicago, Ill., in 1946.

Last October he and Mrs. Christianson came to Washington to visit at the home of his brother, Mr. Curtis A. Christianson. He spent a whole day at the Capitol visiting all the haunts so familiar to him. His one regret was that Congress was not in session so that he could see his old friends. It is quite possible that he had a feeling that it might be his last visit.

I am sure his many friends in Congress will join in paying tribute to a great statesman and a great American.

I insert herewith three editorials, all printed in the Dawson Sentinel, which so aptly describe his outstanding career as a public servant:

TED CHRISTIANSON: A FRIEND

Newspapers all over the State of Minnesota will pay tribute to Theodore Christianson this week, most of whom will probably stress his public service. Other editorials on this page are expressions from the Twin City newspapers, each paying high tribute to the man who held the respect and esteem of men and women of all political faiths. Ted Christianson was no ordinary man, but like so many others who have achieved greatness, the bouquets come after death when his eyes can no longer read, nor his ears hear the praises and accolades.

His public service is well known to Sentinel readers, as is his ability as a writer and speaker. For many years Ted Christianson's opinions appeared in these columns while he was editor and publisher of the Sentinel, and from this chair he went on to fame and fortune. He was a self-made man, and his attainments came from his own efforts and abilities. He knew first hand the struggles and privations of pioneer life, and through that experience learned the valuable lesson of thrift and honesty, qualities which remained with him throughout his entire life.

His ability was recognized by others early in life, and it was the prediction of his minister during his confirmation days that Theodore Christianson would go on to greatness, becoming either a governor or a United States Senator. The first prediction came true, and Minnesota was given 6 years of State administration which set a pattern of achievement which has not been reached since. Economy and honesty in government was an imperative creed with Theodore Christianson, and though there were those among his political family who failed him, Theodore Christianson lived up to his pledges made during his first campaign. His was a political courage rare in the annals of State history.

We could devote this entire page in an attempt to pay just tribute to the career of Dawson's greatest citizen, but others, more able than we, will speak of nearly every phase of his life. We want to devote our tribute to the quality which we home folks knew better than anyone else—his friendliness.

We hope we will be pardoned for referring to our personal experience with Ted Christianson—we call him Ted, for no one around here called him anything but that. He was the kind of a man for whom one felt a personal friendship at the first meeting.

Back in 1916 Ted Christianson gave the commencement address to a class of six seniors at Belview. The writer was one of those six, and though we do not remember the message the speaker gave to us that night, we do remember that it exerted a powerful influence on us. We did not meet Ted Christianson again until in 1921. We were filling the position of superintendent of schools at Milan at that time, and, remembering the 1916 speech, we came over to Dawson to secure the services of Ted Christianson for our commencement exercises at Milan. We do not remember that speech, either, but we do recall that there was the same magnetic appeal. Our acquaintanceship ripened from that time on, and many were the times that an encouraging word or an inspiring conversation with him gave us a needed lift.

During our superintendency of the Dawson schools we felt the need for a change of profession. We discussed this with some friends, and Mr. and Mrs. Christianson heard of our plans and asked us to come and see them to talk over a proposition they had for us. Their genuine interest in our welfare and confidence in us influenced us to enter a profession entirely new to us, and their generosity gave us the opportunity of going into business for ourselves.

During our nearly 12 years as editor of this newspaper there have been times when we have been much discouraged, ready to throw in the sponge and try something else. However, encouraging letters and talks during Mr. Christianson's frequent visits gave us the needed impetus to keep going. He always maintained a keen interest in the paper he formerly published and never failed to visit the shop one or more times when here on a visit.

What Ted Christianson did for us is just one example of the influence his friendliness exerted. He was of the common people, and neither wealth nor fame made any difference in his treatment of his host of friends. His own success did not change him, and he was never so content as when spending his vacations in his home community and realizing some of the dreams and plans he had made for his declining years.

Ted Christianson was always planning for the future, and just a brief hour before his death was talking of plans he had for his home when he and his wife returned from their anticipated winter holiday in Florida. Had his plans materialized, the world would have been richer, for a part of his plans included the writing of several articles and possibly a book. His keen mind and sound philosophy of living won for him the kind of life most of us seek and never find.

Ted Christianson was a great man, and above all a great friend. We can think of no better way to express our feelings than to say that we shall sincerely miss him.

"MORE TED, LESS TAXES"

Theodore Christianson's first campaign for Governor of Minnesota was opened a quarter of a century ago by Gunnar Bjornson in the weekly Minnesota Mascot with an editorial titled "More Ted, Less Taxes." The slogan struck the popular fancy and helped Christianson win three terms as Governor. Economy was his platform and he carried it out with a consecration few men show in public office.

Christianson was a farm boy who worked his way through school to a law degree. He believed that self-reliance was a splendid asset for the individual and that thrift was a virtue to be cultivated in private living and government administration. Thus he found himself out of step with later political thought which held that a nation could spend itself out of difficulties.

Now Theodore Christianson has passed on and his philosophy seldom is heard in public places. Yet it still persists in the minds of men, like a voice of conscience, and some day may be brought into the open again.

The former Governor himself is not forgotten by any who knew him, for he was an able, honest, and friendly figure. He ran the Dawson Sentinel for many years and the loyalty of the country press to him was almost unanimous. As Governor and Congressman, he lived up to the responsibility this placed upon him. He served his State and his own ideals well.—Minneapolis Star-Journal.

HIS MONUMENTS ENDURE

Theodore Christianson, who died near his old home at Dawson, Thursday night, was the descendant of territorial pioneers, who came from Norway to settle in western Minnesota. He was the first native son of a native son to become Governor of the State. Editing a five-volume history of Minnesota, in 1935, Christianson paid tribute to the outstanding work in that field by the late William Watts Folwell, as "a monumental achievement by a man who not only wrote history but made it."

While the writing skill he displayed for years as editor of the Dawson Sentinel marked his effort as historian too, it is as a maker of Minnesota history rather than a recorder of it that Theodore Christianson will be remembered. Few men ever came to the governorship better prepared for its duties. Through 8 years in the House, much of that time chairman of its Appropriations Committee, he had an intimate, practical knowledge of State problems and governmental techniques.

It seems old-fashioned in view of more recent trends to recall his emphasis on economy as governor. But it was part of his concept of stewardship of a public trust. He believed government should abide by the same fundamental rules as to efficiency and economy which private business applies. And he furthered that objective in the Reorganization Act of 1925, which rates as the greatest achievement in his 6-year administration as chief executive.

Institution of the preaudit system of budgeting and the maintenance of safeguards against spending State funds simply because it may be possible to spend them are fundamentals of reorganized State government that brought sweeping reforms when Christianson introduced them as Governor. They remained as time-tested essentials in such changes as the new reorganization act of 1939 brought.

The same traits of dependability and leadership marked Theodore Christianson's career in private business as had distinguished his work as State legislator, Governor and Congressman. The last public appearance he made in Minnesota was when called here to dedicate a memorial to the late C. M. Babcock, highway commissioner, at Elk River. He described as the most enduring monument to Babcock's career the State trunk highway system which he made a reality. Theodore Christianson leaves his own enduring monument in the high caliber of his civil leadership, and in technical phases of State government, reforms he fostered will endure, even long after their origins may have been forgotten. (St. Paul Pioneer Press.)

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in paying tribute to Theodore Christianson. He was an outstanding and one of the ablest governors in the history of our State. As a member of the State legislature and as Governor of our State he left a magnificent record—in legislation and in his program during his service as Governor—which is a monument to his ability as a legislator and Governor.

Theodore Christianson was a man of outstanding scholarly attainments, an able speaker, a gentleman of culture and integrity.

The State of Minnesota has in my opinion lost one of its ablest sons and I join in tribute to an outstanding American who gave so many years of his life in the public service.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of knowing Governor Christianson for at least 20 years. He was one of the finest and best men I ever knew. He was not only an able and wise man but he was also a very intelligent man in every way. He was a good, genuine, public-spirited citizen; he was civic-minded and always working in the interest of his country; he was truly a great American.

Governor Christianson during his life was famous and outstanding as a lawyer, newspaper publisher, historian, State legislator, Governor, Congressman, publicist, organization worker, and militant protagonist of small business. His passing is a great loss to the entire country.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in connection with my remarks an article which appeared in the journal of the National Association of Retail Druggists shortly after Governor Christianson's death.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The article referred to follows:

DEATH COMES TO THEODORE CHRISTIANSON

Theodore Christianson, editor emeritus of the NARD Journal, died on December 9 from a heart attack while en route to his farm home near Dawson, Minn. He was 65 years old on September 12.

Mr. Christianson was a former Governor of Minnesota and he had served two terms in Congress. He left behind an exemplary record of service, one that men in political positions today might well try to follow, for it was made through individual acceptance of the highest concepts of citizenship. He gave to public service the fullest measure of the abilities he possessed and conscientious recognition of the responsibilities that accompany election to an office of government. The ideals that guided him are the beacons of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States of America.

Mr. Christianson had been a stalwart fighter through the years for the basic values of a society built on the bedrock of freedom. Never once did he compromise on issues coupled to the fundamentals of liberty. He held fast to convictions he derived from intensive study of history. It pained him to see the people betrayed through the treachery of political leaders they had been induced to follow. He was troubled over the expansion of bureaucracy in government. "The consequence will be dictatorship," he often observed.

For a long time he had been much concerned anent the struggles of small business to survive. On numerous occasions he pointed to the onward march of monopoly. "It is bound to bring collectivism unless it is stopped before it is too late to save small business," he emphasized. He believed that it had become compulsory to enact legislation to make it illegal for corporate empires to purchase the assets of competitors. "Otherwise monopoly will continue to grow unchecked," he insisted. He also took the position that the laws against trusts must be modified to allow individual retailers to come together in concerted action to bargain with the manufacturers. He argued that now the small dealers were compelled to operate as best they could in an uphill fight against the unfair tactics of the producers.

Mr. Christianson joined the headquarters staff of the NARD as public-relations counsel in 1939. To the position he brought a thorough knowledge of economics and a background of experience that gave him familiarity with the force of public opinion. The programs he developed to help the independent retail druggists were realistic and in line with the problems of the individual retailers. He traveled over the country to arouse small business to the necessity for united action, and everywhere he went he stimulated militant activities against the destroyers of freedom of enterprise. He also wrote numerous articles to advance the cause of independent retail druggists and small business in general. To him it was an obligation of citizenship to strive for the preservation of the way of life that built the United States.

Then in 1945 he became editor of the NARD Journal. He continued in that position until he retired on November 1, 1948. The final contribution he made to the independent retail druggists was the farewell address he delivered at the golden jubilee convention of the NARD. It was published in full in the NARD Journal dated November 1.

Mr. Christianson was born on a farm in Lac qui Parle County, Minn. He was a son of Robert and Emma Christianson. They were of rugged stock and from them he first learned the great lessons of liberty. He clung with tenacity to the heritage of a pioneer society in the prairies of the Northwest.

After he was graduated from the high school at Dawson, Minn., he matriculated at the University of Minnesota and was graduated with the bachelor of arts degree in 1906. Then he served as principal of the public school of Robbinsdale, Minn., a suburb of Minneapolis, and at the same time studied law at the University of Minnesota to earn the bachelor of laws degree in 1909. Soon thereafter he purchased the Dawson (Minn.) Sentinel and he combined publication of the newspaper with the practice of law at Dawson.

One of the teachers on his staff in the public school at Robbinsdale was Miss Ruth Donaldson. They were married in 1907 and to them two sons were born, Robert James and Theodore, Jr. Both are attorneys; the former practices in Minneapolis, the latter in St. Paul. Mrs. Christianson died in 1944. Mr. Christianson was married again in 1946, to Mrs. Mayme Bunde, of Chicago.

Mr. Christianson was elected to the Minnesota House of Representatives in 1914 and he served six terms, during four of which he was chairman of the important appropriations committee. Then in 1925 he was elected Governor on the Republican ticket. He served three terms in the office and became recognized as one of the greatest chief executives in the history of Minnesota. For a time thereafter he was associated with a manufacturer in Minneapolis. In 1932 he was elected a Representative in Congress. After he had served two terms, he became a candidate for United States Senator but was defeated in the leftward swing of the majority of the people of Minnesota.

Mr. Christianson then accepted the managership of the National Association of Retail Grocers. He continued in that position until NARD's executive secretary, John W. Dargavel, induced him to join its headquarters staff.

It seems appropriate to quote the final words Mr. Christianson spoke in the farewell message to the independent retail druggists delivered at the golden jubilee of the NARD:

"Those who established this country had a dream, the finest dream ever conceived by man—

" 'Here on this soil began the kingdom, not of kings but men;
Began the making of the world again,
Where equal rights and equal bonds were set,
Where all the people equal-franchised met,
Where doom was writ of privilege and crown,
Where human breath blew all the idols down,
Where crests were naught, where vulture flags were furled,
And common men began to own the world!'

"That was the American dream. To make it come true must be your continuing objective."

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, a great teacher once said, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

It was not my privilege to know well Governor Christianson, a former Member of this House, because I did not come to the State of Minnesota until about the time when he was leaving active public life; but, judged by the fruits he left, which are visible to all in Minnesota, the imprint he made on the hearts of his fellow citizens, the record on the statute books, in public works, and in advancing every other good cause in the State of Minnesota, he was a truly great man. I can think of no person who has left larger footprints in the sands of time as the result of what he did. His record is what impressed a person coming along after him with the remarkable ability, integrity, versatility, and superior leadership he must have had. I know I am speaking for all the people of Minnesota. We pay tribute to one of her greatest sons, and certainly one of the ablest public servants it has been our State's privilege to send into public life.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join the gentleman from Minnesota and the delegation from Minnesota in an expression of deep regret over the death of former Governor Christianson. He was a warm personal friend of mine; one whose friendship I cherished for many years. I knew him as a true friend, great public servant, a Christian gentleman, and a great American. We have all suffered a serious loss in his passing.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks three editorials.

I also ask unanimous consent that all Members so desiring may extend their remarks at this point on the life and character of the late Theodore Christianson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the requests of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial.

A FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT DAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take advantage of this occasion to note an anniversary which has by now become indelibly stamped in the public consciousness as a day of commemoration and dedication.

In the American calendar of days for patriotic observance we are accustomed to the yearly recurrence of so-called name days. Lincoln's Birthday, Washington's Birthday, Jackson Day, Jefferson Day, Jeff Davis Day in the great Southland, and Columbus Day are typical of the holidays set aside for remembrance of great men whose figures loom large in the panorama of our national history.

January 30 of each year is also gradually taking its place in the roster of notable dates in American history.

For that date, Mr. Speaker, is one of no mean significance.

Entirely aside from the fact that it is the anniversary of the natal day of the lamented and revered Franklin Delano Roosevelt, it has become recognized as a rallying day in the fight of the American people against the dread disease which so sorely afflicted that superlative statesman.

Hence we do not have Roosevelt Day or Franklin Roosevelt's birthday—but instead, the President's birthday.

No greater detail, no more specific designation is needed.

The President's birthday means but one thing to all Americans.

It is a day of happy combination. At once a day of remembrance—the birthday anniversary of a magnificent American—and a day of devotion—dedicated to the drive to raise funds to combat infantile paralysis.

There is a peculiarly fitting tribute implicit in the term by which this memorable day is designated.

Of all our outstanding Executive leaders, only one has had his birthday anniversary set aside as that of the President's. But one man could aptly fill such a singular niche of specification. That man and that President is Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

As one who knew intimately his greatness of heart and soul, I like to think that such a simple yet unique designation for the birthday anniversary of Franklin Roosevelt is the eloquent tribute of a grateful people who recognized in him their leader, their champion, and, in a particular manner, their own beloved President.

The President's birthday, then, means Franklin Roosevelt's birthday—the birthday of the President of the people, and the remembered anniversary of the only man who so won their affection as to achieve the highest office within their gift for four consecutive terms.

The second meaning of the day is one which meant more to Franklin Delano Roosevelt than the anniversary itself.

Early in his career as President he sanctioned celebration of the day, not as one of personal glorification, but as a day of dedication to the humanitarian cause of relief of suffering.

Each year since has seen the setting aside of January 30 as the climax of a concerted annual national effort to conquer infantile paralysis.

Thus the anniversary of the birth of Franklin Roosevelt is not an idle commemoration but is a day of achievement for the betterment of the lot of man. He, more than any of his fellow citizens, was pleased that something of his could be devoted to such high purpose.

It is perhaps characteristic of such a selfless leader that so personal a thing as his own birthdate should be perpetuated primarily as an occasion for lessening the pain and sorrow of those with whom he felt a special kinship.

I say this because of all the splendid qualities with which God and nature endowed him, the most notable was his humanitarianism.

He conceived of government as an instrumentality for the service of man.

Every piece of the major legislation which marked the social revolution of his administrations was purposely designed to alleviate the social conditions of the masses he loved.

His enemies—which are those also of the commonalty—were fear, want, poverty, social injustice, physical suffering, and human indignity.

He battled them with the shining swords of charity, social justice, good will, humane philosophy, and democratic government.

In war and in peace, his sole concern was centered around the rights of man, both as an individual and as a member of society.

He subscribed wholeheartedly to the deathless principle that the salvation of the world lay in the recognition and effectuation of the brotherhood of man under the fatherhood of God.

What is more, he acted, resolutely and courageously, upon that principle; and he did so to the extent that the most fruitful years of his energetic life were dedicated to the gradual attainment of that sublime goal at home and abroad.

He so lived in accordance with his high principles that at his death he bequeathed the pattern of them for the guidance of America and the edification of the world.

The impress of his greatness is all around us.

This nation is stronger and greater because he has lived in it, gave himself to it, and died in its service.

It is true that his beloved land and the community of nations which he struggled to bring into the sunshine of peace and prosperity have not yet attained the goal.

But the influence of his dynamic leadership still gives an impetus toward that goal, and the vanguard of the march of the peoples of the world toward it is led by the spirit of Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

It was his incessant prayer that mankind should so advance in understanding, friendship, and good will that discord would vanish from the face of the earth. That prayer is still our aspiration.

On Sunday next, if God had spared him to us, Franklin Roosevelt would have been 67 years old. The vibrant voice, the friendly smile, the warm handclasp, the generous heart—all these are no more. But the ageless spirit of the man abides with us.

That spirit is abroad today. It is a part of the spiritual fabric of America which holds the courage of his people to the great moral issues which beset the world today.

It is with the faith of that great spirit that those issues will be solved.

The name and memory of Franklin D. Roosevelt will live in the minds of people everywhere for all time.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include statements and excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE EIGHTY-FIRST CONGRESS—SMALL BUSINESS—PRESIDENT TRUMAN ENTITLED TO COOPERATION OF CONGRESS IN EFFORT TO AID SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, small-business men have the right to expect a lot from the Eighty-first Congress. The plain people of this country, generally, have a right to expect a lot out of the Eighty-first Congress. President Truman is known as a friend of the small-business man. His every heart throb and every pulse beat have been on the side of small business and against monopoly. We have, too, fortunately, a fine Attorney General of the United States selected by President Truman to enforce the antitrust laws of our country. He is the Honorable Tom Clark from the State of Texas. The people of this Nation are proud of him because of the fine way that he has enforced the antitrust laws fearlessly, fairly, and impartially. He is alert; he is able; and he certainly is on the side of the people and small business and against monopolistic practices and monopolies. It is now up to Congress to do something. We must provide money and enact needed laws. The private enterprise system built our country. It is the finest and greatest system in the world. We want to preserve and protect that system. We do not want socialism, communism, or fascism. We want the American system, the democratic system.

A DEMOCRACY IN A REPUBLIC

The question has been raised in this country about whether or not we have a democratic form of government. Some have suggested it is a republican form of government. Without discussing the matter in detail, it is true that under our Constitution of the United States each State is guaranteed a republican form of government, but at the same time there is nothing said about the kind of government that is guaranteed as a Federal Government. However our Government set-up is unquestionably a representative democracy. It will be remembered that a State cannot impair the obligation of contracts. That is prohibited by the Federal Constitution. But, the Federal Government is not restrained or prevented from impairing the obligation of contracts. There is a difference between the States and the Federal Government.

In 1918 the House of Representatives adopted what has been known and is known as the American's Creed. It was written by the Honorable William Tyler Page, a former Clerk of this House, and a very fine man. I had the pleasure and privilege of knowing him several years before he passed away. A prize was offered, at least, a premium was offered of $1,000 to the one who wrote the best American creed. The Honorable William Tyler Page won that prize of $1,000. The American's Creed is exactly 100 words. In that creed, that was adopted by this House of Representatives, our Government and our system and form of government is described as "a democracy in a Republic."

WHO IS THE REAL SOCIALIST

In connection with small business, as I said a while ago, we want to continue to have the kind of business we have had in the past. Many people are disturbed. I am impressed with the fact that the people who seem to be disturbed the most and are making the most noise are the ones who are putting our country in the direction of socialism.

I ask the question, Who is a real Socialist in this country, the person who has nothing but a loud voice advocating socialism or the big man who is putting the units of an industry all in one package and making it ripe for Government ownership and control?

SOCIALISTS BELIEVE IN MONOPOLY

Dr. Steinmetz was one of the most famous scientists and engineers in the world, I presume, before his death. He was the chief consulting engineer of the General Electric Co., quite a big company at that time as well as now. He was a Socialist. He admitted he was a Socialist. He believed in socialism, he advocated socialism, and he made speeches for socialism.

One day he was asked by an inquiring person in his audience, "Why is it, Dr. Steinmetz, that you are a Socialist, yet you work for one of the biggest concerns in the United States, that is more grasping all the time and getting larger all the time? How can you be consistent under those circumstances?"

He said, "That is easy. I am a firm believer in socialism and I know that the quicker you have monopoly in this country the quicker we will have socialism."

There is a very short step from monopoly in any industry to socialism in the Government. I think Dr. Steinmetz was right, I think he was very consistent in advocating monopoly for the purpose of arriving at socialism.

It has happened in other countries, in England recently, when only six companies had control of the steel production and the Government of Great Britain took over the steel production. It has happened the same way in other industries. When you get an industry in one package, it is almost invariably taken over by the Government.

If you will read the platform of the Republican Party and the Democratic Party for the past 50 years, you will see in practically every platform this or similar language, "Private monopoly is indefensible and cannot be tolerated." If you will read the Socialist platform, you will find that they advocate that the Government should own the trusts. It is perfectly consistent with Dr. Steinmetz's teachings that the Government should own the trusts. So when a few people become the owners of the steel industry or the automobile industry or the electric industry or any other industry, that industry becomes ripe for Government ownership, and then it will be almost irresistible.

The plea is that the Government should own, that private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable and therefore we must prevent private monopoly. We must not allow a few people to own any one particular industry. It must be scattered and all people should be given an opportunity to engage in any business that they want to engage in and be protected from unfair competition.

I have a statement here which was delivered before our Committee on Small Business last November by the Honorable Wendell Berge, formerly in charge of antitrust prosecutions in the Department of Justice of the United States under the present Attorney General, Hon. Tom Clark. This is such an interesting statement I am going to insert it in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

He brings out some points such as this:

> We hear a great deal about the trust-busting policies of President Theodore Roosevelt, but even when you survey his 7-year administration you find that relatively few suits were instituted. The fame which he attained as a trust buster rests largely on several cases—the Northern Securities case, the Packers case, the Standard Oil case, and the Tobacco case. I do not mean to underestimate the importance of those cases. They were important as landmarks.

Then he says:

> In the Theodore Roosevelt administration the average number of lawyers in active service on antitrust matters was five. Five lawyers cannot do very much in policing against the monopoly practices of the whole industry of America.
> In the Wilson administration when the World War had caused prices to skyrocket, the number of lawyers engaged in this work rose to 18. In the 1920s, when corporate mergers proceeded at a fantastic pace, the number of lawyers engaged in antitrust enforcement did not exceed 25. Not until 1938 were as many as 50 lawyers actually employed in this work and not until 1939 did the professional personnel reach 200 lawyers and a half dozen economists. For almost its whole life, the antitrust division has been a kind of corporal's guard.

I call that to your attention and I hope you will read the entire statement by Hon. Wendell Berge at the end of these remarks so that you will realize the need for sufficient money for the Department of Justice to enforce antitrust laws of this country and I will add sufficient money for the Federal Trade Commission, too, because the Federal Trade Commission is engaged in important work in connection with the prevention of mergers, monopolies, and trusts, and for the protection of small business.

COSTLESS CAPITAL

There is something that has been brought up during the last few years in connection with the raising of capital for small businesses, which was unknown before. What chance has a young man now, a G. I., for instance, who goes out and borrows his money in the open market, and who must pay interest on it—what chance has such a young man against the huge concern that does not have to borrow its money, which has costless capital? What chance has the young man against that concern?

I want to explain to you about costless capital. That is a new thing that has been brought up in recent years. It is used to destroy small business. Last year the large corporations of this country earned more than $35,000,000,000. After the payment of taxes they had more than $21,000,000,000, which is about four times as much as they ever earned before in any one year prior to World War II.

STOCKHOLDER—FORGOTTEN MAN

Now, what did they do with that $21,000,000,000? Did they pay it to the stockholders as they used to pay it to the stockholders before World War II, when they paid 70 percent of their earnings to the stockholders? No, they did not do that. The stockholder in this country is becoming the forgotten man. Since World War II these corporations have been retaining 65 to 70 percent of their earnings, and only paying out 30 to 35 cents on the dollar to their stockholders. So that means out of these $21,000,000,000, $7,000,000,000 were paid to their stockholders, only. Fourteen billion dollars were retained as earnings to be used to acquire new plants, new equipment, unrelated business, and even their competitors, in some cases.

How did they get that money? By high prices. That is how they got it. When they needed capital they simply raised the prices. So, what chance has the average businessman in competition with these huge concerns who have gotten their capital from the consumers of America? It is absolutely costless to them. What chance has the small-business man in a case like that? I ask you.

So, who is really the Socialist in this country? The little fellow who honestly believes in socialism, who has not had the right break in life and is pretty noisy about what he believes? Or is it the big-business man, the big industrialist, who is putting industries together in one package, and making them ready for Government ownership? We will have Socialism in this country much quicker through monopoly than we will have any other way. We do not want it either way.

So, the way to prevent socialism is to enforce the antitrust law. That is No. 1. We must do that. We have a lot of people in this country in business and industry. Of course, generally they are very fine people, fine men and women. We all like them and respect them. We admire them. But in every business and industry we have some Captain Kidds who are not willing to play according to the Golden Rule. They are always taking an unfair advantage of their competitors and their customers. So to take care of them, the people who are not willing to just live and let live, but who want to get that unfair advantage, we have laws, and those laws, if properly enforced by the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission, will give these small-business men a chance. They do not have that chance now.

So that is No. 1.

No. 2: We need some new laws. We cannot keep up with a growing country like it is today, a quarter of a trillion dollars—$250,000,000,000 national debt—without new problems arising every day. Those new problems have arisen now, and we must have new laws to take care of them.

For instance, in Illinois 2 years ago they had a famous case, known as United States against the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. The judge there decided that the national corporate chains were harmful to the independent merchants of the country. It finally developed that this great concern sold goods at a loss in certain stores, for the purpose of destroying a competitor. Then, after the competitor was destroyed, of course the price would go up. We need a law to prevent that being done, and permitting the person doing it to get a tax advantage on it, like it is now. When the A. & P. sold at a loss in 29 percent of its stores it could take a tax deduction on those losses, and it did not lose so much. When it lost there, it was made up at other places. So under our present system the United States Government is, in effect, subsidizing the destruction of private independent business in this country. That should not be permitted. Our tax laws should be changed to prevent it.

USING PROFITS TO BUY COMPETITORS

Another law should be enacted to prevent these concerns from acquiring their competitors as they are doing now, and putting them out of business. The head of one of the biggest food companies in the United States testified before our committee, the Joint Committee on Economic Report, during November 1948, that his concern had spent undistributed profits amounting to $50,000,000 in the past 4 years to buy up a large number of industries, naming them, and some of them were competitors of that concern. Something should be done about that.

REGULATION W

Then we have a problem, which I think is serious, in the restriction of credit. I hope it does not go too far. You will recall we had a panic in 1920 because credit was restricted. It caused banks to call loans, and when you call one loan it causes repercussions not only in that community but all over that section of the country, dependent on the size of the loan, of course. That caused a big depression in 1929–32. The lack of credit contributed to this depression. The Federal Reserve Board doubled, or increased 100 percent, if you please, the reserve requirements of the banks in 1937, a very drastic action that almost threw our country into a tailspin and another depression. Finally we came out of that. A credit squeeze can cause a depression quicker in an economy such as our own, in a country like our own, than any other one thing that can possibly be done. I will admit that there are other things that may be more important, but it is very important at this time because it affects so many people, that is regulation W. The Federal Reserve Board came before us last year and asked Congress to give them, the Board of Governors, power to place restrictions on credit, on goods sold on the installment plan; and we gave them that power with the understanding, we thought, that they would use it discreetly and with great caution, and they had no idea in mind of putting back these same drastic terms, for instance, on automobiles, that they had during the war; but after we gave them the power the old drastic terms were not exactly reimposed, one-third down and the balance to be paid in 15 months as under the old terms, but what is nearly as drastic, one-third down and the remainder in 18 months. This is causing a great credit restriction in our country today, and a lot of people who would like to have automobiles and who should own them in their own business, cannot get them because of these credit restrictions. Under present requirements a person must have an income of $5,000 a year before he is able to provide himself and family with a home and an automobile. First he must buy his home way out, or out in the country, and ordinarily to get there and back he must have some kind of motor-vehicle transportation. By the time he makes a down payment on that home and promises a payment of so much a month he does not have enough money left to buy an automobile for transportation unless he has an income of $5,000 or more.

CHARACTER BEST SECURITY

I am a firm believer in character as security as much as I am in money. Some of the best and finest people on earth are people who have character to use in the place of money—and oftentimes you would just as soon have character as to have money. We must encourage people with character. These people after building up a good character and fine reputation over a period of a lifetime want to buy something but find themselves restricted and denied that privilege because of regulation W. Others less deserving are able to buy anything they want.

RELAX REGULATION W

I have appealed to the Federal Reserve Board to relax that restriction and to make it at least 24 months instead of 18, but to no avail. They are always making a new study, a new investigation. It occurs to me that something should be done, and done quickly. The widespread reports could be the beginning and the danger sign of something more serious to come. I am inserting herewith a statement adopted January 25, 1949, by the NADA concerning regulation W. It is as follows:

NATIONAL AUTOMOBILE DEALERS ASSOCIATION,
San Francisco, January 25, 1949.

REGULATION W

The following is the statement voted Tuesday, January 25, by the National Automobile Dealers Association executive committee and issued by President Ben T. Wright to voice the feeling of the national convention of automobile dealers meeting now in San Francisco, Calif.:

"Reports from throughout the Nation that regulation W is imposing grave hardships on persons of small incomes who must use a motorcar in their work or business greatly disturbed members of the National Automobile Dealers Association meeting here today.

"So serious did the association's executive committee regard the situation that it issued a special statement strongly urging the Federal Reserve Board anew to take remedial action immediately. The Board is authorized to ease the present time-payment terms of one-third down and the remaining two-thirds in 18 months whenever it sees fit. The Board now has before it a request from the association that the time-payment period be extended to 24 months.

"The statement said, 'The executive committee of NADA has heard with renewed concern from thousands of its 35,000 members attending its national convention here that the application of regulation W is hurting persons of small income who must have cars to help them earn a livelihood. Workers who must travel long distances to their employment and small-business men who use cars for making deliveries and other gainful purposes are being hit especially hard. Most of them are able to make the initial payment, but find it impossible in many cases to meet the subsequent 18 months' requirements.

" 'These payments, even on the smallest cars, now approximate $100 per month. Of course, persons in the low-income brackets simply cannot meet such terms.

" 'This is not a question of dealers being unable to move all the cars they can get. They can do that because there are enough customers with higher incomes ready and able to buy all available new cars. But the higher-income classes generally do not need cars to help them make a living. Therefore, the regulation puts pressure on the segment of car buyers least able to stand it.

" 'NADA has previously called the attention of the Federal Reserve Board to the situation as reflected by scattered reports and the Board has been investigating this limited number of cases and others brought to his attention. Since arriving here, however, your executive committee has learned from dealers representing all States that complaints against the harsh terms of the regulation are general.

" 'We, therefore, are again urging the Board to give the small buyers relief immediately.'

"Informal discussions looking to amendment of the regulation by congressional action in case the Board continues to decline to modify the terms of the regulation have been held. Thus far, however, NADA has made no direct appeal to Congress for legislative assistance."

MAN-MADE RECESSION UNJUSTIFIED

I was told by a member of the Federal Reserve Board that we should have a recession, that the quicker we have a recession the better off this country will be. That was the most shocking thing I ever heard come from a public official. It was very much like the statement made by the Federal Reserve Board in 1920 when this country went into a real panic.

MUST NOT DOUBLE NATIONAL DEBT

Why should we have a recession? We must have good prices, we must have good wages; otherwise we cannot support a $250,000,000,000 national debt. If it were possible for this Congress and the President or some power in our country arbitrarily to reduce wages one half and prices one-half we know that would have the same effect as doubling our national debt in what the people have to pay with. It would absolutely ruin this country. We must have good prices and good wages or we cannot pay the national debt in honest dollars. We must do that.

Who is going to say when prices are too high? Have we left that to the Federal Reserve Board? No, we have not left that to the Federal Reserve Board; but it seems like the Board is attempting to usurp that function, that duty, and that obligation, if you please. I think it is going too far and is having a very harmful effect on our country.

MUST HAVE HIGH NATIONAL INCOME

Mr. Speaker, this debt is a large one but it is not impossible. We can pay it in only one way, however, and that is with a high national income. We must have an income of over $200,000,000,000 a year, which means we will have to have a national product of between two hundred and twenty-five and two hundred and forty billion dollars a year. In order to have that high national income we must have good wages and good prices. There is no other way to do it. If the Federal Reserve Board or any other power takes upon themselves the obligation and purpose of arbitrarily reducing prices or wages, it is going too far and it is going against the interests of the people of our Nation.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. May I ask the gentleman how he accounts for small businesses increasing to the extent of 100,000 in the past year?

Mr. PATMAN. That is not unusual at all. You know small businesses go out of existence every night and a lot of new ones come into business the very next day. It depends upon the type of business in which they are engaged. Before World War II normally about 1,000 businesses went out every night and about 1,000 came in the next morning. There are many small businesses and many different types, so it is not unusual for them to increase in that manner.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. EVINS. May I commend the gentleman. It is well known that he is the champion of small business and free enterprise in our country. He has made a splendid statement. He is also coauthor of the Robinson-Patman Act intended to give the small-business man, the small merchant, and the independent operator in this country a fair deal as against monopolistic enterprise. I want to commend the gentleman for the fine statement he has made.

Mr. PATMAN. I thank the gentleman because I know of his interest in this subject and the fine work performed by him on the Federal Trade Commission before coming to Congress.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I should like the gentleman to know that I have watched his work as a member of the Small Business Committee of the House and his frequent championing of the cause of small business in this House for the past 6 years. He has rendered, in my opinion, a very valuable service to our American economy. I trust that the Small Business Committee of the House will be re-created and does not meet the fate of a similar committee in another body. I also hope that the gentleman from Texas will become chairman of that committee and continue giving the Members of the House a place to come with their complaints from small business that is being rapidly ruined by the great monopolistic corporate interests of our country. Being a pretty good sized merchant himself he is very familiar with these problems.

Mr. PATMAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I want to add to what previous gentlemen have already said in reference to my colleague's statement today and in reference to his work in the past on behalf of small business. I have the honor to represent a district adjoining that of the gentleman from Texas and I have therefore gone out of my way to observe his work on behalf of small business during the time he has been a Member of Congress. I remember when he first became chairman of the Small Business Committee at the time it was first organized. His people have a right to be truly proud of the fine work he is doing for small business and the small enterprises in his part of east Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. I thank the gentleman very kindly, and I want to express appreciation to him for his splendid cooperation on these small-business matters in the past.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make one other statement with reference to steel, which has resulted in a rather alarming situation. I was called up by a fabricator in the Southwest not so long ago who told me that he could not get steel from his supplier; that his business was over 50 years old, having been founded by his father. It was founded by his father and he and his brothers had kept it going since his father's death. They had been making septic tanks and other kinds of tanks out of steel, and all at once the steel company representative told him, "You cannot get any more." "Why?" "Well, we do not know; you just cannot get it." The following week a new industry sprung up in that town owned by that steel company, getting all the steel it wanted. It was a new industry. That is going on all over the country. That is the reason they want steel scarce so they can control it. We lack at least seven to ten million tons of steel a year now to supply the real domestic demand in this country. But they want it scarce; they want to keep it scarce so that they can control this business.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. The gentleman has brought out a very important point there, and that is known in the trade as the vertical set-up; a set-up of the manufacturer, the distributor, and the retailer of a basic product. That particular vertical type of a set-up was expanded during the war due to the scarce market and due to the fact that the producer of scarce articles had a tremendous advantage, and they could take it and distribute it themselves and get the additional profit. Now, that has not only occurred in the steel industry but it has occurred in the textile industry. Great vertical set-ups occurred there and have monopolized to a great extent some of our important lines of trade from the top to the ultimate consumer, or from the basic producer to the ultimate consumer. That is one of the great dangers the gentleman has pointed out, and it is through the use of undistributed profits that they are able to do that particular thing.

Mr. PATMAN. I thank the gentleman.

MONOPOLISTIC AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES

(Thursday, November 18, 1948, House of Representatives, Subcommittee No. 2 of the Select Committee on Small Business, Washington, D. C.)

The subcommittee met in room 129, Old House Office Building, at 9:30 a. m., the Honorable William H. Stevenson, presiding.

Present: Representatives William H. Stevenson, R. Walter Riehlman, and Wright Patman.

Also present: Willis J. Ballinger, economic counsel.

Mr. STEVENSON. The meeting will come to order.

We will have as our first witness Mr. Wendell Berge.

STATEMENT OF WENDELL BERGE, OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BAR

Mr. BERGE. Mr. Chairman, for the record I might say that my name is Wendell Berge. I am practicing law in Washington as a partner in the firm of Posner, Berge, Fox & Arent. I was first appointed to the staff of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice in 1930, served as a member of that staff for about 10 years, and during that period I was alternate member of the Temporary National Economic Committee; and at the beginning of 1941 I was appointed Assistant Attorney General by the President and assigned to head the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice.

In the middle of 1943, August of that year, I was transferred by the Attorney General to head the Antitrust Division, and from August of 1943 until I resigned as of May 1, 1947, I was head of the Antitrust Division.

Mr. Chairman, there is a strong tradition in this country against monopoly. This tradition has been expressed in the Sherman Antitrust Act and numerous other Federal laws, as well as in State legislation. We repeatedly assert our faith in free enterprise. We believe in economic opportunity. We are against regimentation of business. We want businessmen left as free as possible to take risks, decide their business policies, and then to succeed in their ventures or fail according to their abilities and the whims of fortune.

This is the American philosophy. And yet despite the generality of its acceptance, it has not prevented monopoly from gaining ground. Indeed, concentration of economic control in a sense that a few companies together control the major output of an industry is today the standard pattern of American business.

I shall not burden you with statistics on this point. You are familiar with the many studies of economic concentration which have been made in recent years. The accumulated evidence in antitrust investigations, in the volumes of data which have been compiled by this very committee, by the temporary National Economic Committee, and by other congressional committees, reveals the vast extent of monopoly control in many of our largest industries—the metallurgical industry, the chemical industry, the electronics and electrical-equipment field, the production of pharmaceuticals, the manufacture of precision instruments and machines, the distribution of foodstuffs and tobacco, the petroleum industry, and even investment banking with its vast control over money and credit. This is just a sampling of the industries where monopoly controls are dominant, and it by no means exhausts the list.

The war undoubtedly accelerated this trend toward concentration. More than two-thirds of all war contracts went to 100 companies. And the larger companies have shared well in the disposal of surplus plants and property. Since the war numerous corporate mergers have taken place which further emphasize the trend toward concentration and monopoly.

Nearly every political platform of both major parties since the passage of the Sherman Act has demanded its vigorous enforcement. Presidential candidates have almost invariably promised to outdo their rivals in enforcing the law. Even President McKinley, who is generally thought of as one of our more conservative Presidents, was vigorous in his vocal denunciation of monopolies. And, of course, the crusades of Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson are part of our recent well-known history. But notwithstanding this ideological devotion to free enterprise, and our instinctive abhorrence of monopoly, we have done very little in a practical way toward effective antitrust enforcement.

Lack of vigorous enforcement accounts for the Sherman Act's ineffectiveness to stem the rising tide of monopoly control. During a large part of the act's history, enforcement was little more than a token. Only a small staff was possible under the paltry appropriation. Few cases were instituted and no attempt was made to apply the law on a broad front; to make it really effective, really significant as an instrument of economic policy.

Trust-busting policies of President Theodore Roosevelt

We hear a great deal about the trust-busting policies of President Theodore Roosevelt. But even when you survey his 7-year administration you find that relatively few suits were instituted. The fame which he attained as a trust-buster rests largely on several cases—the Northern Securities case, the Packers case, the Standard Oil case, and the Tobacco case.

I do not mean to underestimate the importance of those cases. They were important as landmarks in the judicial interpretation of the law and they were moderately successful, at least temporarily, in attaining economic results within the industries with which they were concerned. But when you consider that these cases were instituted over a 7-year period and that during this very period many of the industrial giants of the future were being formed in other industries which the Department of Justice of that day did not challenge, you cannot reach any other conclusion than that the Sherman Act was not being enforced on a broad front.

And how could it have been? In the Theodore Roosevelt administration the average number of lawyers in active service on antitrust matters was five. Five lawyers cannot do very much in policing against the monopoly practices of the whole industry of America.

In the Wilson administration, when the World War had caused prices to skyrocket, the number of lawyers engaged in this work rose to 18. In the 1920's, when corporate mergers proceeded at a fantastic pace, the number of lawyers engaged in antitrust enforcement did not exceed 25. Not until 1938 were as many as 50 lawyers actually employed in this work and not until 1939 did the professional personnel reach 200 lawyers and a half dozen economists. For almost its whole life the Antitrust Division has been a kind of corporal's guard.

More suits last 10 years than 48 years before

About 10 years ago there occurred something of an awakening as to the significance of the economic concentration that was occurring. The hearings of the Temporary National Economic Committee focused the problem. The Department of Justice adopted a more active policy. Congress appropriated larger funds, and for the first time in history an effort at broad enforcement was made. More antitrust suits have been brought by the Federal Government since 1938 than in the entire preceding 48 years of antitrust history. The war necessarily retarded the momentum of the new policy and hampered its effectiveness. Yet during the last 10 years there has been an increasing awareness of the fact that competition has been rapidly disappearing in many American industries.

But even so, I do not think that the American people or the Congress has been sufficiently aroused of the danger that this growing concentration of economic power presents to capitalism and democracy. The capitalistic system and democratic government developed together and in the long run they can exist only together. The historical development of this truth is interesting, but there is not time to sketch it now except to point out that throughout history wherever despotism has existed the economic life of the people has been organized along noncapitalistic lines. Political freedom has only existed for any length of time in countries having capitalistic economic systems. Webster defines "capitalism" as—"an economic system in which the production and distribution of wealth, the employment and reward of human labor, and the extension, organization, and operation of the system itself are entrusted to and effected by private enterprise and control under competitive conditions."

The alternative to this kind of system is an authoritarian economic system. The evolution of such a system would probably come about, first, by increasing private controls over production, prices, wages, and all other phases of distribution. These controls would gradually be superseded by Government controls, as popular demand would require that the Government take over. If we are going to have a controlled system, in the long run the people would not stand for private control. Control would ultimately be exercised by the Government itself taking over the regulation of monopolies, resulting in complete Government control of the economic life of the people.

I think that no demonstration is needed to this committee that we cannot have an authoritarian economic system without authoritarian government, and the civil and political liberties ultimately vanish when the government assumes direction of all industry.

Mr. BALLINGER. Is it possible to regulate a monopoly—I mean today we hear a good deal that you perhaps could regulate monopoly better than to allow competition to proceed.

Mr. BERGE. I don't think that it is, but I think that if we failed in antitrust enforcement and if the present trend went on, we would probably try it. I think the effort would be futile in that I don't believe that it is possible for government effectively to cope with the economic power that true industrial monopolies would exercise. I think that what would probably occur, and it is perhaps rather bold to undertake to make a prophecy, which I know is purely speculative, but taking a long shot into the future, I would suppose that over a period of years there would be a sort of a blending of Government and private control, with the monopolies in effect controlling the Government.

If you could assume that the techniques of regulation were sufficiently good to bring about a real control of monopoly by the Government, with Government actually in the saddle, it would take a bureaucracy of terrific proportions to do it, but my own guess would be that the gesture would be made without accomplishing real results, and you would really have industrial giants in the saddle both in Government and industry, with the inevitable result of a type of Fascist pattern developed in time.

Mr. BALLINGER. The issue today, then, is not to regulate monopolies, but to restore competition in those industries?

Mr. BERGE. Right; absolutely.

Mr. BALLINGER. Where it should work and can be made to work if we will take certain steps to restore it?

Mr. BERGE. Absolutely; and the theory of the antitrust laws is not to regulate monopoly, but the theory is to keep Government out of the regulation field to the maximum extent possible, leaving the important decisions of production, distribution, price, to businessmen themselves acting competitively.

I do, however, want to say parenthetically at this point, that I recognize the necessity of temporary Government controls in periods of emergency. What I say now does not apply to that problem. When a war, or other economic crisis, is thrust upon us resulting in an extraordinary demand which taxes the productive output of our resources, Government controls are necessary to insure equitable distribution and distribution that promotes the national economic policy. The unusual demands of war production necessitate direction of industrial output and that direction, of course, must come from the Government. You have to limit the volume of goods going into civilian channels and direct them into the wartime channels, and there has to be control in emergency situations like that, as I see it.

Similar temporary Government controls may be necessary from time to time in crises short of war, such as the great industrial depression of the early 1930's, or the unusual demands of a recovery program, such as the European recovery program. Where these governmental programs are necessitated by temporary crisis and not by a monopoly condition, the American people have demonstrated time and again their capacity to submit temporarily to such controls and to remove them when the crisis has passed. This we have proved can be done without any sacrifice of basic civil or political liberties. Nothing that I say today is to be construed as opposition to such emergency measures as may from time to time be required.

But that is quite a different thing from the permanent controls that we would ultimately be forced to adopt if the insidious growth of concentration and monopoly should undermine the vitality of a free enterprise system. If we accept the proposition, which I believe has been amply demonstrated that capitalism in the long run cannot survive except under conditions of free competitive enterprise, then it follows that as that enterprise is progressively eliminated from our sysstem regimentation of business progressively takes over. That regimentation, as I have already stated, may at first be private regimentation, but ultimately it would become Government regimentation.

Economic power ignored

I maintain that, notwithstanding the greater enforcement activity of the last 10 years, we have never broadly applied the Sherman Act to the concentration of economic power in American industry. The tools which have been given the Department of Justice are like slingshots—wholly inadequate as against the Goliaths of American industry. Admitting that the antitrust laws can in some respects be strengthened by legislative action, I do not think that the primary difficulty is with the laws themselves. There are new laws that ought to be passed, such as the Kefauver bill to amend section 7 of the Clayton Act. I also think there is great merit to the civil penalty proposal that has been advanced from time to time, but I do not think the fundamental trouble is in the law itself.

More money needed to enforce

The real reason, in my judgment, why the Sherman Act has not been more effective is that the annual appropriation for its enforcement has never been anywhere near adequate for the accomplishment of effective economic results. A statute such as the Sherman Act is not self-executing. It lives by appropriations. Not until the fiftieth year of the Sherman Act was as much as $1,000,000 appropriated annually for its enforcement. Between 1908 and 1935, the appropriation varied between $100,000 and $300,000 annually. In 1936 the figure was increased to $439,000. In 1939 it had increased to about $800,000; and for the fiscal years of 1940 and 1941, to an all-time high of about $1,300,000.

Between 1943 and 1946 the appropriation ranged, in round numbers, between $1,500,000 and $1,870,000; in 1947 it went up to a little over $2,000,000; in 1948 it went up to $2,400,000; and the current appropriation is about $3,400,000. I think I should have mentioned that in 1942, which apparently was skipped here in the text, the appropriation did reach in round numbers $2,300,000 and then was cut back during the war.

Although there has been some increase in the appropriation in recent years, it should be remembered that enforcement costs are now much higher. Whereas in 1938 it was possible to secure good lawyers at from $3,000 to $5,000 per year, and to get satisfactory law clerks at $1,800 to $2,000 per year, the Government now must pay on the average twice as much for the same type of legal talent. Other enforcement costs are also correspondingly higher. Therefore, the additional funds available for enforcement in the last few years do not accurately measure the additional enforcement effort that has been provided. You will find that the staff today is not much larger in terms of manpower than the prewar staff on a much smaller appropriation. I am informed that the professional staff at present numbers 329 lawyers and economists as against an average of 281 for fiscal year 1942.

As a result of our niggardly policy toward appropriations for antitrust enforcement, the resources available against all violators in 1 year were less than the sums expended by defendants in a single antitrust case. When I was in the Department, the Antitrust Division proceeded against the patent monopoly in the field of glass containers or bottles. That was the now famous Hartford Empire case. There were eight major defendant corporations.

I learned at that time that one of these corporations expended approximately $900,000 in the trial of the case in the district court and an estimated $500,000 more in prosecuting its appeal to the Supreme Court and in the final settlement of the decree. The expenditures of the other seven defendant corporations were not known exactly, but they exceeded a million dollars. These sums should be viewed in the light of the fact that the entire appropriation of the Antitrust Division for the years in which the Hartford Empire case was pending, except for the year 1942, had been less than $2,000,000 per year.

The Government willingly expends millions of dollars annually to conserve the fertility of the soil and on other conservation measures. No one should question the necessity of protecting our basic natural resources. But is it not equally obvious that the fundamental social resource of the American economy—freedom of economic opportunity—merits as much consideration. Neglect in conserving either our physical resources or our free competitive economy can have equally irreparable consequences.

I do not have the figures available but this committee has the means for readily making comparisons between the current appropriations for antitrust enforcement and those for administering other Government agencies. Such comparisons, I am sure, will show that many single agencies dealing only with a restricted field of the American economy, such as the ICC dealing with carriers only, are granted much larger appropriations than are given to the Antitrust Division which must police against uneconomic restraints virtually the whole of American industry.

A striking statement of the problem is found in one of the TNEC monographs entitled "Antitrust in Action" (Monograph No. 16, Antitrust in Action, by Walton Hamilton and Irene Till, p. 24, Government Printing Office, 1940), from which I quote the following:

"A brief comparison of antitrust with the metropolitan police is suggestive. As $1,325,000 is being used to police industry, break up restraints, enforce competition throughout the United States, a sum around $60,000,000 is spent to preserve peace and order within New York City alone. The Antitrust Division now has 200 attorneys";—this was written about 1940 I believe—"the police force of New York City runs to an aggregate of 20,000 persons. An analog between unlikes must not be pushed too far; but, niceties aside, here is evidence of basic weakness in giving effect to the Sherman Act."

How large an appropriation is needed annually for antitrust enforcement? It is difficult to answer this question in the abstract. I think it should be progressively increased each year until we begin to be satisfied with the results. I suspect that the job requires ultimately an annual appropriation of somewhere between $10,000,000 and $15,000,000. But as one who for several years was charged with the responsibility for antitrust enforcement, I realize that it would not be practical to grant such an increase all at once. The recruiting of qualified lawyers and economists, training them for their work, and organizing them into effective operating units requires planning and careful administration, and it cannot be done overnight. The present head of the Antitrust Division can best tell what are the immediate needs. I should suppose that the amount should be increased substantially each succeeding year until a point is reached where Congress believes the results are adequate.

What is the criterion of adequacy in antitrust enforcement? Today when our criminal laws are violated we have reasonable confidence that in most cases the violators will be apprehended and punished. Our criminal administration is not perfect by any means but we do have the confidence that on the whole our police forces, investigative agencies, and prosecuting attorneys are on top of their job. In the usual case persons who commit fraud or engage in other commercial crimes are apprehended and tried in courts of law. And the same can be said as to crimes of violence.

When the time comes that businessmen recognize the generality of antitrust enforcement to the extent that they refrain from entering into conspiracies, combinations, and agreements in restraint of trade, we will know that the Antitrust Division is attaining the potency that the job requires. When our monopoly-controlled industries have been deconcentrated to a point where new business organizations can form and enter the competitive picture without bucking artificially imposed barriers, we will know that the Sherman Act has been made effective. Technology must be freed from monopoly control. Monopoly control over basic materials, necessary for use in fabricating industries, must be terminated so that small business can get ready access to such materials. We should not seek to prevent efficient operating units from enjoying the advantage that comes from sheer efficiency; but we should deprive large corporate aggregations of any advantage that comes from artificial restraints of trade or from the power to exclude competitors from the market.

Government should seek two objectives

I should say that the Government ought to seek two general objectives under the antitrust laws:

1. It should attack by divestiture or dissolution actions those corporate structures which in and of themselves have attained the power to exclude competitors from the market. Effective legal actions of this type must be grounded upon thorough economic research and a full comprehension of the various ramifications of the industry involved. The preparation and trial of such suits takes a great deal of time and manpower, but the objective must be accomplished in many of our industries if independent enterprise is to have any future chances of survival. Successful preparation of such cases requires a competent staff of economists and experts as well as lawyers—men with specialized experience and knowledge of the particular industries under scrutiny.

2. It—that is, the Government—should provide a broader enforcement against conspiracies and agreements among nominal competitors to fix prices, limit production, and otherwise to refuse the public the benefits of real competition. This type of enforcement requires a large organization and many field offices throughout the country. It requires getting down to restraints which often operate only on a local level. A small-business man may be eliminated from the market in his community by the combination of local competitors with manufacturers or wholesalers to monopolize the distribution of a product locally. To the small-business man who is being squeezed out in such a process, the enforcement of the Sherman Act is extremely important, even though his operations may be infinitesimal in relation to the national picture. The point is that the accumulation of thousands of such restraints on the local level throughout the country has in the aggregate tremendous economic significance. Sporadic enforcement on behalf of small business accomplishes very little except for the few beneficiaries in particular cases. I know that the files of the Antitrust Division abound with complaints, many of which are meritorious, that the Division has never been able adequately to investigate. Investigation in many of these would reveal glaring violations of law which should be prosecuted. Moreover, many small-business men lack the resources to employ counsel or make a trip to Washington to present their complaints. A widespread system of field offices would help. The Antitrust Division has some field offices, but not enough.

There is a good deal of cynical discussion about the ineffectiveness of the antitrust laws. I have always felt that it was out of order to dismiss the Sherman Act as unenforcible before enforcement has been given a fair trial. It may be anomolous to say that enforcement has not had a fair trial when the law has been on the books for 58 years, but, in my judgment, that is the fact.

And no one within my knowledge has yet produced a workable alternative to the enforcement of the Sherman Act. The consequences to capitalism and democracy of doing nothing at all about the problem, I have already discussed. If the antitrust laws are not the proper approach, then what is? Self-regulation by industry is out. It is simply a gloss for monopoly control. The Government cannot escape its responsibility. If that responsibility is not to be exercised through the antitrust laws, then it would have to be performed through bureaucratic regulation of industry by boards or commissions. Without laboring the point, I want to say that I believe that a system of such regulation for all industry would be abhorrent to the American people, and furthermore, I do not think it would work. Effective regulation of industry by a board or a commission to prevent monopoly and restraint of trade would require a bureaucracy that would dwarf anything that we have ever contemplated. It probably would not work, and if it did it would be a menace to freedom.

So I come back to the basic proposition that the premises of the antitrust laws are sound. They contemplate that the vast area of American industry shall be free from bureaucratic regulation, but shall be subject to the prohibitions of the law against restraints of trade and monopolization. So long as business does not offend these prohibitions, it has freedom of choice in making the important decisions regarding production and distribution practices and policies. We must make the antitrust laws work if we are to escape the alternatives—which are socially, economically, and politically undesirable. The answer is to be found in strong, undeviating congressional demand and support for a vigorous antitrust enforcement policy.

Mr. RIEHLMAN. Have you any questions?

Mr. BALLINGER. Mr. Berge, have you any idea how much it costs the Government in a big suit? You were speaking about the Hartford Empire case. They spent millions and the suit is very expensive for the Government. I have heard Mr. Wooden say that the FTC would take at least $150,000 of their limited appropriation to even go after one big concern.

Mr. BERGE. Yes; well, of course, there isn't any cost accounting or cost allocation system operating in a division like antitrust where you could accurately measure that, because one man may be devoting his time to several different cases, and it is possible, therefore, to have some doubling up. However, I would certainly say that the unit costs, if there were a cost allocation system in effect, I am sure it is a very safe statement to make that the costs for the Government are very much less than the costs that private industry pays to defend the suits. Just take two examples that come to me from memory. The so-called Socony Vacuum or the Madison Oil case up in Wisconsin. That trial lasted a long time, several months, as I recall. I think the Antitrust Division had not more than five lawyers up there, sometimes probably less, men whose salaries ranged from at that time the top was $7,500 down to maybe $3,000; perhaps not more in annual salaries involved in that case than $35,000 or $40,000; men living on a per diem of $5 or $6 a day; so, it would relatively not count up to very much as against 65 defense counsel who were present. I am not in private practice, and I don't want to cast any aspersions upon the profession or its capacity to pull in good fees, but it is a safe general situation that the counsel for the various oil companies concerned, operating, of course, in a free market for professional services, which is quite proper, were very well paid for their services. And you can make similar comparisons down the line.

The Aluminum case. It was expensive in the sense that it ran several years, but the man in charge of that case was earning $7,500, and there were not more than, well, there was a large staff on that case for a Government case. I think there were perhaps 10 or a dozen men on that case, but there again the over-all cost of it might have run, well, this is just a shot in the dark, possibly $100,000. The case went over several years.

The conclusion that you draw from that is that antitrust enforcement is more expensive per case than the average criminal case, of course, because the economic data is complex and it requires long study and analysis, and it requires the type of men who have pretty deep grasp of problems. On the average, I think a good antitrust lawyer deserves a higher salary than any of the lawyers in Government service whose work is of a more routine character. To prosecute large suits against large combinations for divestiture or dissolution takes a relatively large staff, large in the sense of 3 to 6 or 9 lawyers, and considerable time. Maybe a year or two to a case.

On the other hand, in comparison with the savings to consumers that come out of these various cases and the long-range support that it gives to our private enterprise system, I don't think the cost is high, and it certainly is not high in comparison with what private industry pays to defend such cases.

Mr. RIEHLMAN. Have you any questions?

Mr. PATMAN. Your statement is a very fine one, Mr. Berge, and I appreciate it. I want to read carefully the part that I did not have the opportunity to hear before I came in. I wonder if you had given consideration to the basing point.

Mr. BERGE. When I was in the Department, when I was head of the Division, we instituted a suit against the cement industry which in many respects paralleled the Federal Trade Commission's action. I have no hesitancy in saying that insofar as the basing point system is carried out by agreement among competitiors, it is clearly illegal and should be, that is, if a particular company sells on a delivered price basis because its competitors are doing so, and it has agreed with them that it would be part of the system, that is a clear price fixing in my judgment.

As to what constitutes proof that they are doing that is something else, but I don't think there can be any question but what the Federal Trade Commission's findings in that respect are amply supported by the evidence according to the rules or proof of conspiracy that have been long accepted.

If a company doing business, say, in Washington in quoting prices for delivery in Washington, adds freight from New York because that is the basing point, and it has agreed with its competitors directly or indirectly that it would do so, that is price fixing just as much as anything else.

When you get into the Robinson-Patman Act phase of that case, it presents a little more complex problem, and I have not made the kind of study of it that would warrant my declaring myself with any deep conviction. The court, as you of course know, the committee knows, found that even the individual absorption of freight or utilization of such of system where it resulted in the quoting of different prices to customers was a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act.

All I can say is this: I have heard a great deal of discussion on that point. I attended the American Bar Association meeting and heard some very carefully considered papers in the section on corporation banking and mercantile law. They were all critical of the result that was reached in the decision. They were read by lawyers who were representing companies that had reason to complain of the result, who were, no doubt, quite conscientiously speaking as advocates of the point of view of their clients.

It did raise a question in my mind about this one point: Whether an absolute—and I want to reserve judgment because I have not recently read the opinion with this in mind—if the opinion has the effect of absolutely outlawing the individual absorption of freight to meet competition, I can see that in some instances it might have an effect of strengthening monopoly controls in local areas rather than promoting competition. A simple illustration: If you can't absorb freight to meet competition, it might bar you from some local market and tend to strengthen the monopoly position of the person doing business in the local market.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not a fact that the Government has never attempted either through the Department of Justice or the Federal Trade Commission to prosecute any person, firm or corporation on the basing point unless there was collusion or conspiracy?

Mr. BERGE. That is right.

Mr. PATMAN. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BERGE. That is right.

Mr. PATMAN. And you do not know of any person in the Government now, or will probably be in the future, who would attempt to prosecute anybody?

Mr. BERGE. No.

Mr. PATMAN. Unless there was collusion or conspiracy?

Mr. BERGE. I think that probably in that respect it is a tempest in a teapot, and that the question is not one—well, I think there is undue agitation about it, because I cannot conceive the Federal Trade Commission prosecuting an individual for meeting his competitor's prices, and I am sure that under the Sherman Act there would be no basis for it. Of course, the Department of Justice has no jurisdiction except in the presence of a combination or conspiracy or monopolization, so they would not have any interest in it anyhow.

The only theoretical question would be if the FTC enforcing the Robinson-Patman Act should decide to proceed against an individual. As a practical matter, I can't conceive of them doing it; and these corporation lawyers who are greatly concerned about it seem to put their concern on the theoretical basis that the language of the Supreme Court's opinion is susceptible to the interpretation that the individual use of the utilization freight absorption techniques is illegal, and, therefore, they can't advise their clients it is safe to do it unless the law is changed.

I, frankly, have not followed the thought entirely through but my instinctive reaction at this point is that we should not now enact any legislation to, in effect, overrule that decision, but at least give the thing a few years' try and see if that creates the confusion in business that they say it does. I think that while there might be room for intellectual argument and discussion on the point, I cannot feel that at present there is any real crisis that requires all of this agitation and hullabaloo. I would like to see the status quo preserved and see business operate for a few years under this decision and see whether the Robinson-Patman Act as applied to this industry is going to create confusion that they complain of. I doubt that it will.

Mr. PATMAN. I am apprehensive that some of them, not all of them, but a few of the more selfish ones, are taking advantage of this opportunity to try to use this decision as a springboard for the purpose of weakening or destroying our antitrust laws. I am just like you: I do not see where they have anything on earth to fear as long as there is no collusion or conspiracy.

Of course, we have to be careful in the House about speaking about Members of the other body. That is, on the floor, you know; but I notice where the distinguished and prominent member of the other party has said that he wants a law that will permit the absorption of any or all freights so long as conspiracy or collusion is not involved. Well, there is nothing to fight over. It is only where collusion or conspiracy, one or the other, is involved that any prosecution takes place. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BERGE. Right.

Mr. PATMAN. And I cannot conceive of any officer with any department of the Government or any United States district attorney ever, under any circumstances or conditions, proceeding against any person on the basing point unless there is collusion or conspiracy or used for the purpose of destroying a competitor or an unfair trade practice or to create a monopoly.

Mr. BERGE. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. I suspect we better add those in there, too.

No need for legislation on basing point

Mr. BERGE. Yes. I think that you are quite right about it, and I do not believe now that there is any need for legislation. I was very much concerned about the operation of the basing point system through collusion, any evidence that we had when I was head of the Division that moved me to recommend the institution of our cement case—of course, the Department cement case did not have any concern with the Robinson-Patman Act, and it was not involved in it. That was an additional point that only the Federal Trade Commission was concerned with. We felt that as the basing point system was operating, it was clearly a conspiracy and agreement in restraint of trade and that the evidence was sufficient to sustain that position.

Unwitting tearing down of antitrust laws

It has been so held in the Federal Trade Commission case. I have not kept wholly up to date on the progress of the Department's case since I left, but I think that is the problem, and I am concerned about any attempts to whittle down by seemingly plausible legislation the enforcement of the application of the Sherman Act, carving out exemptions here, there and elsewhere, and I can see that there is danger that the result of this inquiry now that is going on into the operation of the basing point system on the Capehart committee could result in an unwitting tearing down of the Sherman Act.

Mr. PATMAN. I notice out of the large number of volunteers to help the committee and whose names were listed in the newspapers, a large number of them were directly connected with the steel and the cement industries that are vitally affected in the decisions.

Mr. BERGE. Well, those are two of the principal industries that had operated under that system.

Mr. PATMAN. Now, the steel industry, I mean U. S. Steel, owns cement factories, cement mills, too, do they not?

Mr. BALLINGER. Owns the largest cement company in the world.

Mr. PATMAN. So evidently the tie-in there between the two.

You recall for the last 15 years or longer that the cement companies have made identical bids, and I understand while Mr. Ickes was Secretary of the Interior that when he was asking for bids on huge amounts of cement and they had all come in exactly the same down to one-hundredth of a cent, that he was so irritated about it that he adopted the policy of accepting the bid of the one the greatest distance away from where it was to be delivered. Did you know that?

Mr. BERGE. No I was not aware of that. That is very interesting.

Mr. PATMAN. I suspect, though, that they had a way of handling that.

That is all.

Mr. BALLINGER. Thank you very much, Mr. Berge, for coming.

Mr. BERGE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] is recognized for 15 minutes.

STEADY LONG RANGE AIRCRAFT PROGRAM ESSENTIAL TO KEEP SKILLED WORKERS AND TO MAINTAIN PRODUCTION EFFICIENCY

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, there have been many statements and speeches made by Members of the Congress on the subject of air power. Most of such remarks have been made by members of the special House-Senate Aviation Policy Board or by members of appropriate committees. Much of the content of these statements has been with special regard to the defense aspects of the size of the Air Force Department and the air arm of the Navy. I do not qualify as an expert in the field of advising Congress as to how many groups the Air Force Department needs nor the size of the Navy's air arm, although I have been a supporter of the air power programs advanced by those Members of Congress, both Republicans and Democrats, who do qualify as experts in this field.

I have supported the movements to create for America an overwhelmingly superior air arm because I feel as most of you do, as indicated by past votes of this body, that air power is our first line of defense and also will continue to be our foremost offensive weapon.

But there is another and a special phase of this problem that I wish to bring to the attention of Congress today.

This problem is best dramatized by the fact that in the past week or two one aircraft manufacturer alone, the North American Co., has had to lay off over 2,600 employees. Those employees are residents of the Los Angeles area, a part of which I serve as Representative. Those craftsmen have skills that do not come easily and they are skills that are a vital national asset in these times of uncertainty.

The wanton, seemingly unthinking dissipation of our Nation's aircraft worker skills could very well contribute greatly to a national disaster if it is allowed to continue.

As you probably are aware, the loss of these skills results from the recent cutbacks in airplane production orders by the Air Force, which in turn is brought about by proposed budget cuts in airplane procurement and the resulting disruption of the 5-year air power plan adopted by Congress during its last session.

In addition to the loss of skills that is involved, there is an economic loss of $18,000,000 in annual pay roll in Los Angeles County and a loss of $3,000,000 in subcontracts with about 600 subcontracting firms, most of which are located in southern California.

These cut-backs and the lay-offs of thousands of aircraft workers bring up the whole problem of sound planning in our air-power program and the absolute necessity of achieving some kind of steadiness in the procurement of aircraft.

Steadiness is needed not only to avoid the costly and perhaps disastrous dissipation of aircraft worker skills, but also to provide more units of airplanes for less cost to the Government and its taxpayers, and to properly maintain aircraft manufacturing facilities in a state of readiness so that they can be vastly expanded when and if needed.

I do not plead here that any certain size air force department be maintained or that any certain size Navy air arm be put into being. There are others in this House whose job it is to recommend to us on such matters, and whose committee assignment and personal experience better qualify them to judge the claims of the various defense departments.

My plea is that Congress stick to its decisions as to what size that air arm should be with at least some degree of consistency. I had thought we made our decision last year when we made the down payment on a 70-group air force and a 14,500-airplane Navy. But this year we are presented with a budget which calls for a 48-group air force and about a 7,500-airplane Navy.

Therefore it is obvious that a long-range planning policy or policy of steadiness in aircraft procurement does not exist in any real or practical way. Instead, we are in effect operating under a short range, hit or miss, feast or famine policy that is uncertain, costly, and inefficient, and under which the aircraft industry and aircraft worker skills cannot hope to remain strong and able to perform their basic functions in any national security program.

The contributions of a long-term, carefully planned, steady program of aircraft procurement to our national security are many and of the highest importance.

In the first place a long-term steady program is essential to the defense of this country. According to the studies made by the President's Finletter Commission and the Congressional Air Policy Board, it is only by such a program that we can be assured of keeping our air striking arms fully modern, up to date, and able to repel and then successfully attack any aggressor. The last war taught the truth of the adage that a second-best air force is worse than none, and that an air force that is not fully modern will always be second best.

Moreover, without adherence to a carefully planned long-term program our air striking arms will not have a sufficient quantity of modern equipment on hand to discharge their roles and missions in the national defense. The experience of the last two decades teaches all too graphically that hit-or-miss procurement programing, with procurement funds being expanded one year and then contracted the next, jeopardizes the very survival of a healthy aircraft industry. It is also true that without a healthy industry capable of rapid expansion in an emergency, our air forces will not be able to get the modern planes they need, in the quantities required, on time.

The important point here is that we as a Nation cannot cut back from a 70-group program one year to a 48-group program the next year without paying a tremendous financial penalty and without paying a tremendous penalty in the lessening of our production ability. Conversely, and more important, we cannot appropriate and plan for a 48-group program this year and then next year expect to be able to quickly expand to a 70-group program, when it is very possible that a 70-group program, or even a 150-group program, might be badly needed.

In the second place, a long-term program that assures continuity and steadiness in planning and production is the most important means of effecting economy in our national defense expenditures. Studies presented to the Finletter Commission and the Congressional Aviation Policy Board indicate that savings up to as much as 25 percent could be effected in aircraft procurement if our Nation will establish and then adhere to a long-term plan. Such savings alone would justify us in the Congress insisting that the National Defense Establishment develop and stay with a steady 5-year plan of aircraft procurement.

In the third place, it is extremely important that a long-term program be established and maintained if the industry is to be able to maintain a crew of skilled workers and trained engineers. Such a crew is the foundation on which the industry would expand in case of emergency and these workers must be retained and kept in the practice of production or the whole aircraft industry will disappear as a national asset—an asset absolutely vital in the event of an international emergency.

Twenty-six hundred skilled workers and trained engineers already have been lost to our national-defense program, and unless we insist that the program of aircraft procurement remains steady from here on out, there may be tens of thousands more laid off in my State of California and in many other States, too.

For it has been demonstrated time and time again that engineers and skilled workers such as we have in the aircraft industry simply will not remain—indeed, they cannot afford to remain in an industry subject to drastic fluctuations in production and jobs—fluctuations that must result when aircraft procurement is expanded and then cut back suddenly without regard to a plan or a program.

The interest of aircraft workers in a long-term program is exemplified by the concern expressed in the subject by the workers' representatives. The International Association of Machinists, which holds the bargaining contracts at many of the aircraft plants, has long actively campaigned for a long-term, steady program. The activities in this field by this great union are summarized in the report submitted to the national convention held by the union last fall in Grand Rapids. I would like to quote three paragraphs from that report:

The recommendations of the President's Committee and the Congressional Committee strongly affirm our country's need for the prompt adoption of a program designed to give us air supremacy by 1953. That length of time is required to complete the over-all program based on an air force composed of 70 groups. Emphasis is placed on the need for a new aprpoach to aircraft production. Rather than Congress providing funds on a year-to-year basis, a long-range program is urged which will give adequate consideration to all phases of the problem.

In studying this industry, it is both interesting and reassuring to find that our organization, at the 1945 convention unanimously adopted a report prepared and submitted by the aircraft committee. This report, in substance called for a well-planned and full program for world peace, and for legislation that would enable the air forces to proceed with a postwar program embodying full experimental and continuing technological improvements in the latest type aircraft to keep this Nation always ahead in air power and to assure continued peace.

As we assemble here in this 1948 convention we are faced with the seriousness of our Nation's problems. Supremacy in the air is the first requirement for maintaining peace, and of meeting an attack upon the United States, Canada, and Newfoundland by another country. The interests of our countries require building and maintaining not only a strong air force, but one that will give us supremacy in the air at the earliest possible date.

Yet the cut-backs that have been so far announced in contracts held by California aircraft companies show that the warnings issued by the machinists union have been almost completely ignored. The Congress last year voted the funds to start the first year of a 5-year program of aircraft production. During the debates preceding the adoption of this appropriation, Congressman after Congressman of both parties emphasized that the intention was to initiate a long-term program that would provide assurance and steadiness to the air forces, the managers of the aircraft industry, and to the thousands and thousands of skilled craftsmen employed by the industry. The vote on the program was completely nonpartisan and was overwhelmingly carried with only three dissenting votes in the House and two nays in the Senate.

It seems to me most unfortunate, therefore, that not quite one year after Congress acted the 1950 budget is presented proposing to scrap the 5-year program, seemingly with little or no consideration or discussion of its merits and values. Nowhere in the budget do I find any mention of the need for steadiness and continuity in aircraft production and aircraft employment. There is no mention of the findings of the Finletter Commission or the Congressional Board. I regret to say there is no recognition of the dangers of dissipating the asset that is our skilled aircraft worker group.

There can be but one effect, and that is to make the skilled aircraft workers anxious to get out of the industry and to seek employment in other more stable lines not so subject to the vicissitudes of bad Government planning.

Workers in California are very much concerned over these cut-backs and layoffs, and they are wondering if a pattern is being set which will dislodge thousands more of them in the next few months. I believe that aircraft workers in California and elsewhere want to see a 5-year program of aircraft production and procurement continued so as to guarantee our Nation's leadership in the air.

I support their plea. And I strongly urge that this Congress give full consideration to the possible disastrous and very costly effects of short-term planning as represented by the present cutbacks, and that we give full consideration to the good effects that will come from steadiness in our planning for the aircraft manufacturing industry.

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 31, 1949

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we have entered upon a new week with tasks and responsibilities which are far beyond the wisdom of our own finite minds.

Grant that daily we may hold counsel with the God of all wisdom and yield ourselves unreservedly to the discipline and guidance of Thy Spirit.

May we also hear and heed the command which came to Thy servant in the long ago: "Stand thou still a while that I may show thee the word of God."

We pray that Thou wilt create within men and nations those finer feelings and nobler thoughts which are the progenitors of achievement in the building of a better world.

We thank Thee, O God, for the memory of Thy servant who ministered here in spiritual things. His sun went down while it was yet day, only to rise again in heavenly glory. We rejoice in the high and holy privilege that was ours to walk and work with Him for a little while upon this earth.

Hear us in the name of the Christ, our Saviour. Amen.

"Whereas the several States are now able through their own taxing powers to make ample provision for their elementary and secondary schools without Federal aid; and

"Whereas the Federal Government is already burdened with a staggering debt of more than $250,000,000,000, calling for retrenchment if the solvency of the United States is to be preserved: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the members of the Nebraska legislature in sixty-first session assembled:

"1. That Senate file No. 246, or any similar legislation now before the Congress of the United States, be defeated.

"2. That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the clerk of the legislature to the Vice President of the United States as Presiding Officer of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Member of the Congress of the United States from Nebraska."

PARITY PRICES—RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE GEORGIA STATE ASSEMBLY

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Georgia, relating to parity prices, and ask for its reference to the Committee on Agriculture.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule, the resolution will be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Whereas the gross debt of the Government of the United States has increased from about 40 billion to approximately 252 billion dollars during the period of 1939 to 1949; and

Whereas interest must be paid annually and the debt gradually liquidated if the Government is to be saved from insolvency or bankruptcy; and

Whereas it must be self-evident that if we are to avoid lower living standards and if this debt is to be serviced and paid, it must be through the production of new wealth from the natural resources of the United States; and

Whereas the national income of the United States and the gross income of agriculture of this country have each only slightly more than doubled during the same time, and these must bear the chief burden of taxes (directly or indirectly) in maintaining the national solvency; and

Whereas our gross farm income represents about 65 percent in dollar value of our annual production of new wealth and in turn our national income regularly averages approximately seven times the dollar amount of gross farm income; and

Whereas a return to the 1939 price and income levels for farm products would reduce our national income about 50 percent: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the senate and the house of representatives concurring, hereby petitions Congress to pass permanent legislation to maintain a floor of not less than 90 percent of parity on all basic farm crops, to protect such floor prices with commodity loans of like amount and to prescribe such import duties, excise taxes, or quotas on competitive imports as may be needed to maintain these price levels and our national income; be it

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to President Harry S. Truman, Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan, and to Senators and Congressmen from the State of Georgia requesting their cooperation and expressing the appreciation of the general assembly for same.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, a resolution dealing with a number of problems of interest to the Government employees was approved by convention of the Minnesota State Federation of Labor in September. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD.

RESOLUTION AND PETITION RELATING TO BANNING OF YELLOW COLOR FROM OLEOMARGARINE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a resolution which I have received from Mr. Al Stoldt, president of the Wisconsin Swiss and Limburger Cheese Producers' Association, of Monroe, Wis. This resolution expresses very well, I believe, the need for banning the yellow color from oleomargarine in order to prevent fraudulent competition with butter.

Along this very same line I have received a communication from several veterans who are receiving on-the-farm training under the GI bill of rights and who have commented on this same subject. I feel that their views represent true grass-roots sentiments, and I ask that their letter be printed in the RECORD at this point, following the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution and letter were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OLEOMARGARINE

That whereas the principle of protection of the established identification characteristics of the products of the physical and mental labors of its citizens by the United States Government is evidenced by its laws pertaining to trade marks, brands, copyrights, patents, and similar subjects, designed to prevent others from profiting by indiscriminate imitation; and

Whereas the traditional yellow color of butter and the labor of all the dairy farmers who have created and maintained the high standards of the dairy industry are deserving of protection similar to that of other individuals and groups in our great country:

We recommend that if the present Federal tax is removed from oleomargarine, direct and effective Federal legislation be passed which will forbid the sale of any oleomargarine colored yellow in imitation of butter.

The Honorable ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Chamber,

SIR: We, the undersigned, all veterans and students of institutional on-the-farm training and actively engaged in diversified farming, after due consideration of all facts, firmly believe that any change of the present oleo laws would be a death-dealing blow to the entire dairy industry as well as injurious to the welfare of the peoples of the Nation we love.

We believe that butter substitutes spread fraud and deception and should be sold only by their own colors and merits.

We believe that the 10,000,000 people directly gaining their livelihood from the dairy industry are entitled to protection because of their vital contributions to the Nation's diet and health, and to soil conservation. We believe what hurts the dairy industry hurts everyone, either directly or indirectly.

We believe that you, as the representative of America's dairyland, should and will do everything that is humanly possible to protect the interests of the dairy industry and the consuming public. We believe that the present laws should remain.

Very truly yours,

Carl E. Broph, Warren Lammers, Victor D. Last, J. Paul Tempas, Elroy Arndt, John H. Holbrook, Ray E. Richter, Harry Hortink, Irvin Arentsen, Roger Erneise, Howard J. Arentsen, Leonard J. Tauber, Reuben Arentsen, Alfred Verhulst, Homer Melvin, Instructor.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY SOUTH CAROLINA NATIONAL GUARD ASSOCIATION

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, four resolutions adopted by the South Carolina National Guard Association, in conference assembled on January 22, 1949, at Columbia, S. C., relating to the National Guard, a long-range armory construction program, and universal military training.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Armed Services, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution for the preservation of the integrity of the National Guard of the United States

Whereas the National Guard of the United States is the successor to the Organized Militia, which was brought into being by the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas democracy is the basic philosophy of the National Guard system, which is accomplished by keeping our Army close to the people through State control in time of peace; and

Whereas in its dual capacity the National Guard serves the States as a security force in time of peace, and the Nation as combat troops in time of war and by virtue of such dual status giving to the State and Nation the greatest amount of security for the least possible cost; and

Whereas the National Guard has preserved law and order in the several States of the Union on many occasions, and twice has gone to war, fighting with telling effectiveness all over the world and justifying the foresight and wisdom of the framers of the Constitution of the United States by its great contribution to victory in these two World Wars; and

Whereas at this time efforts are being made to destroy the National Guard by removing it from State jurisdiction and combining it with the Organized Reserves, another reserve component of the Army of the United States, to the end that the Army, including all components, will be organized and controlled in Washington; and

Whereas the South Carolina National Guard Association regards these efforts as far reaching in its impact on the political, economic, and military life of our country; and condemns strongly and without any reservation as unwarranted and down-right dangerous any movement designed to effect this radical change in the basic concept of our historic policy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the South Carolina National Guard Association, in conference assembled this 22d day of January 1949, at Columbia, S. C., That the officers of the South Carolina National Guard Association are hereby instructed and directed to do all things which at their discretion they deem wise and necessary:

(a) To prevent the removal of the National Guard from State control,

(b) To prevent the interference in the slightest degree with the full command of the Guard by the Governors of the several States in time of peace,

(c) To prevent any change in the organization of the National Guard which would destroy or affect its integrity as both a State and National force, operating under the plan created by constitutional and statutory law; and be it further

Resolved, That the officers of this Association are directed to inform each Member of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives from South Carolina of this action and that they be fully informed of the background, the policies and purposes of the National Guard of the United States and our determination to see that the National Guard be not destroyed; be it further

Resolved, That the officers of this association are directed to bring this matter to the attention of the South Carolina General Assembly now in session in order that they shall have a full realization of the vital necessity of memorializing Congress, through the medium of a joint resolution, in opposing any attempt to change our present military system.

Resolution condemning that part of the report of the Committee on Civilian Components appointed by the Secretary of Defense recommending the destruction of the National Guard and substituting in lieu thereof a single Federal reserve or militia to be organized under the Army clause of the Constitution

Whereas on or about June 30, 1948, the Committee on Civilian Components that had been appointed by the Secretary of Defense charged with making an impartial study of the civilian components of the armed forces submitted to him its report embodying certain conclusions and recommendations affecting the National Guard, and which report included therein the following conclusions and recommendations:

1. National security required that all services each have one Federal reserve force.

This should be accomplished:

(a) by establishing the reserve forces of the Army under the Army clause of the Constitution.

(b) by similarly establishing the reserve forces of the Air Force under appropriate legal authority;

(c) by incorporating the National Guard and Organized Reserve Corps into the Army reserve under the name of the National Guard of the United States;

(d) by incorporating the Air National Guard and the Air Reserve into the Air Force reserve force under the name of the United States Air Force Reserve.

and in support of which recommendations the Committee on Civilian Components stated that it had arrived at its conclusions concerning the National Guard only after the most careful consideration: Therefore be it

Resolved by the South Carolina National Guard Association in conference assembled this 22d day of January 1949, at Columbia, S. C., That in common with the National Guard Association of the United States and the United States Conference of Governors, it condemns without reservation the report of the Committee on Civilian Components recommending the establishment of a single Federal reserve or militia as un-American and contrary to our concept and philosophy of life and government, and that the proposals made therein are not only ill-advised and illegal, but, if put into effect, would destroy the National Guard which, by the committee's own admission, has performed with effectiveness and brilliancy in two world wars and which has, in the brief space of 2½ years, organized more than 4,795 units with a strength of more than 320,000, contained in 27 divisions, other highly essential tactical units including Antiaircraft and Air Force units, all of which are a part of the M-day force and essential to the defense of the Nation; be it further

Resolved, That the South Carolina National Guard Association direct its officers to call upon and to write the Members of the Congress from South Carolina to resist this effort to centralize the military power in the hands of a few in Washington and to destroy the National Guard as it is today organized, and to forward each Member of the Congress from South Carolina a copy of this resolution; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded the Governor of South Carolina and to the National Guard Association of the United States.

Resolution calling on the Congress to establish a system of universal military training

Whereas the National Guard Association of the United States, the Reserve Officers'

Association, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Disabled War Veterans, and numerous other veteran organizations, the Department of National Defense have consistently advocated the establishment of a system of universal military training to the end that there would not only be assured the greatest possible degree of national security, but that such responsibility would be recognized as a common duty, to be shared equally by all; and

Whereas the President's Advisory Committee on Universal Military Training, after 6 months of exhaustive study and examination into the broad field of our national security, and the relation of universal military training to such a problem, has brought out a report of great significance on the subject, in which they urge universal military training as an integral part of our national security establishment on a par with Central Intelligence, research, and development, industrial mobilization, and an adequate Regular Establishment; and

Whereas this exhaustive study and the unanimous recommendations of the committee, in which it finds there is justified fully such a program in the interest and necessity of our national security, and emphasizes the urgency of such a measure, places great responsibility on the people and the Congress for passage of such an act as the fairest, most equitable, and most economical means of effecting national security; and

Whereas the mission of the National Guard as an effective component of the M-day force in being would be vitally promoted, the efficiency of the National Guard raised to a high level of training and its strength maintained so that the National Guard would be able to successfully meet its M-day missions; and

Whereas the findings of the President's Advisory Committee on Universal Military Training were fundamentally and substantially those principles long advocated by the organizations above-mentioned: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the South Carolina National Guard Association, in conference assembled this 22d day of January 1949, at Columbia, S. C., That we endorse the stand supporting the principle of universal military training as advocated by the above-mentioned organizations and the President's Advisory Committee on Universal Military Training and directs its officers to so inform each Member of the Congress from South Carolina and that they be urged to exert every effort in securing the enactment of legislation designed to accomplish this purpose; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Governor of the State of South Carolina and to the National Guard Association of the United States.

Resolution providing for the enactment of legislation incident to a long-range armory-construction program

Whereas the reorganization of the National Guard has progressed to the extent that at the present time we have in the federally recognized units throughout the Nation a total membership of more than 320,000; and

Whereas many States have a strength which now exceeds the armory facilities available. If the National Guard is to continue forward along the lines contemplated, it is imperative that the Congress provide, in line with approved War Department policies, the necessary legislation and the funds with which to construct new armories, and to add additions to present armories for the proper housing of contemplated strength of the National Guard: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the South Carolina National Guard Association in conference assembled this 22d day of January 1949 at Columbia, S. C., That the officers of this association are hereby directed to write to each Member of the Congress from South Carolina of the urgent need for legislation to provide for a long-range armory-construction program and to forward each Member a copy of this resolution; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Governor of South Carolina and to the National Guard Association of the United States.

THE FARM PROGRAM—LETTER FROM MASSACHUSETTS FARM BUREAU FEDERATION

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD, following my statement, a letter from the Massachusetts Farm Bureau Federation, embodying two resolutions passed on November 18. I consider this letter so important that I ask that it be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Waltham, Mass., January 26, 1949.

Senator LEVERETT SALTONSTALL,
United States Senate,

DEAR SENATOR SALTONSTALL: There are two things which the Farm Bureau Federation in Massachusetts would particularly like at this time to call to your attention. These are resolutions adopted at our annual meeting November 18, 1948, at Worcester which read as follows:

"Whereas we realize that we cannot keep asking for favors and services without surrendering more and more of our independence: Be it resolved, That we favor legislation that will work toward the decentralization of both power and authority from Washington to the end that we shall have more and not less independence as the years go by."

"Whereas we realize the importance to the over-all national economy of some system of farm support prices until world conditions become more stable: Be it resolved, That we favor the continuance of a price support program at figures low enough to discourage overproduction and high enough to insure some protection in the event of price collapse."

The Farm Bureau in Massachusetts represents some 7,000 farm families in every county of the State. Our policy is arrived at by discussions of issues first within the county and second in State meetings. I think that the two resolutions are particularly important at this time when the question of a farm price support program is again becoming very controversial. Last year the farmers here favored the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1948 and we see no reason at this time to change our position. We hope that you will do everything in your power to prevent a return to a rigid 90 percent of parity support price and to continue the act which would insure to agriculture a floor that would keep it from going into bankruptcy through its own high production and yet would not be high enough to call for governmental regimentation in our field.

We believe that this is no less important to our own economy than to agriculture. It seems hardly necessary to remind you of the severe attack farmers have been under in the metropolitan papers in Massachusetts because of such programs as the potato support program. Our organization wants no repetition of that sort of thing. Under a flexible support program such as is contained in the 1948 act, I am very sure that we will have provided against abuses and return the farmers to a freer market in most years.

Respectfully yours,

CARLETON I. PICKETT,

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill in which I believe the Senate will be interested. The bill provides for comprehensive planning, for site acquisition in and outside of the District of Columbia, and for the design of Federal building projects outside of the District of Columbia, to authorize the transfer of jurisdiction over certain lands between certain departments and agencies of the United States; and to provide certain additional authority needed in connection with the construction, management, and operation of Federal public buildings, and for other purposes.

The bill (S. 714) to provide for comprehensive planning, for site acquisition in and outside of the District of Columbia and for the design of Federal building projects outside of the District of Columbia, to authorize the transfer of jurisdiction over certain lands between certain departments and agencies of the United States; and to provide certain additional authority needed in connection with the construction, management, and operation of Federal public buildings, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. CHAVEZ, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Works.

ALASKA RAILROAD

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill providing for the construction of a railroad to Alaska, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill, together with a letter I have received from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, and a letter from the Assistant Director of the Bureau of the Budget to Mr. Willis T. Batcheller, executive vice president and chief engineer of the Canadian Alaska Railway Co., be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill and letters will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 740) providing for the construction of a railroad connecting the existing railroad system serving the United States and Canada and terminating at Prince George, British Columbia, Canada, with the railroad system serving Alaska and terminating at Fairbanks, Alaska, introduced by Mr. MAGNUSON (for himself and Mr. BUTLER), was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized, through such channels as he may deem proper, to negotiate and enter into an agreement or agreements with the Dominion of Canada for the survey, location, and construction of a railroad of standard gage to connect the existing railroad system now terminating at Prince George, British Columbia, Canada, with the railroad system serving the Territory of Alaska and terminating at Fairbanks, Alaska, together with all branches and extensions of said new railroad system, and in cooperation with the Government of the Dominion of Canada, to cause a survey or surveys to be made to determine the most practicable route for such railroad, as well as construction plans and specifications and estimates of the probable cost thereof, and plans for financing its construction, operation, and maintenance.

SEC. 2. The President is further authorized to designate such agency or agencies of the United States as he may select to carry on, either directly or under contract, the work of survey and location of the route for such railroad and, upon the completion of negotiations and the execution of the agreement or agreements herein authorized, to proceed either directly or under contract, with the construction, operation, and maintenance thereof after such route shall have been determined and approved by the President. Such agency or agencies are authorized and directed to cooperate directly with like agencies or officials to be designated by the Government of the Dominion of Canada for the purpose of coordinating and expediting the work of such survey, location, construction, operation, and maintenance thereof.

SEC. 3. The work of all existing agencies which may be engaged in like or affiliated activities in the Territory of Alaska and in western Canada shall hereafter be correlated with the work contemplated under this act.

SEC. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sum as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the President, through such agency or agencies as he may designate, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act: Provided, That no money shall be appropriated under this act for the construction of any part of such railroad outside of the Territory of Alaska until the agreement or agreements provided for in the first section of this act have been entered into.

The letters presented by Mr. MAGNUSON were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington 25, D. C., December 13, 1948.

Hon. WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
Washington 25, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MAGNUSON: This will acknowledge your letter of November 24 to Mr. Webb concerning the construction of an Alaska railroad.

I believe you will be interested in the attached copy of my lettter of June 22 to Mr. Willis T. Batcheller on the subject. So far as I am aware, the fundamentals of the situation have not changed since that letter was written.

In the interval we have received the views of Secretaries of the Army, Navy, Air Force, and State concerning House Concurrent Resolutions 214, 215, and 216 which are similar in many respects to your bill, S. 2867.

The Department of State has pointed out that negotiations with the Canadian Government on this matter would be likely to succeed only if they were based on specific and concrete proposals and that passage of these resolutions would be premature until the national defense and economic priorities of the project had been determined by the agencies concerned and until definite proposals were available concerning financing construction, operation, and related problems.

The Navy Department has indicated that it is sympathetic "to all measures which will facilitate the movement of freight and passengers to and from Alaska," but has pointed out that the Navy would not expect to be able to use the railroad transportation to any great extent in supplying their installations in the area.

The Army Department has indicated concern for the inadequacy of existing transportation facilities serving Alaska, but has pointed out that from a military point of view, a railroad to Alaska, "while being a valuable asset, is not sufficiently vital at this time to the defense of that territory or the continental United States to entitle it to priority over other projects. It cannot, therefore, be considered a military necessity. The Department of the Army is hopeful that the future development of the natural resources of Alaska will either warrant, for economic reasons, Government support of the proposed railroad project or will interest private enterprise therein."

The views of the Department of the Air Force are essentially similar to those of the Navy.

It is evident that the agencies primarily concerned with national defense and security do not advocate assignment of a high priority to the Alaska Railroad project. However, we feel that continuing study of economic prospects and development of the kinds of data suggested by the Department of State as requisite to negotiations with the Canadian Government are fully justified.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES E. WEBB,
Director.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, D. C., June 22, 1948.

Mr. WILLIS T. BATCHELLER,
Executive Vice President and Chief Engineer Canadian Alaska Railway Co.,
Mayflower Hotel,

DEAR MR. BATCHELLER: Your letter of May 15, 1948, in the interest of a Canadian-

Alaskan Railway project, addressed to the President, has been referred to me for consideration and acknowledgment.

The very real interest of the President in the affairs of Alaska has been freshly evidenced by his special message to the Congress under date of May 21, 1948. In this message, of which a copy is enclosed, President Truman, after urging early enactment of legislation granting statehood to the Territory, discussed at some length the transportation needs of Alaska and outlined several specific steps toward meeting these needs. As you will note the message also recommends other important measures with respect to housing, community facilities, land settlement, agricultural and industrial development.

In connection with the broad studies of Alaskan needs and opportunities which are now under way in various Federal agencies the idea of a Canadian-Alaskan Railway has been advanced and given such consideration as present circumstances appear to warrant. It is quite obvious, however, that this project, involving as it would governmental action by both Canada and the United States, requires much more study and analysis before any formal proposal could be placed before legislative bodies for their consideration. It is also felt that from the standpoint of immediate needs the measures proposed in the enclosed message represent the highest priorities and that their attainment would have important bearing upon final judgment as to the need, value, and economic merit of the railway project.

Your interest in this proposal and in the general acceleration of Alaskan development is much appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK PACE, Jr.,
Assistant Director.

ISSUANCE OF STAMP COMMEMORATING LIFE OF EMILY P. BISSELL

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution to authorize the issuance of a stamp in commemoration of the life of Emily P. Bissell, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the bill, prepared by me, may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Delaware will be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 45) to authorize the issuance of a stamp in commemoration of the life of Emily P. Bissell, introduced by Mr. FREAR was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

The statement presented by Mr. FREAR was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR FREAR

The contribution made by Emily P. Bissell in the battle against the ravages of tuberculosis can only be adequately measured in terms of human lives—lives saved because of Miss Bissell's notable efforts in promoting the sale of the Christmas seal, under the banner of the National Tuberculosis Society.

From 1907 when she founded the seal in America until her death in March of 1948, this gallant woman led the crusade for her little stamp until the name "Christmas Seal" became unanimous with the words "Fight Tuberculosis." Miss Bissell lived to see the battle against the disease being won—thanks in a large measure to the generosity of the American people who had faith in her idea and who supported her undertaking in ever greater degree.

Miss Emily P. Bissell was born in Wilmington Del., May 31, 1861, and was a native of her State all of her life. Her grandfather, John Bissell, settled in Windsor, Conn. Her father, C. A. Bissell (1829–1899) graduated from Yale in 1850. Her mother, Josephine Wales (1832–1919) was a daughter of John Wales who was born in New Haven, Conn., but later settled in Wilmington, Del. He was a United States Senator. Miss Bissell was educated in Delaware and New York. She attended Miss Charlier's Private School in New York City.

Pioneer work always interested her. She started the west-end reading room in 1889 and it had the first free kindergarten, the first children's playground in Delaware, the first better babies' demonstration, the first boys' brigade (forerunner of the Boy Scouts), and the first free gymnasium for boys. In 1913, it began the first Americanization work in Delaware, in its Italian Neighborhood House.

Miss Bissell was instrumental in putting through the first child labor law in Delaware, and served on the first child labor commission. She was one of the organizers of the Children's Bureau, and served on its board until her death.

She was the first president of the Consumer's League, and aided the passage of the first law limiting the hours of women in industry. At the request of the Hon. George Gray, she aided him in establishing the Delaware Chapter of the American Red Cross in 1904, and was its secretary for many years.

She was a director of the Associated Charities for many years, and was chairman of Social Service in the Federation of Women's Clubs for 8 years.

In connection with all these responsibilities came the raising of large amounts of money. The Christmas stamp of 1907 was not a momentary idea—it was the result of a great deal of practical experience, in starting and carrying forward new experiments in Delaware, applied to this Government idea from Denmark. The Story of the American Christmas Seal, written by Miss Bissell herself was published in booklet form in 1946 by the National Tuberculosis Association.

Miss Bissell's contribution to mankind has been acknowledged nationally and internationally. In December of 1936, she was honored in Wilmington, Del., at a Christmas seal birthday luncheon attended by 400 friends and health workers representing many sections of the country and several foreign countries. In December of 1937, the city of Wilmington, the State of Delaware, and two nations, again paid honor to Miss Bissell when the Tuberculosis Associations of the United States unveiled a bronze tablet which was placed on the main building of the Brandywine Sanatorium, Marshallton, Del., with this legend: "This tablet commemorates the founding of the first Christmas seal in this country by Miss Emily P. Bissell, of Wilmington, Del., December, 1907. From small beginnings, the annual Christmas seal sale has financed the development of the organized fight against tuberculosis in every State, resulting in saving thousands of lives. Erected by the Tuberculosis Associations of the United States, December 1937."

In 1942, Miss Bissell was awarded the Trudeau Medal of the National Tuberculosis Association, the first nonprofessional worker to receive this reward since it was inaugurated in 1925. The award is given annually to the individual who, in the judgment of the association, has made the most meritorious contribution to the cause, prevention, or treatment of tuberculosis.

In 1945, Miss Bissell was honored by the Delaware State Board of Health when the main building at Brandywine Sanatorium was dedicated in her honor, hereafter to be known as the Emily P. Bissell Building. Miss Bissell is the author of many poems, which have been collected in a volume entitled, "Happiness and Other Verses."

Miss Bissell was president of the Delaware Anti-Tuberculosis Society from 1909, until her death.

She was an honorary member of the National Tuberculosis Association, and in 1946 was again honored when her portrait appeared on each sheet of Christmas seals. Miss Bissell passed away on March 8, 1948.

EXTENSION OF TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES FROM PRINCE GEORGE, BRITISH COLUMBIA, CANADA, TO ALASKA

Mr. MAGNUSON (for himself and Mr. BUTLER) submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 13), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the development of the Territory of Alaska, its lands and resources, is essential to the economic welfare and security of the United States; and

Whereas such development is necessary to the defense of the Territory; and

Whereas adequate transportation facilities within the Territory of Alaska and between the Territory of Alaska and the United States are essential to the development of the resources and the defense of Alaska; and

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President is requested to commence negotiations with the Canadian Government with a view toward determining the desirability of extending the existing railroad system now terminating at Prince George, British Columbia, Canada, to the Territory of Alaska, and to cause surveys to be made and plans, specifications, and cost estimates be prepared covering the construction of a railroad connecting the existing railroad system terminating at Fairbanks, Alaska, with a railroad system extended from Prince George, British Columbia, Canada, to the Territory of Alaska; also including studies with the Canadian Government for reciprocal tariff and immigration arrangements in connection with this project.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby created a joint congressional committee to be composed of five Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President of the Senate and five Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The joint committee shall select a chairman from among its members. SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to make a full and complete study and investigation of all matters connected with the election of the President and Vice President from the time of the nomination of the President and Vice President, through the time of their election and the time of their inauguration until the termination of their respective terms of office, with the purpose of making the law certain as to the Presidential election and succession. ## INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN MATTERS PERTAINING TO THE UNITED STATES MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. MAGNUSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 45), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

Whereas the United States merchant marine, allied industries, and trained personnel therein are indispensable to national security; and

Whereas the reduction in ships flying the American flag is proceeding at an alarming rate; and

Whereas this places in jeopardy the employment of men skilled in repairing, constructing, and manning the United States merchant marine and creates the risk that skills and facilities will be unavailable in the event of national emergency; and

Whereas geographical dispersion and utilization of repair and construction facilities and the skilled manpower related thereto is essential to national defense and economy; and

Whereas the transfer of American ships and those of other countries to flags of certain nations jeopardizes world-wide stability of the maritime industry; undermines seafarers' and safety-at-sea standards; and deprives the United States Treasury of substantial tax revenues; and

Whereas revival of ship construction and operation in occupied countries is of legitimate interest to the United States merchant marine; and

Whereas participation of American bottoms in transporting United States financed cargoes has been threatened: First by failure of certain Government agencies to give proper consideration to the importance of maintaining an adequate United States merchant marine, and second by actual or proposed use, directly or indirectly, of funds and scarce materials to build or acquire ships for foreign nations; and

Whereas United States tramp operators confront problems which may require Government assistance for solution; and

Whereas there exists in and among the several agencies having jurisdiction over maritime matters, serious problems of coordination and efficiency; and

Whereas Congress, agencies affected, and industry have found no long-range solution to the problems of water transportation to Alaska, and coastwise and intercoastal shipping; and

Whereas shipping operations of the Armed Services bear a definite relationship to the present and future welfare of the United States merchant marine; and

Whereas there is urgent need for congressional study and expression of policy on these and related problems: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete study and investigation of all such matters pertaining to the merchant marine as it may deem proper.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report its findings, together with its recommendations for such legislation as it may deem advisable, to the Senate at the earliest practicable date but not later than March 15, 1950.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable, and is authorized, with the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned, to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of any of the departments or agencies of the Government. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

PRINTING OF REPORT ON UPPER COLORADO RIVER BASIN COMPACT (S. DOC. NO. 8)

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, there was transmitted to the Vice President today by Harry W. Bashore, the representative of the United States in the negotiations for a compact among the upper Basin States of the Colorado River, a report which includes the compact, which was entered into on the 11th of October 1948, and the recommendations of Mr. Bashore.

I ask unanimous consent that these documents may be printed as a Senate document for the use of Members of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CHANGES OF REFERENCES

Mr TYDINGS. Mr. President, Senate Joint Resolution 32, a joint resolution to authorize the cancellation and release of an agreement dated December 31, 1923, entered into between the port of Seattle and the United States of America, represented by the United States Shipping Board acting through the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, was referred to the Armed Services Committee. However, the same joint resolution was considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at the last session of the Congress. It is true that a report from the War Department was required, to give the committee full information about it; but the purport of the joint resolution shows clearly that it should have been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Therefore, as chairman of the Armed Services Committee, to which the joint resolution was referred, I ask that the Armed Services Committee be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the change of reference will be made as requested.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, Senate bill 529, to promote maximum employment, business opportunities, and careers in a free competitive economy, a bill introduced at the last session of the Congress, and again introduced in the Eighty-first Congress, was referred to the Finance Committee. Upon examination, it appears that the bill should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the Finance Committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Banking and Currency Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, on Thursday last, Senate bill 672, to amend part VIII of Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a) so as to provide entitlement to educational benefits for those individuals who enlisted or reenlisted prior to October 6, 1945, on a same basis as for those individuals who enlisted or reenlisted within 1 year after October 6, 1945, was referred to the Finance Committee. I am advised that that was an inadvertence, and that the jurisdiction of the bill is in the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, on the day upon which the President delivered his first message to the Congress in this session, and following that message, I introduced Senate Bill 152, to retrocede to the State of New Mexico exclusive jurisdiction held by the United States over lands within the boundaries of the Los Alamos (New Mexico) project of the United States Atomic Energy Commission, a bill which was prepared at the request of the Atomic Energy Commision for the purpose of retroceding certain lands in New Mexico back to the jurisdiction of the State of New Mexico.

I had done some work on it last summer, at the request of the Atomic Energy Commission; and I have in my possession the various departmental approvals of that particular bill. I introduced that bill as Senate bill 152.

Thereafter the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] introduced a bill known as Senate bill 210. It is identical in verbiage with the bill I had previously introduced. I have no pride of authorship or concern about the measure, except that it be passed in orderly fashion.

But at the last meeting of the Senate, I noticed that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] requested the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], to whose committee both bills were referred, to consent to the discharge of his committee from the further consideration of Senate bill 210, and the reference of that bill to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. The Senator from Wyoming, with his usual courtesy, and realizing that the bill did relate to atomic energy, said he would give such consent; and the requested change of reference was made, with the result that the bill now has been referred to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

However, no mention was made of the previous bill, Senate bill 152, which I had introduced. As I have said, Senate bill 210 is a comma-for-comma, sentence-for-sentence duplicate. Of course, as to that I make no complaint. I merely wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming, in whose committee now reposes my bill, Senate bill 152, whether he would have any objection to having a similar change of reference made in the case of Senate bill 152, which is identical with Senate bill 210. In that case Senate bill 152 would be referred, likewise, to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. I believe that should be done because I believe that at least duplicate pieces of proposed legislation of that kind and on that subject are properly lodged with the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

I have not seen the Senator from Wyoming before, today, and this is my first opportunity to present the matter to him.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in giving the consent of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs to the change of reference of Senate bill 210 at the last meeting of the Senate, let me say that it was the purpose and thought of the chairman of the committee that all bills dealing with that subject should be referred to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. I am sure I speak for the entire committee in saying that we have no objection to the requested change of reference of the Senator's bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is that the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Yes, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs will be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 152, and it will be referred to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY OF GEN. DOUGLAS MACARTHUR

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, January 26, 1949, was the anniversary date of the birth of General of the Army Douglas MacArthur. On that date a testimonial dinner in commemoration of the event was given at Hotel Astor in New York City. At that time a scroll was prepared and ordered sent to the general. The general was advised in advance of the dinner, and sent a communication to those participating in the dinner.

I ask to have printed in the body of the RECORD at this point a copy of the scroll, and likewise a copy of the reply sent by General MacArthur to the Veterans' and Citizens' Committee.

There being no objection, the scroll and the reply from General MacArthur were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TO GENERAL OF THE ARMY DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, SUPREME COMMANDER FOR THE ALLIED POWERS, TOKYO, JAPAN

Who chose to remain at his post of command in Tokyo rather than return to his homeland to receive a hero's acclaim from a grateful people and place himself immediately available for the nomination to the Presidency of the United States of America.

His sincere and forthright reply to invitations to return to Washington to testify on serious conditions in the Far East is best exemplified by his own words, "It would be peculiarly repugnant to me to have it felt that I sought to capitalize to political advantage the public good will which might manifest itself upon my first return to American soil following the victory which countless gallant Americans, living and dead, contributed by unfailing and invincible devotion." That document typifies the honor, statesmanship, and discipline which has always guided his distinguished career. It was a tribute to the memory of and the spiritual devotion he felt for the men of his command who made the supreme sacrifice.

His fearless leadership against the encroachment of communism and other subversive manifestations in the preservation of the true American way of life will ever remain a matchless contribution to the welfare of our country.

To Americans, and to history, the name of Douglas MacArthur will ever be an inspiration for love of God, duty, honor, country.

Presented by the Veterans and Citizens Committee on the birthday anniversary of General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, at Hotel Astor, New York, N. Y., January 26, 1949.

Following radiogram received from Gen. Douglas MacArthur to the Veterans and Citizens Committee birthday dinner in his honor on January 26, at the Astor Hotel, New York City:

"I am profoundly moved by this gathering of fellow Americans on the anniversary of my birth in welcome manifestation of the strength of their friendship, the invincibility of their trust, and the enduring quality of this support. I accept it in humble gratitude, not only as a mark of valued friendship, but more particularly as a reconsecration of tried and true Americans resolutely to advance the American cause. For that cause is imperiled by enemies both at home and abroad who, by misrepresentation and deceit, sow the seeds of distrust, contention, and discord as the means to undermine the public confidence in the integrity of American effort, American efficiency, and American personnel. In the resulting confusion they hope to destroy the traditional unity of the American people. If our cause in the preservation and advance of human liberty is to prevail, complete unity of purpose is essential, with the maximum support of which Americans are capable—a deep spiritual support such as prompted Stephen Decatur so eloquently to pledge himself to 'My country, right or wrong, my country.'

"Standing on this outpost far from America's shores, with the vast continent of Asia aflame before the Communist sweep to engulf civilization's gains in the liberty and the dignity of man, and charged to preserve here an impenetrable western frontier for the forces of human freedom, the trust and support of my fellow Americans is, indeed, the source of my greatest strength.

"While unable to estimate the military potentialities because of the many yet undetermined and imponderable factors beyond my assessment or control, I can and do give complete assurance that with the firm spiritual support of the American people, this frontier outpost of democratic freedom, regardless of the tide of conflict upon the adjacent mainland, will not yield to political or social pressure, communism, or any other concept of enslavement. For the Japanese people are now blessed with a way of life, patterned after our own concepts of freedom and justice, which provides them with moral values which communism can neither offer nor supply; they will not fail to cherish and do all in their power to preserve it. This is well known to the local sponsors of the Communist doctrine who, despite complete freedom to propagate their cause under the protection of those very concepts they seek to destroy, have failed to gain converts among Japan's responsible citizenry. It is even better known to their mentors in Moscow who, in an increasing sense of frustration at being unable to gain an ideological foothold, are coming to see goblins in every nook and cranny of this well-ordered and peaceful land.

"To all my friends and comrades in arms present, I send my cordial and affectionate greetings, and I gratefully acknowledge their rededication of American support to this distant American effort. Without that support, the American cause here could not prosper—this frontier of freedom could not survive.

"MACARTHUR."

PRICE AID TO DAIRYMEN—ARTICLE BY ALFRED D. STEDMAN

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article published in the St. Paul Pioneer Press, and written by Alfred D. Stedman, be incorporated in the body of the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks on the question.

The dairy farmers throughout the United States who are dependent upon an outlet for their dairy products through the process of manufacture—such as butter, powdered milk, and powdered buttermilk—are meeting with ruinous low prices, and unless something is done immediately the young farmers will go broke, more especially the veterans who have commenced farming in the past few years, assuming great financial obligations in the purchase of machinery, livestock, and feed. With milk prices decreasing as they are, they will not be able to meet their obligations, and that means financial foreclosure and disaster for the veteran who has gone into the business of farming in the past 3 years. The article by Mr. Stedman covers the question so clearly that I should like to have Senators, as well as Members of the other legislative body, read it. For that reason I ask that it be incorporated in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOLONS JOIN DAIRYMEN IN PRICE AID DEMAND

(By Alfred D. Stedman)

Four hundred harassed dairymen were joined by Minnesota legislators here Thursday in demanding that the Truman administration make good its pledge that the farmers will not again be the first victims of a postwar depression.

Mincing no words, they called on two top dairy officials of the United States Department of Agriculture to assure immediate, emergency Government action to stop the present slump in milk prices and save co-op and other dairy plants having backs to the wall.

The two administration spokesmen, Philip Nelson and Don S. Anderson, were told bluntly by dairymen and legislators assembled in the Capitol Office Building auditorium that the farm vote in the dairy States swung the recent Presidential election against Dewey and to Truman.

The farmers voted in expectation that the Truman administration pledges of price protection would be fulfilled. Now, when the dairymen are being forced up against it, is the time to make those pledges good, the Federal officials were told.

STEPS OUTLINED

Responding to those demands, the two officials who are, respectively, Director of the Production and Marketing Administration's Dairy Branch and Chief of its Manufactured Dairy Products Section, told the mass meeting these three things:

First. They believe the Secretary of Agriculture has discretionary power to establish a separate parity for manufacturing milk, as distinct from bottled milk, as the dairymen demanded.

Second. That an official search now is on in Washington for funds to finance Government buying to support country milk prices up to 90 percent of that new parity. (A support price of $3.11 a hundredweight as against recent bottom prices between $2.50 and $2.70 was discussed.)

Third. That the way for dairymen to have permanent price supports is to get together on a long-time program which provides funds and disposal outlets through school lunches, stamp plan, or otherwise for Government purchased products.

THIRD POINT IS HOT

Clearly calling for new dairy legislation, this third point was a "zinger." It plunged dairymen into the coming congressional scramble over amendments to the Aiken-Hope Act, one of whose provisions strikes out three little words allowing Government dairy price supports at more than 90 percent of parity in a pinch. In fact, official warnings were sounded to dairy, wheat, and other farmers that the administration likes room for flexibility of any Government farm price supports, is against inflexible and mandatory supports, and also is against piling up huge surpluses in the Federal hands without having definite, legal methods of disposing of those surpluses.

Three Minnesota farm legislative leaders, State Senators Ancher Nelsen and Oscar A. Swenson, and Representative August B. Mueller, served notice that the Minnesota Legislature will take a hand in the budding fight for a better deal for dairymen.

TOO MANY PLEDGES

Also it was Senator Swensen, Fred Rohe, president of the Twin City Milk Producers Association, and Frank Stone, Land O'Lakes Creameries executive, who laid the Truman administration's political responsibilities to Midwest dairymen on the line.

"The situation is especially embarrassing to me," said Rohe, "because I happen to be a Democrat. We Democrats made altogether too many pledges before election. Now we've got to keep them. If this price drop had come before November 2 this whole thing could have been settled in 10 minutes."

"If these same farmers that elected Truman are going to repeat 4 years from now, there will have to be a dairy program to help them," warned Senator Swenson.

From W. A. Gordon, editor of the Dairy Record, and Harry R. Leonard, chairman of the board of the American Dry Milk Institute, both of St. Paul, who called the meeting, came these warnings:

The recent drop of farm prices for milk from $4.50 a hundredweight to $2.50 or $2.70 means that dairymen are face to face with a critical situation. A basic trouble, they said, is that the Government's present method of averaging in $6 eastern bottled milk prices with the Midwestern $2.50 prices and interpreting the average to mean that farmers are getting more than parity is a severe discrimination against this region. It is like averaging up a barefooted man with a man wearing $20 shoes and saying both are well shod on an average of $10 shoes.

NEED HELP QUICK

The Government help must be immediate if it is to save many dairies in Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Iowa, the meeting heard. But with quick action a good recovery is possible, dairymen said, because of basically sound demand for dairy products.

The situation now is such that Midwest dairymen have been heavily selling their cows to eastern dairymen. These in turn have been expanding production in response to the much higher prices there, and putting their surpluses into manufactured dairy products in competition with Midwestern dairymen who sold them cows in the first place. This is a process which is complicated by recent increases in railroad freight rates, and by steadily rising costs of production on farms and in creameries, cheese factories, and milk powder plants that buy milk for manufacturing.

BUTTER AID NOT ENOUGH

Speakers brought out that the Government practically forced dairymen to go heavily into powder production to meet war needs. So supporting powdered milk prices is the Government's moral responsibility now, dairymen declared. Just supporting butter prices alone won't do the protection job, they declared.

The frankness and unfailing good humor with which the two Federal officials answered questions made a hit with the crowd of very earnest dairy farmers and manufacturing plant executives.

Arrangements are being made now to carry the dairymen's case to Washington with representations at the White House, the Department of Agriculture, and Congress.

VOLUNTARY AGREEMENTS IN INDUSTRY, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further concurrent and other resolutions or routine matters, the morning business is concluded, and, under the unanimous-consent order of Thursday last, the Chair lays before the Senate as the unfinished business Senate bill 547, which the clerk will state by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 547) to continue through September 30, 1949, certain authority conferred on the President by section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, regarding voluntary agreements and plans.

FREE ENTRY OF CERTAIN ARTICLES INTO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me in order that I may submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, without displacing the unfinished business, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 88) be taken up for present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the joint resolution for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 88) extending the time for free entry of certain articles imported to promote international good will, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 2 of the joint resolution of June 25, 1948 (Public Law 769, 80th Cong.), entitled "Joint resolution permitting the free entry of certain articles imported to promote international good will, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by striking out "December 31, 1948" and by inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1949."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement. The resolution was passed in the Eightieth Congress. It merely permits the entry into the United States of the so-called Thank-You Train sent by the people and the Government of France. The joint resolution is simply to provide an extension of time. The train having been delayed, it is now expected to arrive in New York over the week end. The joint resolution was passed by the House unanimously, and was recommended by the Senate Finance Committee. I ask unanimous consent that it may be taken up at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia requests unanimous consent, without displacing the unfinished business, that the Senate take up for immediate consideration the joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Reserving the right to object, let me ask the Senator from Georgia, in the event the joint resolution extends the time for entry, do the goods ultimately have to go out of the country again, or do they remain here permanently?

Mr. GEORGE. They remain permanently in the country, I may say to the Senator. The goods that come in are to be sent to the capitals of the several States, there sold, and the proceeds devoted to charity. Certain railroad cars in which the goods are loaded will remain in the country, but they cannot be disposed of to any commercial enterprise, and, under the terms of the resolution or of the report accompanying it, they are to be turned over to veteran organizations in the several States.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Thank You Train is merely a good-will train; we have already passed one resolution, and the train was delayed. The present joint resolution is to extend the time?

Mr. GEORGE. That is all there is to the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF STORM-STRICKEN AREAS IN THE WEST

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. Without displacing the unfinished business, I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, it was necessary for me to be absent from the Senate at the last session when the bill was introduced and passed for the relief of the storm-stricken areas in the West. I want to add my hearty approval to the action which was taken by the Senate, and that which no doubt will be taken also by the House today. In the meantime, the President himself has come to the rescue of the people in the stricken area. I, for one, want to express my heartfelt approval of the action which was taken by the President in the issuance of a letter dated January 29, addressed to the Secretary of Defense, which I think should be made a part of the RECORD at this time. I may state that the storm damage still continues and is pronounced by everyone in that area who is familiar with it to be by far the most destructive storm the western country has ever experienced. There is no way to estimate the damage, but now that, through the orders of the President, the Army and all other Federal agencies are cooperating on the job, we feel that everything is being done that can be done to afford relief.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 29, 1949.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF DEFENSE.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The disaster caused by the unprecedented storms in several of the Western States makes it imperative that the full resources of the Federal Government be mobilized immediately to furnish such emergency assistance as can be made available through the various Federal agencies.

Acting through any department, agency, officer, or employee of the National Military Establishment as you may designate, you are authorized and directed to utilize such resources of the National Military Establishment as are appropriate to the relief of this area, based on requests by the Federal Works Administrator, whom I have designated as the coordinator of Federal relief activities in the disaster area.

The departments of the National Military Establishment are authorized and directed to expend such sums as are required for this purpose from any funds now available to those departments, including funds available for river and harbor and flood-control works of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, without regard for existing apportionments. I will transmit to the Congress a request for such appropriations as may be considered necessary to replace such funds of the departments of the National Military Establishment as may be used for this purpose.

A copy of this letter is being furnished to General Fleming for his information and guidance.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

IRVINE L. LENROOT

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. Without displacing the unfinished business, I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. I am asking the distinguished Senator to yield for a few moments, in order that I may say a few words in relation to the passing of a former distinguished Member of this body, Senator Lenroot; and I ask that the unfinished business be not displaced.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin, for the purpose stated?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I rise to pay a few words of deep respect in tribute to a great former member of this body, the Honorable Irvine L. Lenroot, who has gone on ahead in the journey which all mortals must take. As Nancy Byrd Turner says—

Death is only an old door
Set in a garden wall.
On gentle hinges it gives, at dusk,
When the thrushes call.
Along the lintel are green leaves,
Beyond, the light lies still.
Very willing and weary feet
Go over that sill.
There is nothing to trouble any heart,
Nothing to hurt at all.
Death is only a quiet door
In an old wall.

The story of Irvine Lenroot, United States Senator from Wisconsin, who started as a grocery clerk in Superior, is truly an American saga. Irvine Lenroot, who would have been 80 years old today, could look back to a great career in the service of his State and his Nation.

I first knew Irvine Lenroot back home, 40 years ago, and in all my contacts with him during these years, I always felt a deep sense of pride that the Badger State had reared so great and self-made a statesman.

The late Senator Lenroot served in the Wisconsin State Assembly from 1900 to 1906; in the House of Representatives from 1908 to 1918; and in the United States Senate from 1918 to 1926. These are, however, the bare facts which can hardly tell the memorable saga of Irvine Lenroot's contributions to his Nation. The newspapers have recorded the closeness with which he approached nomination to the Vice Presidency in 1920. They have recorded how former Senator Lenroot, who served for many years with distinction as an able captain to the Honorable Robert M. La Follette, Sr., later broke with Senator La Follette over the war issue, and thereafter parted the ways with this other great son of Wisconsin. Theirs was a difference of opinion as wide and as deep as had been their friendship and harmony previously. But although they did part in political ways, these two great sons of Wisconsin showed how men can differ with one another in opinion, but still have a great respect for one another in the true American way.

Members of the Senate knew Irvine Lenroot as a splendid debater and able parliamentarian, a diligent worker, an independent in voting. It was he who led the successful fight for American adherence to the World Court. It was he who championed the St. Lawrence seaway for many years in this body.

Later, following his retirement from the Senate, he served with distinction in the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

Mark Twain said, in answer to the question of how to take this life:

How to take life? Take it just as though it was—as it is—an earnest, vital, and important affair. Take it as though you were born for the task of performing a merry part of it—as though the world awaited your coming. Take it as though it were a grand opportunity to do and achieve, to carry forward great and good schemes, to help and cheer a suffering, weary, and, it may be, a heartbroken world.

Mr. President, I had the privilege of visiting with former Senator and later Judge Lenroot in his home in this city on a number of occasions. I knew him from the days when he was a young, vital, dynamic character in Wisconsin, working for those concepts which have since been called progressivism. As the years came and passed, he mellowed, and saw that in this world men with differing ideas could be right. His philosophy of life was of the kind we need in order to guide our own steps as we progress.

So it might be said of him:

Let us not think of our departed dead
As caught and cumbered in these graves of earth;
But think of death as of another birth.
As a new freedom for the wings outspread.

A new adventure waiting on ahead,
As a new joy of more ethereal mirth,
As a new world with friends of nobler worth,
Where all may taste a more immortal bread.

Senator Lenroot leaves behind him a great record of which his family and his State may be proud. Father of a distinguished daughter, Katharine Lenroot, Director of the Children's Bureau; uncle of another distinguished bearer of the family name, Arthur A. Lenroot, Jr., of Superior, State senator in Madison, Senator Lenroot also leaves behind him a brother, sister, and devoted wife.

Speaking of his passing, the Milwaukee Journal has stated:

In the traditional American sense, Irvine L. Lenroot was a self-made man. Without wealth, powerful friends, or formal education, he fought his way to the State legislature, to the House of Representatives, to the United States Senate, and almost to the Presidency of his country.

Irvine Lenroot was a strong man, an able man, and a friendly man. He was a brilliant debater, and excellent parliamentarian. On occasion he showed a remarkable independence. He rates in the upper bracket of men Wisconsin has sent to the United States Senate.

The Fond du Lac Commonwealth Reporter has stated:

Mr. Lenroot has long been away from the Wisconsin scene. But he was a native son of the Badger State, which loses one of its really great leaders in his death. * * * The Lenroot family helped to pioneer much of the legislation which has made Wisconsin a leader in the social-security field.

We bid hail and farewell only to his physical presence from this scene because we know that the spirit of devotion to the land to which his father and mother emigrated from Sweden, this spirit of faithfulness and loyalty to the American way of life, to the United States Congress, and to the American institution of government—this spirit of Irvine Lenroot will go on for all time to come.

If I could sing the song within my heart
Of loves immortal, gates of death and birth,
And sleeps and wakings; if I could impart
Some measure of my gladness to the earth,
And men could understand and know it true,
This consciousness that thrills me through and through.

This memory of never-broken being,
This vision seen and yet beyond all seeing,
More joy were mine than since the world began
Because of joy that I could give to man.

If I these sweet assurances could tell
And show how clear and certain is the truth;
If I could bring all souls beneath the spell
Of spirit in its never-ending youth;
If I could give what God to me has given
And prove it as it has been proved to me,
'Twould make the earth seem nearer unto heaven
Than ever it has seemed since Galilee.

And can I not? Will not the power divine
That works in other spirits as in mine
Help me to tell, and then to hear, the story
Until all earth is brightened with its glory?

VOLUNTARY AGREEMENTS IN INDUSTRY, ETC.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 547) to continue through September 30, 1949, certain authority conferred on the President by section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, regarding voluntary agreements and plans.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the Committee on Banking and Currency has considered S. 547, has reported favorably on that bill, and has recommended that the bill pass.

S. 547 would extend through September 30, 1949, section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress. This action provides that the President may consult with representatives of industry, business, and agriculture, with a view to making voluntary agreements providing, among other things, for "priority allocation and inventory control of scarce commodities which basically affect the cost of living or industrial production."

After the approval of such agreements by the Attorney General, the President may request compliance with them and actions taken in compliance with such requests are exempted from the provisions of the antitrust laws and the Federal Trade Commission Act.

The purposes for which these voluntary agreements may be entered into are, as stated in section 1 of Public Law 395—to aid in stabilizing the economy of the United States, to aid in curbing inflationary tendencies, to promote the orderly and equitable distribution of goods and facilities, and to aid in preventing maldistribution of goods and facilities which basically affect the cost of living or industrial production.

The President, under Executive Order 9919, of January 3, 1948, delegated this authority under section 2 of Public Law 395 to the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Director of the Office of Defense Transportation.

The Department of Commerce has had considerable success in formulating and carrying out voluntary plans for the allocation of steel and pig iron for various essential purposes.

At the present time the Department of Commerce has 14 of these voluntary plans in effect, and is about to put into effect 2 more. These plans, and the tonnage of steel or pig iron allocated under them for February 1949, are as follows:

In addition to these plans, the Department of Commerce has under consideration other proposals to set up plans for the allocation of steel to the Economic Cooperation Administration countries and to distressed municipalities needing steel for important public health and welfare needs, and possible additional provisions for housing and for the armed forces. The possibility of additional assistance to increase the production of such scarce materials as aluminum was discussed at the hearing.

While these programs have not by any means solved all the problems arising out of shortages of materials, they have accomplished very desirable results in directing scarce steel and pig iron to uses important to our domestic economy and to our national security.

At the hearing the committee inquired at length into the operations under section 2 of Public Law 395, and the way in which these voluntary plans have been formulated and carried out, with particular reference to the consideration given to small business and the effects on small business.

The testimony revealed that several steps occur in the formulation of these plans.

When the Department of Commerce, either on its own initiative or at the request of a steel-consuming industry, reaches the conclusion that a plan seems appropriate, it calls a general meeting of the consuming industry, to which all members, or a substantial cross section, of the industry are invited. The proposal is discussed generally, and if the sentiment of those present is in favor of the proposal, suggestions are requested from those present as to possible members of an industry advisory committee.

Industry advisory committees are selected by the Secretary of Commerce. The order under which these committees are set up provides that—

The committees are formed of representatives of the minimum number of companies necessary to represent a fair cross section of the industry from the standpoints of (1) large, medium, and small companies; (2) geographical distribution; (3) trade-association membership; and (4) segments of industry (types of products, degree of integration, etc.). In forming industry advisory committees, the Department of Commerce will be governed by the principles of Senate Concurrent Resolution 14 (80th Cong.) and the President's memorandum to heads of executive departments and agencies of December 12, 1947, with respect to the representation of small business on Government committees.

After a voluntary plan has been worked out by the Department of Commerce, in consultation with the industry advisory committee of the consuming industry and the industry advisory committee of the steel-producing industry, a public hearing is held to which the public is invited. Notice of these hearings is given in the Federal Register and by press release. Consideration is given to any changes needed in the light of the public hearing.

The plan is then forwarded to the Department of Justice, for the approval of the Attorney General. Representatives of the Department of Justice are invited to all the meetings, and work closely with the Department of Commerce in the formulation of these plans.

If the Attorney General approves the plan, written requests are made by the Secretary of Commerce for compliance with the plan. The plans, and the requests, are then published in the Federal Register in accordance with the law.

I have here a copy of the Commerce Department order setting up this procedure, which I ask permission to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the close of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, at all stages of the formulation of a plan, at the preliminary general meeting, the meetings of the industry advisory committees, and at the public hearings, full opportunity is given to small business to cooperate in the formulation and approval of the plan.

In the operation of the plan small business is also given a full opportunity to participate. Allocations are made by the Secretary of Commerce, after taking into consideration recommendations of a task committee of the consuming industry; these allocations are based on the capacity of the individual firm and its production plans for the product covered by the program, as well as its past production. An outstanding example of this principle was discussed at the hearing, the warm-air heating industry. In that case some 43 concerns, all small business with little or no historical base, did not apply for any steel at the time the plan was promulgated. The problem was presented to the Steel Products Committee and an additional 2,000 tons of steel a month was made available to these small firms.

I have here a table prepared by the Office of Industry Cooperation of the Department of Commerce showing the number of large and small firms receiving steel under 10 of the programs, showing the amount of steel going to large and small firms, and also showing the percentage of the amount requested which was allocated to the large and medium firms on the one hand and to the small firms on the other hand.

In terms of number of participants in these programs small business firms range from 28 percent, in the case of freight cars, to 86 percent in the case of the steel house program. In the case of six programs, 75 percent or more of the participating firms are classified as small business.

The tonnage going to small firms varies from 7 percent in the case of the anthracite program to 29 percent in the case of pig iron for housing products.

In the case of three programs small business received a larger proportion of the amount requested than did large or medium firms. In the case of four programs small firms received a somewhat smaller proportion of what they requested than did large or medium firms. In the case of three other programs the proportion was virtually the same.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question, or would he rather wait until the end of his statement?

Mr. MAYBANK. I should rather wait until I have concluded, if the Senator does not mind.

Mr. President, I ask that the table to which I have just been referring also be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the committee heard two witnesses, representatives of small firms receiving steel under the tank and oil-field production-equipment program, who testified as to the benefits they had received under the program, as well as the benefits of the program to the oil industry.

It appeared, therefore, that while the plans are designed to carry out programs essential to the domestic economy and the national security rather than specifically to assist small business as such, full consideration is being given to small business in the formulation of these voluntary plans and in their operation, and that many small firms have been benefited greatly by the operations of the program.

The voluntary agreements promulgated by the Department of Commerce provide, in accordance with the law, that they terminate on or before March 1, 1949. In accordance with a ruling of the Attorney General, however, provisions have been made for a wind-up period of 6 months under section 2 (f) of the law. This wind-up period is of limited effectiveness, as no amendments or modifications can be made during that period. This would reduce substantially the benefits of the existing plans. Furthermore, no new plans can be entered into under this provision, and it would be impossible even to consider the pending proposals for the Economic Cooperation Administration for municipal programs and for increased assistance for housing and the armed services.

I am advised that a broader stabilization program will be submitted to the Congress. Pending consideration of this broader program, the proposed temporary extension of section 2 of Public Law 395 should be promptly enacted in order that the important benefits of the voluntary program to the domestic economy, the national security, and the foreign pclicy of the United States may be preserved.

TITLE 15—COMMERCE

SUBTITLE A—OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

Part 11—Organization and functions of the Office of the Secretary

VOLUNTARY AGREEMENTS

SEC. 11.11. Voluntary agreements under Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress—(a) Consultation with industry and the public under section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress: Under section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, the President is authorized to consult representatives of business and agriculture with a view to making certain voluntary agreements and to approve and request compliance with such agreements. Executive Order 9919 (13 F. R. 59) delegates this authority to various officials, including the Secretary of Commerce. This Executive order also provides that consultation with industry may be through representative industry advisory committees and that an opportunity shall be given to industry, labor, and the public generally to present their views with reference to a proposed agreement or plan.

(b) Organization of industry advisory committees: As the purpose of industry advisory committees formed under this section is to give advice to the Department of Commerce on proposed voluntary agreements and plans affecting an industry, their members are selected so as to assure that the advice so obtained will represent the viewpoint of all parts of the industry. The committees are formed of representatives of the minimum number of companies necessary to represent a fair cross section of the industry from the standpoints of (1) large, medium, and small companies; (2) geographical distribution; (3) trade-association membership; and (4) segments in the industry (types of products, degree of integration, etc.). In forming industry advisory committees, the Department of Commerce will be governed by the principles of Senate Concurrent Resolution 14 (80th Cong.), and the President's memorandum to heads of executive departments and agencies of December 12, 1947, with respect to the representation of small business on Government committees (appendix A attached). To promote free discussion, different levels of production and distribution are generally represented by separate industry advisory committees consisting of customers and suppliers. The membership of industry advisory committees is checked with compliance proceedings of the Department of Commerce in accordance with the policy of suspending or removing from the committee members who are found in violation of Department of Commerce orders and regulations. Members of committees pay their own expenses and are entitled to no compensation for their services as committee members.

(c) Functions of industry advisory committees: The functions of an industry advisory committee formed by the Department of Commerce under this section are to furnish information, to give advice, and to make recommendations to the Department of Commerce, at regular committee meetings, on problems affecting the industry either in connection with the formulation of a proposed voluntary agreement or plan or in connection with an existing voluntary agreement or plan. In order to eliminate any question as to the propriety of the activities of these industry advisory committees under the antitrust laws, the activities of these committees are limited strictly to those specified (see the Attorney General's letter of January 29, 1948; appendix B). No other activities by these industry advisory committees or by their members are sponsored or authorized by the Department of Commerce under this section. These industry advisory committees are not authorized to determine policies for the industry nor are they authorized to compel or coerce any person to enter into any voluntary agreement or plan or to compel or coerce any person to comply with any request or order made by the Department of Commerce.

(d) Industry advisory committee meetings: Industry advisory committee meetings will be called by the Department of Commerce when a voluntary agreement or plan is under consideration or at any other time when the advice of an affected industry is appropriate in connection with a voluntary agreement or plan. The agenda of the meeting will be prepared by the Department of Commerce. Representatives of interested agencies of the Government will be invited by the Department of Commerce. If a member of a committee is unable to attend a meeting, he may suggest the name of another representative of the same organization to serve as his alternate for that meeting, and as a general rule the Department of Commerce will invite the suggested alternate to that meeting. A representative of the Department of Commerce will preside at every committee meeting. The Department of Commerce will keep minutes of each meeting, and will make summaries available to members of the committee, and the industry and the trade press, and will issue press releases concerning the meeting.

(e) Hearings on proposed agreements and plans: In order to carry out the requirement of Executive Order 9919 that an opportunity shall be given to industry, labor, and the public generally to present their views with respect to a proposed agreement or plan, the Department of Commerce has adopted the policy of holding a public hearing at which such views may be presented. Notice of such a hearing will be given by publication in the Federal Register, by press release, and by any other method considered appropriate by the Department of Commerce. The notice will include a statement of the time, place, and nature of the hearing, and either the substance of the proposed plan or agreement or a description of the subjects and issues involved. The notice will ordinarily provide that persons who desire to participate in the hearing must file in advance a written notice of appearance and that persons failing to file such written notice in advance will not be heard unless good cause is shown. The scope, time, or place of a hearing for which notice has been given may be changed when necessary. Reasonable notice will be given of the hearing and of any changes. Ordinarily the time set will not be less than 10 days nor more than 15 days from the publication in the Federal Register of the notice of hearing. The hearing will be conducted by an official of the Department of Commerce as hearing officer. The hearing officer will regulate the course of the hearing, including the order in which statements may be presented and the length of time to be allowed for making oral statements. He may adjourn or continue the hearing to a later date or different place and will receive written statements and memoranda at the hearing or within such time after the hearing as he may determine. Such statements and memoranda should be filed in triplicate. The hearing will be informal in nature. A stenographic transcript or summary will be made of the proceedings. After the close of the hearing, the hearing officer will prepare and file a report with the Secretary's office summarizing the statements made at the hearing and will file with his report all written statements presented in connection with the hearing.

(f) Requests for compliance with voluntary agreements and plans: When a proposed voluntary agreement or plan under section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, has been formulated by the Department of Commerce with the advice of the appropriate industry advisory committee or committees and after a public hearing has been held, the Secretary of Commerce may forward his favorable recommendation of the proposed agreement or plan to the Attorney General for the latter's approval, together with the statement of facts required by Executive Order 9919. If the Attorney General approves the agreement or plan the Secretary of Commerce, upon giving his final approval, will make written request to carry out and comply with the agreement or plan to each concern which is to take action under it. The agreement or plan and the requests will be published in the Federal Register and forwarded to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives by the Attorney General in accordance with Public Law 395. (Pub. Law 395, 80th Cong., Executive Order 9919, Jan. 3, 1948, 13 F. R. 59.)

MEMORANDUM TO THE HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS AND ESTABLISHMENTS

Senate Concurrent Resolution 14 (80th Cong.) provided

"That the Congress recognize the valid claim of the small-business men of America to equal representation as an entity with labor, agriculture, and other groups, on those Government commissions, boards, committees, or other agencies in which the interests of the American economy may be affected; and that the President of the United States, the members of the Cabinet, and other officers of the Government be, and hereby are, respectfully urged to accord the small-business men of America representation on such Government agencies including particularly policy-making bodies created by Executive appointment."

In determining whether a business is a small business for the purpose of this resolution, the appointing agency should consider the relative size and position of the business in relation to the industry, the nature of its area of operation, the size of the group supplying capital and holding ownership and control, and the independence of its management.

As an alternative guiding principle for the appointing agency, a business may be considered a small business if it is a business enterprise, or a group of business enterprises under common ownership or control, which is not dominant in its field and which:

(a) If a manufacturing enterprise, has 100 employees or less; or

(b) If a wholesale establishment, has less than $500,000 annual net sales volume; or

(c) If a retail, service, hotel, amusement, construction, or other enterprise not included under (a) or (b), has annual net sales or receipts of less than $100,000; or

(d) If engaged in two or more separate types of businesses, does not exceed the maximum applicable under either (a), (b), or (c) to any of such businesses.

The heads of the executive departments and establishments should bear in mind the will of Congress as shown by this resolution when asking appointments to commissions, boards, committees, and other agencies in which the interests of the American economy may be affected.

The appointment of representatives of small business should be made in such a manner as to provide the small-business man an equal opportunity for representation along with labor, agriculture, and other groups on those Government commissions.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE,

APPENDIX B

JANUARY 29, 1948.

Hon. W. AVERELL HARRIMAN,
Secretary, Department of Commerce,

MY DEAR SECRETARY HARRIMAN: I have received the annexed procedures, which you propose to adopt in connection with the operations of the Department of Commerce under Public Law 395 and Executive Order 9919.

In my opinion, the procedures which you propose are appropriate under Public Law 395 and Executive Order 9919. Under such procedures the functions of industry advisory committees are limited to the furnishing of information and advice to your Department in connection with proposed voluntary plans and agreements and related matters at regular committee meetings. Such committees do not have any authority to determine policies for the industry. Neither the committees nor any of their members have authority to compel or coerce any person to enter into a voluntary plan or agreement or to compel or coerce any person to comply with any request or order made by the Department of Commerce.

I wish to advise you that the activities of industry advisory committees in conformity with your proposed procedures and within the limitations contained therein would not constitute a violation of the Federal antitrust laws. I believe it would be appropriate, however, to make clear to any persons whom you appoint as members of an industry advisory committee that their membership on such committee does not create any immunity under the Federal antitrust laws for any other activities which might be in contravention of those laws.

Sincerely yours,

TOM C. CLARK,
Attorney General.

Source: Department of Commerce, Office of Industry Cooperation, Jan. 27, 1949.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment to Senate bill 547. I move to strike out "September 30, 1949", in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof "March 31, 1950"; to strike out "September 30, 1949", in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof "March 31, 1950."

Mr. President, the purpose of the amendments is to continue the voluntary allocation controls for a full year from the expiration date of the present law. Senate bill 547 would continue them for a period of 6 months. Under the bill there could be an end of the program 6 months after the expiration of the authority to enter into the voluntary agreements.

When this matter was under consideration at the last session there was skepticism as to whether or not the plan would work. It was generally understood that the most imperative need was in the field of steel and steel production, the allocation of steel to various starved industries which were dependent upon steel in the fabrication and foundry business.

At the hearing on Senate bill 547 the Secretary of Commerce came before the committee and brought to our attention the fact that the voluntary allocation program has been working very effectively; that the Department is satisfied with the cooperation of industry, which was generally entered into the program; that the only program they have put into effect has been in the steel industry, that they are now studying the aluminum industry, the production and distribution of aluminum, to determine whether there is a desire or any need for the program in that field. Generally conditions have improved throughout the country, prices have come down, production has increased, and the result is that the only program put into effect has been in the steel industry.

Mr. President, the Secretary of Commerce testified that there is need for continuing the program as long as there is a shortage of steel. His figures were to the effect that this year there would be a shortage of 7,000,000 tons of production under demand in this country, taking into consideration the need for 4,200,000 tons in the export field.

Representatives from small business also came before our committee, particularly from the outlying sections of the country and the far West, which before this program was put into effect had been practically starved out of the field of steel production and steel processing. They testified that the voluntary allocation program under the Department of Commerce, administered through the industry generally, has been very effective, and as the result of the program they have had sufficient steel to establish or reestablish themselves in business and continue their production effectively.

The bill, S. 547, would continue the authority for a period of only 6 months. My amendment would continue the authority for a period of 1 year. At that time, March 31, 1950, the Congress will be in session. We would have the advantage of another year of production. We would then be in a position to know whether prices have actually stabilized, as it is indicated at the present time they are going to stabilize. We would know then what world needs might be.

As an indication of the fluctuations in the world's demands for steel in the past few years, it was estimated 2 years ago that there would be a need for 6,600,000 tons for the past year, 1948. The demand for steel in the export field dropped from the 6,600,000 tons in the year 1947 to 4,400,000 tons in 1948. The Department of Commerce estimated that there would be a need in the export field of only 4,200,000 tons in 1949. The production in Europe, in the Ruhr, in France, in Belgium and in England, is such as to give encouragement that the export need for the year 1949 will be even less than the figure of 4,400,000 tons estimated by the Secretary of Commerce.

With respect to the steel production in this country, some very significant facts are now apparent in the record to indicate that the steel industry may be able this year to meet practically the total demand not only in this country but for export purposes as well. The Secretary of Commerce, as I have stated, testified that there is a gap of 7,000,000 tons. His production figures were based upon an increase this year of 2,300,000 tons, as I recall. The industry generally believes—and these are the figures from the Steel Institute—that there will be an increase in steel production in this country this year of between three and four million tons if there is uninterrupted production. Of course the only thing that will interrupt the production of the steel mills which are now operating at actual capacity will be something in the nature of a strike, or may be the cutting off of the manganese supply without replacement of it, as is threatened at the present time. But in the absence of those factors entering into the full production program in 1949, the Steel Institute estimates that the steel industry will be able to produce steel ingots to the total capacity of 92,000,000 tons, and if the January production, for which we already have the records, shall be continued throughout the year, there will be a total production of 97,000,000 tons of steel ingots, an unprecedented production in the steel industry for all time.

Compare that with 1948. In 1948, 88,533,729 tons of steel were produced, as against 92,000,000 tons anticipated in 1949. There were 60,848,000 tons of pig iron produced in 1948, as against an estimated 68,000,000 tons this year, if there is uninterrupted production in the steel field. So we can look forward, I think, to a production that will within a year's time meet the demands generally, domestically and in the foreign field.

Therefore, Mr. President, I feel that by the end of the year there will be proof that there is no need for any compulsory controls, such as suggested in the committee, such as has been suggested by the administration, and that at the end of the year it will be perfectly apparent, if the present program of production is continued, if the present world-wide trend continues, and if increased production in foreign countries, in which there is the most imperative demand, continues as it is at the present time—and we have no reason to think that it will not continue—that by the end of the coming year, or by March 31, 1950, there will be no need at all for any kind of controls, either voluntary or compulsory.

So with that in mind, and with the Secretary of Commerce, the representatives of small business, and the administrator of the program testifying fully as to adequacy of voluntary allocation and its success in the field, I think that we in the Congress should continue the present arrangement for another year, until the Congress is in session, and that we may then take a look at the whole field of production and of world-wide demand, as well as the domestic demand.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio one question. He said that the supply of steel might be stopped in two ways; first, by labor difficulties and, second, by shortage of raw material. Would the Senator be willing to go a little more in detail into the second phase, the possible shortage of raw material?

Mr. BRICKER. The raw material involved is manganese, and we are threatened at the present time with a cutting off of the supply from Russia. The supply coming from Russia is approximately 25 percent of the need for manganese in the country for the finished products. There are adequate supplies available in other places. It is a question whether they can be made available soon enough if the supply from Russia is cut off; whether there may be a slowing down or a drag on the production of steel between the time Russian supplies may be stopped and arrangements can be made, with the aid of the Government, to furnish an adequate and timely replacement of the Russian shipments if they should be cut off.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I wish to say in addition to my previous statement that the committee held hearings on the pending legislation only on the point of whether the voluntary arrangement should be extended through September 30. No hearings were held by the committee respecting whether the arrangement should be carried on for another 15 months. As the Senate well knows, the Department of Justice is concerned about this matter. The Tariff Act is also affected by it. Many other factors are involved in the subject. When we gave notice of public hearings on Senate bill 547 it was with the distinct understanding that the arrangement was only to be continued through September of this year. Had there been a suggestion of further extension, other witnesses might have appeared and testified on that point. Other testimony, no doubt, would have been made with respect to the matter.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. I merely wish to ask a question. I notice in the report of the committee the following sentence:

> The committee finds that the existing voluntary plans have provided substantial benefits to the national interests.

That is a very conservative statement of what has been repeated here by the distinguished Senator from Ohio in wholehearted support of the continuance of this particular method of dealing with allocations. What I should like to ask my distinguished friend from South Carolina is whether or not any witness who appeared testified in any way that these voluntary allocations were not adequately and successfully meeting the situation? Was there any opposition to the extension of this method of allocation?

Mr. MAYBANK. There was no opposition to the extension of these allocations through September 30, but no one was asked a question as to extension of the program beyond that date. There was nothing but favorable comment respecting the voluntary allocations. I agree with the Senator from Ohio when he says that all those who testified had only the kindest word to say respecting the steel companies themselves and the voluntary plans in which they participated. There was one point brought out respecting fraud, a case which the Government is now prosecuting in New York, in connection with other things that might be taken up by the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice is investigating the matter. No one, however, testified against the voluntary allocations. I wish to reiterate that no one testified respecting the extension of the voluntary allocations beyond September 30. The meeting was called for the sole purpose of discussing the advisability of extending the voluntary allocations to that date.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. The voluntary allocations have been in force or in operation for more than a year. The provisions of the law are more than a year old. Can the Senator enlighten me, why, if the voluntary operations have worked as well as they have until now, there is something peculiar and mystical about the date, September 30, beyond which the operation should not be extended? Can the Senator state what those circumstances are?

Mr. MAYBANK. I can easily answer that. The majority of the committee felt that the committee should have an open mind and hear representatives of business firms and of the various departments, including the Department of Commerce, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of the Interior, and others, and then we should make up our minds whether or not these agreements should be continued, or whether other amendments to the bill should be offered. The administration believes that if these voluntary allocations are to be continued, they should be continued for 2 years, and not for 1 year. We should not have to go through all this again next January.

Mr. BALDWIN. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say that these agreements ought to be extended for 2 years?

Mr. MAYBANK. The administration believes that these voluntary agreements, along with other agreements which are now being prepared, should be extended for 2 years.

Mr. BALDWIN. Why do we not cross that bridge now?

Mr. MAYBANK. We have had no hearings.

Mr. BALDWIN. The fact remains, does it not, that this program, laid down in the Eightieth Congress in December 1947, really has worked adequately and successfully? Is not that a fact?

Mr. MAYBANK. I should say that it has worked successfully in the case of steel. I would not say that it has worked successfully in other fields. The agreements are purely voluntary. The steel companies did a good job in their voluntary agreements. However, there are other fields which the administration wishes to consider—for example, aluminum, copper, zinc, and other products.

Mr. BALDWIN. As I understand, the pending bill picks up section 2 of the anti-inflation act which was passed by the Eightieth Congress, and seeks to have it continued.

Mr. MAYBANK. Through September 30.

Mr. BALDWIN. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio would continue it for a year.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. BALDWIN. It has already been in operation for a year; and all the testimony before the committee indicated that it has worked successfully. Is that correct?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct. The Congress did a good job in enacting that legislation, and the administration and the executive departments have done an excellent job with business and industry.

Mr. BALDWIN. So the program has been an unqualified success to date.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should say so, but only insofar as the voluntary agreements are concerned, and insofar as those who were under such voluntary agreements are concerned. But the program is limited entirely to those who are willing to enter into such agreements.

Mr. BALDWIN. The voluntary agreements apply not only to steel but to other metals as well and to other shortages.

Mr. MAYBANK. They apply to some, for example, aluminum, manganese, zinc, and copper. I believe there is a list of approximately 20 products.

Mr. BALDWIN. So far as the other items are concerned, the voluntary allocation plan is working well, is it not?

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say to the Senator that, as I understood the testimony, other agreements, such as that relating to aluminum and other items have not yet been worked out or agreed to.

Mr. BALDWIN. But they are in process.

Mr. MAYBANK. They are in the discussion stage; but they have not been concluded.

Mr. BALDWIN. The section which the Senator seeks to continue is section 2 of the Anti-Inflation Act which was passed in the Eightieth Congress, in December 1947.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. BALDWIN. As I understand, neither the committee nor the administration is yet prepared to present to the present Congress any anti-inflationary measures other than those contained in this bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. I would not say that. The administration has been working on the problem for some time. Certain proposals will be presented by Senators on this side of the aisle, and perhaps other proposals will be presented by Senators on the other side of the aisle. I cannot say exactly when these proposals will be introduced, but it will be very shortly, perhaps in a week. We cannot do everything all at once. Congress has been in session for less than a month. We must consult the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Commerce, the Department of the Interior, the Bureau of the Budget, and others.

Mr. BALDWIN. I remind my distinguished friend that the President of the United States suggested that we should deal with this and 17 other measures in 2 weeks. We have already been in session for 4 weeks. It is true, is it not, that so far as the administration is concerned, or so far as any of the Federal departments or agencies are concerned, they are not prepared with any anti-inflationary program other than the continuance of a measure which was enacted in a Republican-controlled Congress in December 1947. Is that correct?

Mr. MAYBANK. Unfortunately the administration has to go into what the Republicans did in the Eightieth Congress, and it takes a little longer, perhaps, to suggest some undoing in order to better the legislation.

Mr. BALDWIN. I will say to my distinguished friend that I understood that he and his colleagues had all the answers last fall in the campaign, and that this problem was to be taken care of immediately.

Mr. MAYBANK. We had the answers, but we did not expect to undo in 30 days everything the Eightieth Congress did.

Mr. BALDWIN. The Senator is not trying to undo something. He is asking that it be continued.

Mr. MAYBANK. We are asking that the program be continued for a few months, until we can handle the problem properly.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. Does the Senator from South Carolina recall that Mr. Clark, representing Secretary Sawyer, stated, in answer to a question of mine, that if the Congress saw fit to extend the voluntary control system beyond the limitation date suggested by the Secretary, no harm of any kind would result?

Mr. MAYBANK. I am not prepared to testify for Mr. Clark. I am not questioning the Senator's statement at all. The record may show that. I know that Mr. Clark stated that they would not object. It is understandable that a bureaucrat, or anybody connected with a bureau, is not going to object to the enactment by Congress of a law extending its powers, and which he feels is doing a good job.

Mr. CAIN. If I may be so bold as to suggest it, the question was more important than that. It was obvious to some of us that Mr. Clark and Secretary Sawyer simply had not given much consideration to a longer period of extension than was recommended by the Secretary, and he quite honestly said, "If that is what the Congress wants to do, it will give us no cause for concern."

I should like to be of assistance to the thinking of all Members of the Senate. Let me refer for a moment to page 3 of the hearings, and to a comment made in conclusion by Secretary Sawyer in his testimony. Secretary Sawyer said:

> In conclusion, I feel that the voluntary program, while not the complete solution to our stabilization problems, has been successful so far in overcoming many of the problems arising from shortages of goods and facilities and in contributing to mitigating inflationary pressures. Consequently, I will urge a longer-term continuation of the program when the broader stabilization program is presented to the Congress. Until that program is presented and acted upon, I believe that the current voluntary program should be kept on a going basis, and, for that purpose, strongly recommend prompt enactment of S. 547.

We, as members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, listened to Mr. Sawyer and were impressed by what he said, namely, that this voluntary system was working well. During the remainder of the day we listened to representatives of industry who stated that the plan had meant the difference between failure and success so far as they were concerned. They were most complimentary. So quite naturally we raised the question, Why should we jeopardize a good thing through a termination date which, logically enough, should be further in the future than the administration has recommended?

We want to cooperate with Mr. Sawyer, Mr. Clark, and the administration. Mr. Sawyer said that in due time—he could not answer the question as to when—recommendations for continuing voluntary agreements would be presented to the Congress.

I join with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] in thinking that we would be doing ourselves and the Nation a service by extending these agreements reasonably beyond the limitation of extension suggested by the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, what the distinguished Senator from Washington read and quoted is exactly what I said. Secretary Sawyer testified in favor of Senate bill 547. It provides the September 30, 1949, date.

Mr. President, this matter concerns not only the Department of Commerce, but it concerns the Department of Justice. It concerns the oil allocations under the Department of the Interior. It concerns the Department of Agriculture. Those agencies must meet and combine their views, if the plan is to be a success.

A present distinguished Member of this body was formerly Secretary of Agriculture and served as such when this plan was in operation. He will bear me out in saying that the plan has not worked in agriculture. It has worked in the Department of Commerce in connection with the steel allocation program; but the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] knows it has not operated successfully in agriculture.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I do not know that we are bound by the testimony of the Secretary of Commerce in favor of the proposal, or that we are bound to conclude that the testimony of the Secretary of Commerce in favor of a 6 months' extension was an argument against a year's extension. He testified very clearly, I feel, that the voluntary program has been successful so far in overcoming many of the problems arising from shortages of goods and facilities, and in contributing to mitigating inflationary pressures. He also testified that there are investigations proceeding in other fields of production, as well as in the field of steel production, looking toward putting into effect a voluntary allocations program, if it is shown to be needed.

Mr. President, the extension time now proposed is not sufficient to take care of such investigation and to permit the program to be put into effect. We have the testimony of the Secretary of Commerce and the testimony of Mr. Clark, who is in charge of this program, the testimony of representatives of small business, who are extremely well satisfied with the operation of the program, and the testimony of witnesses from the oil fields that already there is an adequate supply of pipe and drilling material for the needs of the industry this year. That includes, because we expressly asked the question of the representatives of the industry in Texas and Oklahoma, the industry located there, which has tremendously increased its capacity in the last year. At the same time there is an application before the RFC for a loan of $65,000,000 to expand a steel production plant at Daingerfield, Tex. The testimony at the hearings was that already there is an adequate supply of steel products to take care of the needs in the great production areas in Texas and Oklahoma.

It was only toward the end of the last day of the hearings that it became apparent that the steel industry, within a year—and I think the figures thoroughly support this statement—will be able to meet the demands domestically and in the export field. As a result of that testimony and the statement by Mr. Clark that no damage would be done, I thought it would be advisable to provide a further extension. The only argument against the plan is that probably there would be a desire to have the present Congress put into effect a compulsory program of some kind. I wish to say here and now that I am confident that a majority of the Senate, on both sides of the aisle, do not expect or anticipate a compulsory program, and do not expect to vote for one.

So we might as well face the issue, as it became apparent in the hearings, that a year's extension will be sufficient to take care of the need, and by the end of that time the steel supply will be adequate.

Congress will be in session on March 31 of next year, and then will be able to face the issue again. By that time we shall have the experience of a whole year's production and demand, and we shall be able to ascertain the needs of the country before we pass upon the matter at that time.

The program has been working well. It is continuing to work. There is no opposition to a year's extension.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that the steel industry has done a fairly good job. I wish to say to him further that when a proposal for a compulsory program comes up, there will be hearings and debate. No one knows what prices will be in the next few months, and no one knows what the armed services and the plants at Oak Ridge will need in the way of steel in the next few months.

So I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question. I still do not quite understand all the arguments for and against the different provisions.

If the extension is desired to run for a full year, instead of 7 months, is there any way the Senator from South Carolina knows by which the steel companies could continue the extension of time 5 months beyond the time proposed in the bill? I still do not see the difference between a 12 months' and a 7 months' extension of time. There must be some reason back of the proposal for an additional 5 months, and I should like to know what it is.

Mr. MAYBANK. There is no reason back of it, except it had been hoped the Congress would extend the present law for a few months until a complete study, through the Banking and Currency Committee, could be made of all legislation along these lines.

Mr. AIKEN. Why was the September 30 date taken?

Mr. MAYBANK. Because, as was explained to those of us on the committee, it seems that various firms make their business and earnings, statements, and reports on a quarterly basis. The September 30 date was taken merely because that is the nearest date to the ending period of the business concerns which make quarterly statements.

Mr. AIKEN. I asked the question for the reason that it seems possible that Congress may not be in session at that time. I think all of us hope it will not be in session then.

Mr. MAYBANK. That date was taken for the benefit of the various businesses and industries concerned. I may add that the Committee on Banking and Currency will have ample opportunity to consider other legislation along these lines before the end of this session.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, as a part of the debate, I think Senators will be interested in an article on the steel industry which is pertinent to the discussion. It appeared in yesterday's New York Times. The article is by Thomas E. Mullaney, and the heading reads: "Demand for Steel Is Seen Dwindling—Cancellations are occurring and placement of any new orders is slackening."

I think all of us will have a deep concern as to the validity of such comments, so I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEMAND FOR STEEL IS SEEN DWINDLING—CANCELLATIONS ARE OCCURRING AND PLACEMENT OF ANY NEW ORDERS IS SLACKENING

(By Thomas E. Mullaney)

Although high-level steel operations will be required of the Nation's mills for several months yet, the end of the acute postwar shortage of steel is in sight, several of the industry's leaders intimated last week after releasing their 1948 financial statements.

Steel executives say that demand and supply for steel products, except pipes and tubes and a few other items, may be balanced fairly well in 6 months. Some members of the industry are even beginning to wonder whether too much, rather than too little, steel capacity has been installed during the 41 months since the end of World War II.

These statements on the steel outlook were the most important development emanating from last week's quarterly meetings of steel company directors. Also significant, however, were the record profits for 1948 reported by many companies of the industry and the proposed three-for-one split of the common stock of the United States Steel Corp.

Up to now, the steel industry had seen only prospects for maximum operations for an indefinite period. Record tonnages of steel were being produced and yet backlogs of unfilled orders seemed to be increasing. Now, however, the backlogs are dwindling, order cancellations are occurring and the placement of new orders is at a slower pace.

PUNGENT VIEW BY GRACE

E. G. Grace, chairman of the Bethlehem Steel Corp. and one of the top steel officials of the country for many decades, made the most pungent observations on the steel-supply picture.

"There isn't any question but that there is a softening in many lines for steel," he said. "The household-goods lines are filled to the gunwales. There have been even some important cancellations of steel orders recently in both the capital-goods and the consumer-goods fields."

It is understood, for instance, that the demand for steel by oil-well drilling-equipment manufacturers has subsided somewhat. The demand for steel for shipbuilding and ship repair work is also considerably smaller as is the pressure for fabricated structural steel.

Mr. Grace said that his company would have full steel production schedules until the middle of 1949, but he refused to make any predictions beyond that. He also remarked that he considers steel supply and demand in "very good order right now" and indicated actual demand for steel "has been very much padded."

The head of the Nation's second largest steel company also disagreed with an estimate of the Department of Commerce that the shortage of steel at the end of 1949 would be some 7,000,000 tons.

Irving S. Olds, chairman of United States Steel, also disclosed a slackening in steel demand, but his statement was more conservative. United States Steel, the Nation's largest producer, now holds a volume of unfilled orders equal to "4 or 5 months' operations at the present rate," he said. In previous quarters, the estimate had been "5 or 6 months."

Another steel official likened the current situation to the 1920-21 period. He pointed out that in the middle of 1920 steel was still riding high on the crest of postwar orders from the peacetime economy—from the construction, automotive, and railroad industries. Orders vanished almost overnight, he added, and the industry did not get back to its former levels until 1925.

The records show that in 1920 the domestic steel industry produced 47,188,886 net tons of raw steel from operations averaging 75.7 percent of capacity. In August of that year, however, United States Steel noted a decline of 313,430 tons in its future business.

At that time, the decrease was ascribed to the following reasons: (1) New business was not coming in as rapidly as ordinarily because of uncertainty over prices for the following year; (2) shipments were moving faster because of the improved supply of freight cars; and (3) orders were being canceled, principally from the automotive companies. A little later, higher steel production in Europe reduced the need for American steel in foreign countries.

Today, steel orders are declining because many consumer lines are being filled, earlier estimates of steel demands in certain lines have proven to be inflated, and steel production in foreign countries is expanding rapidly.

It was in 1921 that the post-World War I bust came for the steel industry here. Companies such as Bethlehem Steel saw their operations decline to levels even below 20 percent of capacity, and the whole domestic industry operated at only 34.5 percent of capacity in turning out 22,157,853 tons. It was the worst steel-production year since 1905.

It is doubtful whether so drastic a transition would occur in this era, but the domestic industry is eyeing the situation closely and warning persistently against rash overexpansion of steel facilities, as some Government officials have been advocating.

With respect to steel earnings last year, the industry considers them only fair because of the decreased purchasing power of the dollar. Most companies reported record earnings for the year, but, because of heavy requirements for their expansion programs, much of the earnings had to be reinvested in the business.

The generous dividend action and proposed common-stock split-up of United States Steel has attracted considerable speculation in financial circles. The stock division will give broader distribution to the stock, as the company announced was its intention. But one observer wondered whether the dividend action and the plan for the split might not be the prelude to some new financing. Bethlehem Steel took similar stock action at the end of 1947 and then successfully accomplished $70,000,000 of stock and bond financing within a year.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I hope Senators will study the article. It bears out what I have been saying, namely, that no one really knows what will happen between now and September. So why extend this plan for a full year? Let us first have the benefit of the experience of the next few months.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator asks why we should extend it beyond the date recommended by the administration. I think there is a good reason for doing so. Admittedly we are concerned about a good many features of the steel industry and other industries, but we are certain that the voluntary allocations system has been and is working well.

Mr. MAYBANK. In the case of steel.

Mr. CAIN. Yes; in the case of steel. With reference to that problem, there can be no possible harm, it seems to some of us, in extending the program into the future. If in the meantime we should find good, sound reasons for improving upon the legislation, I know of no reason why that could not be accomplished through an amendment.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the distinguished Senator.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes, or I am glad to yield the floor.

Mr. FLANDERS. I simply wish to inquire whether there is any presumption of difficulty whatever in connection with extending for 13 months the date of this admittedly good arrangement, in view of the fact that the Senate can at any time between now and the end of this session modify the bill in any way it pleases. Is it not true that back of the proposal to shorten it to a 7 months' period is the presumption that there is something wrong with it? Is not that the presumption?

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Vermont, I do not think there is anything wrong with it, or is any presumption implied by the 7-month extension or compared with a 13-month extension. Just as the Congress could pass a 15 months' extension, and then cut it down, so the present Congress can pass an extension to September 30 and continue it for another year after September 30. If we want to extend the plan to June or July, that can be done. It works both ways.

Mr. FLANDERS. The question, it would seem to me, I may say to the Senator from South Carolina, is that, nevertheless, there remains a presumption unfavorable to the present working of the program. Is it quite 50–50 whether we extend and shorten, on the one hand, or whether we shorten and extend, on the other? It would seem to me, I may say to the Senator, that he introduced into this proposal an unfavorable presumption not warranted by the testimony.

Mr. MAYBANK. I can only say to the Senator with respect to the 50–50 proposition to which I referred, as to whether it is extended for 13 months and is then cut down, or whether it is cut down to 6 months or 7 months, and later extended, we should keep in mind that the bill S. 547 extended the program only to September 30 of this year as it was introduced in the Senate. Hearings were conducted and the newspapers throughout the country carried accounts that the plan was to be extended by that bill only until September 30. There was never a word of testimony by qualified witnesses that we should extend voluntary agreements for 1 year. The Department of Justice, charged with enforcement of the antitrust laws, was not consulted about it. Neither the Department of Agriculture nor the Interior Department appeared. In the hearings I distinctly stated that the Secretary of Commerce told me he had discussed with the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice and with the Attorney General himself the question of the agreements, and that the Attorney General had agreed upon the date of September 30.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield first to the Senator from Connecticut, who has been waiting some time.

Mr. BALDWIN. The Senator was on the floor on December 17, 1947, as I recall, when we were debating the previous bill. Does the Senator recall that at that particular time the distinguished minority leader, the present Vice President of the United States, offered an amendment calling for compulsory controls? Does the Senator from South Carolina recall that?

Mr. MAYBANK. I shall have to refresh my memory.

Mr. BALDWIN. My question is, Why is it, if that particular provision was so good at that time, that it is not offered now, instead of asking a continuance of the Republican control measure? Of course, the measure is working better than the compulsory method would have worked.

Mr. MAYBANK. I can only answer the Senator's question as I did before, that it is going to take the Democrats a long time to undo some of the Republican measures enacted during the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. BALDWIN. I might remind my distinguished friend that in that day and time, December 17, they were here with an amendment that they said would provide adequately for the situation. Let me quote from what the distinguished Senator from Kentucky at that time said. Today, it has added authority to what it had then, because he is now Vice President of the United States.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). The Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am glad to yield for a question, but if anyone wants to make a speech I shall be glad to yield him the floor.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I again press my question, which is, why is it that the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky when he was minority leader, which was represented at that time as something that would adequately take care of the situation, and in the place of this voluntary plan, is not offered now?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I am not here to speak for the distinguished former Senator from Kentucky, who is now the distinguished Vice President of the United States and the Presiding Officer of the Senate. I feel certain that if he were still the majority leader, he could answer that question.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from South Carolina obviously has several reasons for opposing the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have three reasons.

Mr. CAIN. But it seems to me that the Senator's primary reason for objecting to the proposal is that he thinks, because there were no hearings with respect to any date other than the date recommended by the administration, we should adhere to the date recommended by the administration. Is that true?

Mr. MAYBANK. Not only that. I shall be perfectly frank with my friend from Washington in saying that was one of the reasons, but as I said in the committee, I had other reasons. We ought to keep the matter open. We ought to keep an open mind about it in deference to the people who on November 2 overwhelmingly chose Mr. Truman as President and Mr. Barkley as Vice President.

Mr. CAIN. But I may say in answer to the Senator's first proposition——

Mr. MAYBANK. I do not want the Senator from Washington to understand for one moment that I have any controls in mind. I have only an open mind. All I want to know is what is proposed, and all I want to know is that I may be my own judge, in my own mind, of what is in the interest of my people.

Mr. CAIN. I think this question is fundamentally important. I assume from the Senator's opposition to this particular date that he conceives that whenever the administration, on a proposed piece of legislation, recommends a date, it must necessarily follow that that is the only date we can use.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator suggests an inference. I am sure he did not mean, if the administration were to send a measure to the Congress containing a certain date, that I would follow it blindly.

Mr. CAIN. Not the Senator; no.

Mr. MAYBANK. Because I never did and never intend to do such a thing.

Mr. CAIN. No, not the Senator from South Carolina personally; but I refer to his objection to the date, because we did not have hearings on any other date. I think my contention is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. No, because, as the Senator knows, I stated very definitely at the meeting that the Secretary of Commerce had told me he and the Attorney General had agreed on this date, in order that they might make a further study in the Justice Department in connection with antitrust suits, and the New York case, which is undergoing prosecution.

Mr. CAIN. But the Senator from South Carolina would agree that if the Senate saw fit to determine a different date, the Senate would have the perfectly sound ground, in its legislation, to call for any date it saw fit, would he not?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, to conclude my remarks in regard to the 1-year extension, I wish to call attention to an editorial which appeared in the New York Times on January 19.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator, if he will permit me to do so, I shall yield the floor to him, since I stated I would yield only for a question otherwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield the floor, unless the Senator has a question.

Mr. BRICKER. No, I have no questions.

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield the floor.

Mr. BRICKER. I wish merely to conclude my remarks in regard to the matter by the insertion of this editorial in the RECORD:

No one, probably, would say that the allocations system has worked out perfectly or to the satisfaction of everyone. But, as Secretary Sawyer observes, it "has been successful within the limits inherent in any voluntary program" in overcoming some of the Nation's recent shortages in goods and facilities. It has been especially valuable in providing for the steel requirements of the armed services and the Atomic Energy Commission.

Those are two very important fields. This program has met the needs for the production of steel of atomic energy activities and the activities of the armed services.

Coming to the question of the Senator from New Hampshire as to whether or not there is an inference that the program is perhaps belittled by limiting its time, I think he is upon perfectly sound ground when he concludes there must be some inference of failure, if the program is to be limited to 7 months. At that time the Congress will not be in session. We hope we can conclude the program, as it has been laid out for us, in less time than that. Congress will not be here at the time, then, when the voluntary program ends. At any time, in the operation of this voluntary program, either industry or the Department of Commerce can cease to function under it, but there is no question, if it terminates in September 1949, that this perfectly wholesome and constructive and, thus far, successful program could be continued without a violation of certain of the statutes, particularly the antitrust laws.

But if we continue it until March 31, Congress will again be in session and can amend or discontinue the program if there is further need for it.

Furthermore, if the real reason for advocating a year's extension is that there is a demand for a compulsory program, such as that suggested by the President and the leadership on the other side, certainly such a compulsory program could be put into effect by the Congress, and it would override the voluntary program. Many faults may be obviated and many dangerous situations may be corrected if we continue the program until March 31.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the complete editorial from the New York Times of January 19, 1949, in regard to controls, be inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS AND CONTROLS

Steps were taken yesterday, with the backing of the administration, to see that two of the Government's basic controls over shortage materials are continued in force pending congressional action on the eight-point program laid down by the President in his state of the Union message.

Chairman SPENCE, of the House Banking Committee, introduced two bills for this purpose. One of these calls for the extension for 6 months of the voluntary agreements anti-inflation law enacted by the Eightieth Congress. The other provides for continuing export controls for another 27 months, or through June 30, 1951. Almost simultaneously, Chairman MAYBANK, of the Senate Banking Committee, announced that his group would speed action on companion measures. Without such legislation both of these laws would expire automatically at the end of next month.

The so-called voluntary agreements program is the compromise plan worked out by the Republicans last year as a substitute for the stand-by price production controls proposed by President Truman. It authorizes industries to enter into agreements for the allocation of materials in short supply. Agreements of this kind have been employed by the steel industry: for example, to guarantee minimum quantities of steel for certain essential uses under Government-established priorities. The export-control law gives the Government authority to say what can and what cannot be shipped out of the country. Its principal purposes are: (1) to prevent domestic shortages from being aggravated by the export of items needed at home; (2) to safeguard supplies of materials required in the interest of national security; and (3) to see that, in the words of Secretary of Commerce Sawyer, critically needed commodities are made available to "those areas where they will be used to promote world recovery."

Extension of these controls is obviously desirable and necessary until Congress has decided what, if anything, it wishes to do about Mr. Truman's recently proposed program, two of whose suggestions, at least, go further in the direction of Government control than the country has gone except when it was at war or on the fringe of war. No one, probably, would say that the allocations system has worked out perfectly or to the satisfaction of everyone. But, as Secretary Sawyer observes, it "has been successful within the limits inherent in any voluntary program" in overcoming some of the Nation's recent shortages in goods and facilities. It has been especially valuable in providing for the steel requirements of the armed services and the Atomic Energy Commission.

Demand for steel is still running ahead of current production, and probably will continue to do so for some time to come. But there are signs that this bottleneck is widening rather than narrowing. In situations such as these the market is usually a more reliable guide than personal judgment, and it is a noteworthy fact that gray-market premiums on steel, like black-market premiums on automobiles, have recently shown pronounced declines. In scrap steel, a sort of subbottleneck, prices are reported as beginning to crack under the weight of increasing supplies. At any rate, with present controls extended Congress will be in a position to consider, without feeling that it is under too great pressure of time, the wisdom of moving further in the direction of Government control.

Should voluntary allocations fall short of meeting the Nation's emergency needs, the next logical step would seem to be that indicated in the fifth of President Truman's eight points: namely, priorities and allocations of key materials in short supply. But the President's program goes on from compulsory allocations to price control, and from price control to a suggestion that the Government either finance the private expansion of certain shortage industries or build its own plants to compete with such industries.

It is interesting and encouraging to note that Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, the President's chief economic adviser, has disassociated himself from the last-named proposal. Productive activities, Dr. Nourse pointed out in this city on Saturday, "are affected by conditions that can only be known by those right on the ground." But basically the chief criticism of Mr. Truman's program, as we see it, is that when it goes beyond compulsory allocations it moves into plans which presuppose a wartime economy and by the time it reaches point eight it is assuming the country is ready to try its hand at state socialism. The first of these assumptions is implausible; the second is, we think, virtually inconceivable.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, ever since I have been a Member of the Senate I have been very much interested in the question of inflation and high prices, as have all of us. At the two sessions of the Eightieth Congress I worked as vigorously as I knew how to get some legislation which would deal adequately with the existing situation. The subject matter is one which is very close to my heart. In the last campaign and during the first and second sessions of the Eightieth Congress, there was great tub-thumping on the part of the administration and those representing it regarding the whole subject of inflation and high prices and what a Democratic-controlled Congress would do to reduce high prices for the benefit of all the people.

I am surprised and astounded that the first measure which comes from the other side of the aisle to deal with the whole subject of anti-inflation is what? Is it a proposal for some new legislation to deal with the situation? Is it something that the administration or some of its many agencies worked out to deal with one of the most critical situations before the American people? No, Mr. President; it is not that. It is a request to continue on the statute books a measure to deal with inflation which was passed by the Eightieth Congress, a Republican-controlled Congress. That is the first step in the President's program—a continuation on the books of Republican measures which were passed to deal with inflation.

Why, Mr. President, is it asked to have this legislation continued on the books? Because witnesses from various agencies have testified that the act has been working successfully.

In the day and time when we were considering anti-inflation measures I remember that the former distinguished Senator from Kentucky, who was then the minority leader, offered an amendment and urged its adoption, and those on the other side of the aisle vigorously supported him in connection with that amendment. The amendment would do away with section 2, which it is now asked to have continued. It would place in effect compulsory allocations and compulsory controls. It was pointed out, with great vigor and great enthusiasm, that the Republican measure would not work, that there must be compulsory controls.

But, Mr. President, where is that provision now? Where is that amendment? Why did not the committee, which is controlled by members on the other side of the aisle, bring forward that proposal which appeared to be so marvelous in December 1947? We are now asked to continue the Republican measure which was urged upon the Congress on the basis that it would work—a Republican measure, Mr. President, which has worked, according to the open testimony before the committee and by the admission which is implicit in the bill asking a continuance of these powers. Why will it not continue to work? What is the great difficulty with regard to it?

The bill now pending would continue voluntary allocations until the 30th of September. If we live up to the provisions of the Reorganization Act, the Congress will not be in session on the 30th of September. Then we could not do anything regarding inflation, Mr. President, if nothing is done in the meantime—and there is every indication that nothing else will be done about it in the meantime.

The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] has offered an amendment to continue the law in operation for another year. According to the argument made by the distinguished chairman of the committee, the law's provisions have helped in large part to settle the situation as to one of the basic commodities of our economy. If it is desired in the meantime to offer some kind of substitute, let it be offered, debated, and considered on the floor.

Mr. President, I say I am surprised and astounded that the first step the administration and its representatives on the other side of the aisle take in dealing with the matter of high prices is a continuation of a Republican measure passed in the Eightieth Congress.

I should like to call attention also to the fact that this bill deals only with one provision of that legislation, section 2. So far as we know, up to date—and it is more than a month after the opening of the Congress—all the other provisions passed by a Republican-controlled Congress dealing with the subject of inflation will be continued on the books.

In the political campaign, we were given to understand that legislation which we had passed was fundamentally wrong, that we had committed a grave error in passing it. Yet, I repeat, Mr. President, the first suggestion that comes from the administration is for a continuation of one section of a Republican law to control inflation. Apparently the administration is perfectly satisfied to have all the remainder of the law continued; in fact, it has asked that it be further continued. That is a strange action, after all the talk about what a Democratic-controlled Congress would do. The answer to it is this, and it is being demonstrated day after day in the newspapers and over the radio, that prices are falling. This legislation, passed at the previous session, was wiser than we thought it was. It adequately dealt with the situation: it worked.

I am happy, indeed, to stand here and see the irrefutable proof of the fact that the legislation has worked, proof in the form of a bill introduced by a Democratic-controlled committee of a Democratic-controlled Senate, asking that one provision of the law expiring by limitation of time be continued in effect.

Mr. President, I looked over the record of the debate in connection with adopting the amendment offered by the former distinguished Senator from Kentucky, Mr. BARKLEY. Some of that debate, Mr. President, I think would bear repetition here. I wonder why, in the face of the language used in that debate, our friends are now urging the continuance of what appeared to be such an iniquitous and unworkable piece of legislation.

Said the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] on page 11501 of the RECORD:

> I think the Congress and the country appreciate any step toward meeting this very serious situation, but I think the country is going to be disappointed in the probable effectiveness of the program the Senator from Ohio is now outlining.

The Senator from Ohio being Mr. TAFT, then chairman of the committee, as I recall, who was proposing the particular legislation under consideration.

Has the country been disappointed? The supply of steel has risen tremendously, and we have been able adequately to meet the situation.

I continue reading what the distinguished Senator from Florida said at the time:

> The alternative action that might be taken, it seems to me, if the program were intended to be most effective, would be to give the President authority to fix prices in certain selective fields, either by forcing concurrence in a so-called voluntary agreement, or by prescribing what is a fair price, and simply to order that price put into effect, at least in the selective fields, in the case of steel, for example, and in the case of certain other commodities which might be regarded as key commodities. But if we continue without one of the emergency measures being adopted by the Congress in the present session, it simply means more time will pass and the situation will become far worse, and we shall still be tinkering with some sort of questionable procedure.

The distinguished Senator from Florida so described the procedure. Has that happened? I know the distinguished Senator from Florida is a great and able Senator, and I have high regard for him, but I say that in this particular instance he turned out to be a very poor prophet, indeed.

Then the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, the present great Vice President of the United States, in urging the adoption of an amendment which would impose compulsory controls, had this to say about the matter, as appears on page 11515 of the RECORD. He was replying to a statement by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the effect that what was proposed would make it impossible to pass the measure then pending before Christmas. I read from the RECORD:

> Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know about that. I am not sure that even the milk-and-water proposition we are now considering will pass before Christmas.

Now, Mr. President, what do the administration spokesmen ask us to do? They ask us to reenact and continue in force this Republican milk-and-water proposition about which they had so much to say a year and some months ago. Why do they ask that it be continued? Because time has demonstrated that it has worked well, that it has been effective.

Then the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], speaking in favor of the amendment which would put into effect compulsory controls, said:

> I think the Senator's amendment is entirely in order. Something of the kind is absolutely necessary if we are to do anything more than hand out a campaign document in an effort to show that we have done a great thing for the economy of the country.

Mr. President, I for one entertained some doubt at that time as to whether or not we were going far enough with the particular measure then being considered. But time has demonstrated to me that my doubts should have been completely dissipated, and, indeed, they have been by the adequacy with which the measure as passed has dealt with the situation.

I remember the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] saying:

> Mr. President, I should like to add a few words to those which have been said by the distinguished minority leader. I believe we are dealing with one of the most important and difficult questions ever presented to this Congress. That statement has been made several times in the last few years. That is because the world itself has been in turmoil.
> The issue which is now presented in section 2—
> The one which would be continued under the pending bill—
> between the bill reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency and the amendments which have been offered by the Senator from Kentucky, is simply the issue of whether we shall have an economic government in this crisis by those who have controlled our economic system, privately, or whether we shall have the Government in charge. It could be stated even more simply. It is an issue between private government and the people's government.

Mr. President, I am one who does not wish to see big business, or big labor, or big anything else, run this country or control our economy. But I was again surprised and astounded when the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], who is chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, said on the floor of the Senate that he complimented the leaders of the steel industry for the fine, patriotic manner in which they had cooperated to carry out these voluntary allocations.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. Why should the Senator be surprised if I said a good word for corporations?

Mr. BALDWIN. I know the distinguished Senator from South Carolina well enough to understand that he is most charitable, and that he always says a good word for everybody and everything. I grant him that. The point I wish to make is that we were told by spokesmen on the other side of the aisle that big-business men would run away with the situation. On the other hand, we are now told from the other side of the aisle that which is uncontrovertibly true, namely, that these men have cooperated, that big business and little business have cooperated, and the law has been a great success.

I grant that my distinguished friend the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is a great statesman and a great Senator, but I say that he, like the distinguished Senator from Florida, is a poor prophet in this particular situation.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield for one question?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. There is only one question in issue in connection with the pending bill, namely, the fixing of a proper date for the termination of the program. Can the Senator from Connecticut tell the Senator from Illinois just why the Republicans chose March 1, 1949, for the termination of their program?

Mr. BALDWIN. No; I cannot.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I was not a member of the committee. Perhaps the Senator from Ohio can answer the question.

Mr. BRICKER. It was merely because the Congress would be in session then. That is the real reason why the date March 1 was recommended and chosen. The Congress would then have been in session long enough to see how the program was working. That was the date fixed from a practical standpoint, and it seemed to be the most reasonable and best date.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senate passed the original bill in December 1947.

Mr. BALDWIN. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. And the termination date fixed in that bill was March 1, 1949; was it not?

Mr. BALDWIN. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. May I ask the Senator from Ohio if that is correct?

Mr. BRICKER. That is the correct date, as fixed in the original bill.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BALDWIN. That demonstrates that we have had more than a year of satisfactory operation under this particular measure, and my reason for supporting the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is that if we have had a year's experience with it, and with an improving situation, it is fair to assume that the program will continue to be satisfactory, and that we should continue the act.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I was informed that I was honored by some reference in the able Senator's remarks.

Mr. BALDWIN. I am always delighted to honor my distinguished friend from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I was greatly honored to receive even temporary recognition by my able friend, but naturally I should be even more pleased to hear him repeat what he said. He spoke about my being a poor prophet in what I said about the workability of the voluntary allocation program.

Mr. BALDWIN. I should be very glad to repeat what I said. I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Eightieth Congress, page 11501, where the distinguished Senator from Florida is reported to have said:

> I think the Congress and the country appreciate any step toward meeting this very serious situation, but I think the country is going to be disappointed in the probable effectiveness of the program the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] is now outlining.

> The alternative action that might be taken, it seems to me, if the program were intended to be most effective, would be to give the President authority to fix prices in certain selective fields, either by forcing concurrence in a so-called voluntary agreement or by prescribing what is a fair price, and simply to order that price put into effect, at least in the selective fields, in the case of steel, for example, and in the case of certain other commodities which might be regarded as key commodities. But if we continue without one of the emergency measures being adopted by the Congress in the present session, it simply means more time will pass and the situation will become far worse, and we shall still be tinkering with some sort of questionable procedure.

In order that the Senator might be fully informed, I want to say that I questioned the Senator's ability as a prophet, although I paid the Senator high tribute in other respects, and then I went on to say that the first step in the President's program of combating high prices was a continuance in operation of a measure passed by a Republican-controlled Congress. That was the first step. I ask the Senator why we were asked to continue something that the distinguished Senator said was a "questionable procedure."

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am perfectly prepared for the RECORD to indicate the accuracy or the inaccuracy of the prediction I made when the President's proposals were before the Republican majority of Congress and declined. I think if the Senator will make a canvass of small business in America, and of the little-business men, the little manufacturers, to see whether or not they have obtained under a voluntary allocation system steel in quantity comparable to what they should have had, he will find that the little manufacturers have not. I know of many instances in my own State where little manufacturers, the little fellows who are trying to secure a small quota of steel, have not been able to secure it because they are not on the favored list of big steel producers. I realize that sort of thing always occurs when there is a voluntary allocation system.

What the President was proposing, and what he repeated, as I understand, in his recommendations to the Congress in his state of the Union message, is authority to impose compulsory allocations when he finds that the public need requires it. I supported that proposal last year. I shall support it again when the matter comes up.

The Republican majority was opposed to the President having even an alternative authority that might be compulsorially exercised. But I go back to the basic proposition that if we are to have allocations, if we are to have rationing, the only way we can be assured that there will be a fair distribution of what is allocated and what is rationed is for some public authority at least to have supervision over it, if not direction of it. So I am perfectly prepared to let the small-business men of America who need steel to be the conclusive witnesses as to whether they have obtained the share of the Nation's output of steel they would have had if we had had a compulsory allocation and distribution system.

Mr. BALDWIN. I will say in reply to my distinguished friend that he apparently is prepared to ask the same question I am. If what he says is so, why do we not have reported from the committee a measure providing for compulsory control? Why does not the committee have the courage to report such a measure? Why has not the committee in a year and 3 months prepared the legislation necessary to deal with the subject on a compulsory basis?

Mr. President, I would not vote for it, but what I am wondering is why, if voluntary allocation has not worked successfully, some compulsory measure along the lines my distinguished friend urges, has not been presented to the Senate?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, let me state what the facts are.

Mr. BALDWIN. I wish to say a word more on this particular point.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut allow me one moment?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. I inquire who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. So far as writing a program is concerned, I would have vested in the President the authority which might be compulsorily exercised when in the President's opinion the public need requires. The President asked repeatedly of the Eightieth Congress, and has asked the present Congress—and he asked the Eightieth Congress especially in the special session—for the power to allocate by authority, if the situation requires it, and the side of the able Senator from Connecticut has steadfastly and successfully opposed such legislation. Now today, while it may be that the measure now proposed is not all that some of us would like it to be, yet it is twice as good as that advocated by the Republican side of the aisle. The measure before us seeks only 6 months' extension of the temporary authority to allocate by the steel industry, but the Republican side of the aisle is insisting upon 12 months' extension. So our proposal, while defective, no doubt, and I think it is, and I think it is inadequate, yet is twice as good as what the Senator from Connecticut now associates himself with on the other side of the aisle. He wants a year of immunity of the steel industry from any public control, whereas the bill before us suggests only the extension for 6 months of the voluntary control now in effect, until the matter can be more thoroughly investigated.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, if the Senator feels the way he has just expressed himself he should submit an amendment for the Senate to consider. Let the Senator offer such an amendment as the distinguished former Senator from Kentucky offered when section 2 was under consideration in December 1947. Let the Senator from Florida propose such an amendment, which provided for compulsory control. It was suggested at that time by spokesmen on the other side of the aisle that it would be adequate. If my friend from Florida is so anxious to have compulsory controls, let him offer that proposal again by way of amendment. What I am saying is that the majority party is attempting to carry water on both shoulders in this matter.

Replying now to the question as to why the President was not given authority to take compulsory measures, I call my friend's attention to section 6 of the act we are discussing. Section 6 happened to be an amendment which was incorporated in the bill as the result of the efforts of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] and myself. It provides a method by which the President can require Congress to give him or to deny him the right to impose compulsory controls on specific selected items, and yet not once in all the time since the law has been on the books has the President attempted to exercise the broad powers he has had under this particular provision of the law. So, Mr. President, there are in the existing law provisions under which compulsory controls could be required.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I am not the President's official spokesman in this body, and have no right to speak his mind, but I can imagine that it may be that the President is not asking for compulsory authority, although he did recommend stand-by power, because the President unequivocally recommended that additional steel-production facilities should be provided, and if private industry would not provide them, then that the Government of the United States should see to it that they were constructed. The President may have felt that if we could increase the steel output by new facilities—and that policy may be still under consideration by the administration—perhaps rationing of any sort might not be imperative. I hope the Senator from Connecticut, who I am sure wants every business and industry to have a reasonable and fair quantity of steel, will join us in supporting the President's proposal that provision be made for additional steel facilities in the country so that steel production may be increased. May I hope the Senator from Connecticut will take that attitude?

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I may say in response, that the testimony before the committee—and like my distinguished friend, the Senator from Florida, I was not on the committee, and so I had no opportunity to know what the testimony was until I read it and saw the report—was that the situation was being taken care of very adequately. My point is that if the situation is being taken care of very adequately in the absence of compulsions, we had better continue in that particular course rather than put into effect some other program when we do not know how it will work in this day and time.

Mr. President, there is no State in the whole Nation which for its size uses more steel than does Connecticut. I do not recall any particular pressure from any business people back home. As a matter of fact, I received a letter the other day pointing out that the particular small company represented by the writer could not obtain steel, and when I went to work on the subject and obtained a report on it, the company advised me that since they had last corresponded with me they had been adequately taken care of. So I assume in that particular situation at least that the present method we are using in dealing with the situation is working satisfactorily.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, if I correctly understood the Senator from Florida several minutes ago, he stated that he would be willing to call as witnesses small-business men, particularly in his State, to testify that the voluntary system was not working satisfactorily. Did I correctly understand the Senator?

Mr. PEPPER. I stated that in my State there were numerous instances which had been very forcibly brought to my attention, of little users of steel being unable to get it because they were not included in the voluntary allocation system. Obviously the steel companies favor their old customers; and if one were not an old customer or a favored customer—at least in my State—he could not get steel. Many small-business men complained that they were unable to get steel. The able junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], who is seated at my left, tells me that he has recently talked with representatives of the Department of Commerce, and that the Department had stated that there was not sufficient steel to satisfy the small users of the country; that it simply did not exist. Therefore they could not get it.

Mr. CAIN. The statement of the Senator from Florida was to the effect that small-business men generally believed that the voluntary allocation system was not working effectively.

Mr. PEPPER. I was simply saying that there is not sufficient steel for all the small steel users of the country. It is only human nature, as well as confirmed business practice, that when those who produce a commodity do their own rationing, they give it to their old customers or to their friends. That is not only human nature but business practice.

Mr. CAIN. It is an obvious fact that when there is a shortage of a particular commodity, we are by no means certain that a better distribution will follow from a mandatory, as opposed to a voluntary, allocation system. It is that question with which we are seriously concerning ourselves. Let me ask the Senator from Florida if he has read the testimony given before the Committee on Banking and Currency, which gives rise to the whole question now before us.

Mr. PEPPER. No. I am not a member of that committee and I have not read the testimony. But I know that during the war if all the allocation systems and all the quota systems had been left to voluntary judgment and conscience, a few would have been favored, and many would have been discriminated against. That is inherent in the voluntary system.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator has stated that he is not a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Some of us are. We therefore take it for granted that the Senator from Florida would like to know the character of the testimony before that committee, and by whom it was given. The Senator from Florida has just stated that small-business men would testify to the unworkability of the system which we are discussing. Let me state to the Senator from Florida that the witnesses before the Committee on Banking and Currency were small-business people. They said that whereas a year and a half or two years ago, in the absence of the voluntary system, they were rapidly going out of business, with the adoption of the voluntary system, they were today getting every ounce of steel they considered they were entitled to.

Mr. PEPPER. How many small-business men testified?

Mr. CAIN. Approximately half a dozen.

Mr. PEPPER. Approximately half a dozen small-business men. Unless they were elected to speak for the small-business men of America, or had made a survey of the small-business men of America, I do not believe that they could be regarded as decisive spokesmen.

Mr. CAIN. But we, as representatives of the Senate, were interrogating them. If the Senator does not care to consider that testimony as valid, does he feel that the reference which he has just made to small-business men in Florida as being out of harmony with this program should be considered as valid?

Mr. PEPPER. I was only saying that I had received numerous complaints. I could name those who made the complaints. Other Senators tell me the same thing. I know that the steel mills have been working at capacity. The President has found it necessary to propose additional facilities. I know that with a limited output and a voluntary system of distribution, the little fellow is going to get the least.

Mr. CAIN. But the testimony clearly indicated to us that conditions are becoming materially better, and that a considerable degree of credit is being given to the very system the duration of which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], through his amendment, seeks to extend. That is important to us. If it is good, we must be very cautious about getting rid of it, in the absence of something better to take its place. Nothing better has thus far been advanced on either side of the aisle.

Mr. PEPPER. I am sure that we do not want to confuse the record. Is it not a fact that the simple question before the Senate is whether the voluntary method now in existence shall be extended for 6 months or 12 months? The Democrats are recommending an extension for 6 months, and saying that in that time we shall know more about what to do as a permanent policy. The Republicans are saying, "No; exempt the subject from consideration for a whole year."

Mr. CAIN. May I answer that observation for the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], who is leading the opposition, is chairman?

During the previous remarks of the Senator from Florida, he stated that the Democrats want to extend the program for 6 months, and that the Republicans want to provide immunity to the steel industry for a year. The Senator said essentially that, did he not? He stated that he thought the Republicans wanted to give immunity to the steel industry for a period twice as long as that recommended by the Democrats.

Mr. PEPPER. I stated that I thought the issue was whether the present voluntary method should be extended for 6 months, as provided by the bill reported by the Democratic leadership, or whether the whole subject should be sealed up for 12 months, so that we would not be able to reconsider the matter in the interim, and perhaps determine upon something else as a permanent policy. So, today we are not voting for compulsory control or voluntary allocation. We are merely voting whether we want voluntary allocation for 6 months or 12 months. That is all there is to it.

Mr. CAIN. I think the Senator from Florida will be interested in the testimony which came from the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Sawyer. He said, in substance, "We are asking for a temporary extension of this law because we are presently preparing a broader stabilization program to be presented to the Congress, in which we are going to recommend an extension of the voluntary system for not less than 2 years."

Mr. Sawyer stated that such a recommendation was to be included among the recommendations for a broader stabilization program. So it is a little difficult for us on this side to see any valid opposition to our recommendation for a reasonable extension beyond the time recommended by the committee, in view of Mr. Sawyer's declaration of purpose of an extension for 2 years.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Washington that Secretary Sawyer did say that a 2-year extension was to be recommended in the over-all bill. I want the RECORD to show that as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I talked not only with the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Agriculture, but with many others. If there be any fault in recommending this particular provision, it is mine, because I suggested to the various secretaries that I hoped that legislation on this subject would be considered piecemeal, bill by bill, considering separately the Federal Reserve legislation, agricultural legislation, and legislation affecting the Commerce Department. That is one of the reasons why there is no over-all bill at this time. If anyone is to be charged with responsibility for that situation, I am glad to assume the responsibility, because it is my thought that the legislation should be considered bill by bill.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield further?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CAIN. I merely wish to say to the Senator from South Carolina that there was no intention on my part to assess responsibility with reference to the presentation of the pending legislation. We merely take exception to the date. But what is so clearly familiar to members of the Committee on Banking and Currency on both sides of the aisle is not the information which was available to the Senator from Florida. It was for that reason that I wanted to clear in his mind, if I could, the details concerning the subject about which we are actually talking.

Mr. BRICKER and Mr. PEPPER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, so that the RECORD may be clear and that the Senator from Florida may have clearly in mind the facts as to the testimony adduced at the hearings, let me say that the chairman of the committee was very careful to ask every witness whether small business was being adequately considered by the Department and by the industry in the allocations program. The testimony was universal, from all the witnesses, that they were being adequately taken care of. There were present a small-business representative from the Middle West, one from the far West, and one from the Oklahoma and Texas area. Not only did they testify to that effect, but, likewise, the Department of Commerce, through Secretary Sawyer, testified that they were taking care of small business. The administrator of this program testified likewise.

Furthermore, in direct answer to an explicit question as to whether a man desiring to go into the steel business or into a fabricating business or a processing business could get an adequate supply of steel, the Secretary of Commerce testified that an adequate amount had been set aside, or adequate at least under the proportion that had been established and set aside for supplying new businesses, as well as supplying established businesses.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Ohio will not leave the floor until I have an opportunity to present a letter which is on its way here, and to which I should like to call attention.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, during the course of the argument on this matter on December 18, 1947, the distinguished Senator from Wyoming said:

> Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in order to exculpate myself for voting for a measure which contains section 2, I desire to say that I associate myself with everything the Senator from Kentucky has said. I wish to add that, in my judgment, it will be utterly impossible to carry out the provisions of section 2, and that the waiver of the antitrust laws in these circumstances is utterly improper. I wish to express the opinion that the President will find it impossible to approve any agreement drawn under the terms of this joint resolution. Although I am convinced of the impracticality of that portion of this measure, nevertheless, I think I am justified in casting my vote for the joint resolution in order that there may be an extension of the powers of the Government to control exports and to allocate transportation facilities.

Mr. President, I should like to point out that, as learned and distinguished a statesman as I think the Senator from Wyoming is, nevertheless he turned out to be a poor prophet in this case, because the plan has worked, because the President, through the various agencies, provided for the program under the legislation, and the agencies he has authorized to do so have approved the agreements, and they have been effective.

In response to one of the statements made by the Senator from Florida, let me point out that if he feels as strongly as he seems to about the need for compulsory controls to deal with the situation, then let me remind him that if we turn back to the debates of December 17, and 18, 1947, he will find that what was proposed by Senators on his side of the aisle at that time was an amendment which provided for compulsory controls. Feeling as strongly as he does, why does he not offer such an amendment now? I would not vote for it, but he would have an opportunity to do so. Why does not his party offer an amendment providing for the form of controls they urged upon the Congress so vigorously back in those days?

Let me add that the then Senator from Kentucky, Mr. BARKLEY, was the one who ably presented that side of the argument. He urged that the compulsory controls be imposed; and at the end of the argument Senator BARKLEY said this:

> Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I neglected to say that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], who has been called away from Washington because of the death and funeral of his secretary, has just advised me that he wishes to associate himself with the sentiments I have expressed here in regard to this measure; and for the same reasons which I have given as actuating me in casting my vote, he wishes to be recorded as voting for the joint resolution if he were present and voting.

Mr. President, in closing my remarks, I ask this simple question: Why is it that this administration, which now controls a majority of the Congress, which has had so much to say about the subject of high prices, and whose representatives in Congress voted in large part against everything the Republicans had to offer in the Eightieth Congress—why is it that they choose, as the first step in their program to combat high prices, the reenactment, the continuance in force and effect, of a vitally important provision of a measure passed by a Republican-controlled Congress?

My answer to that question, Mr. President, if I may venture one myself, is that they have no better program than the one the Republican Party put through the Eightieth Congress, and which, on the testimony before the committee, and by the fact that they now ask to have it continued, is shown to have worked successfully.

Mr. President, I submit that the voluntary program having worked so successfully, the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Ohio should be adopted.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, when the able junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] was listening to the debate and the discussion a moment ago, he said to me that he had on his desk a letter which pertained to the subject of the discussion. He has obtained the letter, and I now have it before me. It is dated December 21, 1948, and is from the J. Gruman Iron & Steel Co., by J. G. Meyers, of 537 Seventh Avenue North, Minneapolis 11, Minn. The letter is addressed to Mr. William Simms, 3204 Coquelin Terrace, Rock Creek Knoll, Chevy Chase, Md. It reads as follows:

J. GRUMAN IRON & STEEL CO.,
Minneapolis, Minn., December 21, 1948.

Mr. WILLIAM SIMMS,
Rock Creek Knoll, Chevy Chase, Md.

DEAR SIR: We have been attempting to purchase steel for warehousing purposes from several steel mills, but our efforts for the past 4 years have been unsuccessful.

Knowing that Senator-elect HUMPHREY is desirous of helping small businesses, I am taking the liberty of writing to you so as to acquaint you with conditions in the steel industry, and also in the hopes that perhaps you can do something to help us in obtaining steel. The picture briefly is as follows:

In order to obtain new steel in 1944 it was necessary to produce records of past sales, and the mills then permitted you to replenish your stock only to the extent of the amount of the sales. Since we were just getting started in the sale of usable steel, we naturally were only able to buy a small quantity at that time. By the time we were in a position to reorder, the mills adopted a system of allocations, using the years 1939 and 1940 as base years, and apportioning their customers steel on that basis. That left us out of the picture, as we did not handle any steel during those years.

I made several efforts by mail, phone, and personal visits to Inland, Carnegie, and Bethlehem Steel Co.'s, and others, but have been unable to purchase anything from any of them. Our only sources of supply have been other warehouses, and in some instances free-lance brokers, and, as a result, we have paid more for the steel than we would have had to were we able to purchase direct from the mill. Naturally, we have had to charge more than the normal warehouse price when we resold this steel.

I believe that the mills in refusing to sell us steel direct have discriminated against us and have been indirectly responsible for making it necessary for the veteran to pay more than he should have for the I-beam or other steel he needed to build his house. The blacksmith who needed steel to repair farm equipment, the small factory that manufactured farm equipment, and numerous others who needed steel in small quantities and who normally turn to a source like us for their needs had to pay more than they should have.

While I realize that there is a shortage of steel, I feel that, since we were able to get it in roundabout ways, it should have been possible for us to get some steel directly from one or more of the mills I contacted in the last 4 years. Our customers for the most part are contractors, blacksmiths, small factories, and generally people who need small quantities of steel for essential purposes. We are in a position to use from 500 to 1,000 tons per month, and if we were able to obtain the steel from the mills I believe it would be of great benefit to the people we deal with, and in some measure would help the economy of the country.

I would thank you to call Senator-elect HUMPHREY's attention to this letter, and perhaps something can be done to eliminate the discriminatory practice of the mills.

Yours very truly,

J. G. MEYERS.

Mr. President, in my opinion, that letter accurately and fairly depicts the situation. It is exactly the kind of thing that has been brought to my attention by a small steel user in Bradenton, Fla. What is said here about farm implements was brought to my attention by Mr. George Morrow, of Graceville, Fla., telling me about the high gray-market prices, which in substance are the black-market prices, they had to pay to get farm machinery and the steel for farm purposes.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. I take it from what my distinguished friend says that he is very much concerned about the opportunity of small steel users to get steel.

Mr. PEPPER. I certainly am.

Mr. BALDWIN. If that be so, I press the same question I have asked before. When we were debating this subject in December 1947, the former distinguished Senator from Kentucky, who was then minority leader, offered an amendment which would have provided for compulsory controls. If my friend from Florida feels as strongly about it as he does, why does he not offer a similar amendment? Why is it that his party comes forward, not with an amendment calling for compulsory controls, but with one merely asking for continuation of an act already on the books, passed by a Republican Congress? If he feels so strongly as he does, if he believes in compulsory controls, let him offer the amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. I may say to the Senator he must realize, when he views this matter in perspective, that we had a rather effective allocation and price-control system in this country until mid-1946. In mid-1946, with Republican Senators voting almost solidly—and I regret to say, a few Democrats on this side of the aisle joining with them, but only a minority of the Democratic Party membership in Senate and in House—the control system was destroyed. In a little while it had to be eliminated entirely. That is when we had an effective and fair compulsory rationing and allocation system. The President of the United States vetoed the bill, which was designed to destroy those effective and fair rationing, allocation, and price-control provisions. Later on, the President made numerous recommendations for restoration of a compulsory control, allocation, and price system. They were all refused and denied by the Congress, and I may say, solidly, by the Republican membership of both Houses. Later on, when it appeared that that was the only thing he had any possible hope of getting, the President recommended stand-by controls, after the amendment of the then Senator from Kentucky, our present able Vice President, had been defeated. I, of course, voted for the amendment. I am afraid the Senator from Connecticut did not. His colleagues did not, but I certainly voted for it, and most of my colleagues on this side of the aisle voted for it; but it was defeated. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky was defeated, and the Republican majority adopted the voluntary allocation system.

Now, the President comes back to the Congress. He recommends two things—first, that he have stand-by authority which could be used in case of necessity. I hope the Republicans are going to support us Democrats in voting to give the President such authority. The President also sees the shortage of steel in the country, to which this writer has referred, which had been a matter of common knowledge. The President says we must have greater steel production facilities if the economy of America and the world is not to suffer. We are required to limit the amount of steel exports, of course, because of the limited steel production here at home. So he says: "Give me stand-by authority, and give me the authority to bring about, through Government aid if necessary, the production of more steel by providing additional production facilities."

Then we come to this day, when the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, having before it the same evidence that our Republican friends have been able to observe and to hear, recommends a 6 months' extension of the voluntary provision which is now in effect in the law. But the Republicans say "No; we are not satisfied with a 6 months' extension, and giving the Government time and opportunity to study the proposal for new facilities, or to see, in the light of conditions 6 months hence, what may be necessary." They want to say, "No; we will do nothing for 12 months. We will let the Government do nothing for 12 months along the line of providing the steel which is necessary, and assuring its fair distribution to the people of this country." So today, as I say, we come back to a simple issue: Do you favo. this voluntary system for 6 months, with the Government having an opportunity in the meantime to determine what our policy should be thereafter, or are you willing to put the cloak of immunity around the subject for a guaranteed minimum of 12 months, and deprive the Government of the opportunity to review the policy, unless the law is set aside in a shorter period than that? So it seems to me the issue is very clearly drawn on the immediate question of what we should do. At the end of 6 months, it will be determined by circumstances as they exist at that time.

Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. CAIN, and Mr. LANGER addressed the Chair.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield first to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I merely want to call attention to the vote on the passage of the measure to which reference has been made. There has been much talk about the amendment offered by the then Senator from Kentucky. On final passage of the bill, the vote was 77 to 10. I do not see how any side can claim all the credit for this one section of the bill which was passed. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky was defeated by two votes.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I am sure the Senator from Florida is familiar with what has happened because of the fact that the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky was not adopted. Today there are 23,000 miles of REA posts, for which steel cannot be obtained for use in the conductors. There are 23,000 farmers, therefore, who are unable to get power. That is only a small fraction of the number, because posts have been set for thousands of miles, and it is impossible to obtain the wire conductors.

Again, if one goes into a farming community like Minnesota and tries to buy a combine, he will find that a second-hand one costs $5,500. Every crook and grafter in the country has enriched himself by being a parasite on the farmers in the Great Plains States who had crops they had to harvest. They were unable to buy new combines. I myself telephoned to the heads of every manufacturing company engaged in the production and sale of combines or farm machines. In the little county of Hettinger, N. Dak., according to the sworn testimony of the county agent, the farmers lost more than $1,000,000 on crops, because they could not obtain repairs for the old binders and combines they had—$1,000,000 in one county.

Again, when it comes to well tubing, there is an institution that needs well tubing. The institution is connected with a veteran's home and with trailer camps. It took me over 3 weeks, with all the support I got from the War Assets Administration, to locate tubing for even a quarter of a mile.

Compare the prices of farm machinery with the prices the farmers are getting today for their products. On page 2 of the report it is stated that the President delegated his authority under section 2, of the law enacted by the Eightieth Congress, to the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce. How did the farmers fare? Let us take hogs. What happened to the price of hogs? The high during last year was $31.75 a hundred. A week ago, it was $20.50. Now it is less. Steers were $39. Two weeks ago they were $28.25. Heifers dropped from $35.50 to $25.50—$10. The price of cows dropped from $24.75 to $19. The price of oats dropped from $1.39½ to 65½ cents.

Mr. MAYBANK. What about the price of steel?

Mr. LANGER. I do not have the figures for steel. I think the price increased, as a matter of fact.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator is showing how farm prices have suffered. In the last half of last year United States Steel made as much profit as it made in the whole previous year.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Let us consider the price of eggs. The price dropped from 33 cents to 23 cents. The price of butter, in Chicago, dropped from 88⅜ cents to 57½ cents. The price of apples dropped from $3.83 to $1.12.

That is the situation which has developed so far as agriculture is concerned.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Is it not true that the price of fats and oils has gone down by a very large percentage?

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. President, in the Middle West it is not possible to buy automobiles promptly. They are sold with one hand under the counter, trying to get a few hundred dollars more.

As a Republican on this side of the aisle, I simply want to say that I agreed with the position taken by the Senator from Kentucky at the time his amendment was offered, so far as the farmers are concerned.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, much has been said regarding this so-called Republican measure. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] a few minutes ago rather took the majority of the Banking and Currency Committee to task for bringing forth a measure which seeks to extend only one provision of the law. I believe it might be well for us to consider why the committee has done that particular thing.

First, Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that this so-called Republican law was, as the able chairman of the committee has pointed out, passed by the vote of every Democrat with the exception of eight. Two Republicans voted against the bill, and eight Democrats voted against it. In other words, it passed with almost the unanimous support of this body, in spite of the fact that it contained a provision relating to the antitrust laws to which many Members were conscientiously opposed.

There were given to the President three powers which expire on a particular date. Section 2 expires on February 28, 1949; section 3 expires on that date; and section 4 expires on that date. Those are the only three provisions which have an expiration date.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Did not he and the other members of the committee believe that we should first take up those provisions which expired in February and March before going into the consideration of new legislation?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is exactly correct. In accord with the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, I personally spoke to Secretary Brannan who, as I understood, would handle this legislation before the respective committees, and suggested to him that instead of waiting to bring all these measures forward in one package, we should act early on the particular measures which had an early expiration date. Of the two measures which came to us—and, as I recall, they both came at the same time—one related to voluntary allocations of scarce materials, and the other to export controls. We first took up the matter of voluntary allocations. There was a reason for considering that matter first. As I pointed out a few minutes ago, that power expires on February 28 of this year. Unless there is an early extension, the whole effectiveness of the program will be lost for a certain period of time. It requires about 60 days to work out one of these voluntary agreements, because certain notices are required and certain invitations are sent to members to come in and participate. A committee has to be established and notice given to the public in order that anyone who may be interested may appear and be heard.

If Senators will read the hearings before our committee it will be seen that the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Sawyer, very pointedly said that if we are to avoid a delay, this extension must be made quickly.

That is the reason for our acting first on this particular measure. Other measures will be before the Senate before very long. The question of allocations of transportation facilities for grain will come up very shortly before our committee, and in ample time a bill will be reported to the Senate relating to that particular subject.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. As I understand, the first step of the President's program is to continue in force section 2 of a measure passed by a Republican-controlled Congress. The second step, as I understand, in the anti-inflation program is to continue in effect another section of a bill passed by a Republican-controlled Congress. Is that correct?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I do not say it is offered in such a sequence as the Senator suggests. I just finished stating that different members of the Banking and Currency Committee asked that this legislation be in a form in which it could be acted on quickly. Particularly we were interested in the voluntary-agreement legislation because of the 60-day period which is necessary to put any agreement into effect and make it operative.

If the Senator will allow me, I do not want to rest only on that statement; I should like to go on, because I think I know the next question which the Senator will ask is whether we could not extend it just as quickly for a longer period of time.

There are reasons why this stop-gap legislation is desirable at this particular time. I shall mention one. There are many things which have not yet been fully studied and cannot be fully studied by our committee and given the thorough consideration they should have, in order to have legislation perfected and passed before February 28. Even if that were done, there would be a 60-day drag, which I mentioned a few minutes ago.

For instance, on January 19 the Secretary of Commerce, I believe it was, issued a press release regarding the misuse of some steel which had been allocated under one of these voluntary agreements. He has referred that matter to the Attorney General. It is not yet known whether or not the party charged can be prosecuted under the law as it exists today for a very definite infringement of what was intended under such a voluntary agreement as that which has been approved by the Attorney General's office.

It was stated a few minutes ago that the Secretary of Agriculture has not yet given his opinion as to how the act has worked with reference to the farmers; that the Secretary of the Interior has not yet told us how it has worked with reference to many of the metals, minerals, and scarce materials, basic materials—our natural resources. In other words, we have not been able, and we will not be able before February 28, to give to this law the kind of careful study it should have before we take a step toward continuing it to some far distant future date.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. In regard to the extension of the particular section under discussion, section 2, granting that there are in contemplation all the plans he mentions to propose further legislation, what harm would come if the law were extended for a year? The other legislation could still be offered. The limitation date suggested by the bill would end the program when Congress presumably would not be in session. The limitation which the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio places on the program would make it expire when the Congress was in session.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let me answer briefly, and then I shall yield.

We certainly do not plan to wait until Congress has adjourned and will have to be called back into special session, as was the case with the Eightieth Congress. We plan to act before the present session of Congress adjourns.

The Senator asked me why we should not do what is proposed by the Senator from Ohio. I might ask in the same language, why not do what the committee has suggested, and when the permanent program, or the regular program, comes before us, if that is not satisfactory to the Senator from Connecticut, then he can propose an extension to suit his wishes at that time.

I now yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have been asking myself the very question which the able Senator from Connecticut has just asked the Senator from Alabama, and I have resolved by own thoughts in support of the committee's position, for the reason that if we extend the program through to March 1950, and then find that the extension has been too long, and we desire to pass some other legislation, we will be in the position of having told the steel industry, for example, that up until March of next year this will be the plan upon which they can proceed to do business, whereas if we extend it only until September of this year, we have then the option of extending it still further if we think that is the desirable thing to do, or writing substitute legislation prior to September 1949, in either of which events we will not have told the industry it can proceed for a definite length of time, and then change the rules before that length of time has passed. So, in answering that question for myself, in complete sympathy with the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, I have found that I cannot support it because to do so and then vote for legislation which would take effect prior to March 1950 would be the equivalent of changing the rules after the steel industry had proceeded to act upon the basis first presented. Therefore, for that reason, it seems to me that as between the two alternatives, the safer policy and the fairer way in which to treat the subject would be to give industry a definite date when they can act in complete confidence that the rules will be thus and so, and subsequently to extend the time for six more months if that should be found to be desirable, or to curtail it beginning September 1949 rather than to take the other alternative, of extending the time for a full year, and then make a new policy before the full year has run out. I think for that reason the committee date is the preferable of the two proposed.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I am certainly indebted to the able Senator from Maryland for what I consider to be an absolutely correct analysis of the situation.

Furthermore, suppose we extend the time to some date beyond September of the year 1949, and agreements are drawn up looking to that date, and those agreements, according to the provisions of the law, are approved by the Attorney General of the United States in the face of the antitrust laws; and suppose further that we find, or the Attorney General finds, that a party could not be prosecuted under one of those agreements; then we would have hanging over our heads every one of the commitments which had been entered into, and they would be fast commitments until March 30, 1950.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator by illustration has supported the exact point I raised, that Congress should not place itself in a position where it purports to tell business it can proceed under one set of rules, and then, if it desires to change the rules, and actually does change them, puts business in the position of having made commitments for the future which are canceled automatically by a change of the legislation fixing a date prior to the first date the Congress fixed.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. In a moment. I do not care to get into a legal argument with the Senator from Maryland, with whom I am in agreement, but it seems to me we might find ourselves even more embarrassed than as he states it, because I am of the opinion that the agreements which are made will become commitments, will become obligations, contracts will be made under them which we cannot cancel, and they will become binding in the face of the antitrust statutes which we waive by this so-called Republican measure.

By the way, Mr. President, in that connection, I am delighted to see the Senator from Connecticut deriving so much pleasure out of one Republican measure that did work. I hope he will get full pleasure out of it. It is the first one that came out of the Eightieth Congress, I have yet heard of that he or anyone else on the other side, or anywhere in the country, could boast of, even though it was passed with almost the unanimous support of the Democrats in the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more observation? If so, I will not interrupt him again.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. If we make September 30, 1949, the termination date to which these voluntary agreements may run, and then desire to extend the time for six more months, we can do so, and thereby adopt what the so-called Republican measure purports to have done. On the other hand, if we extend it until March 1950 and find that we desire to contract it to a date within that period, we run into the very situation which the Senator from Alabama is discussing, namely, of having told business it can proceed under one set of rules and having business proceed on that expectancy, and then before the expectancy has terminated, have Congress say, "Notwithstanding you have made contracts and agreements upon the theory that you had a year to go, we are going to give you only 6 months," and thereby in the courts and in other places where controversies are discussed and settled bring into question our authority to curtail the time because contracts were made in good faith.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I thank the Senator from Maryland. By the way, there is another thing to keep in mind, too. In extending this stopgap legislation, as is proposed, for a period of 6 months, we are in effect bringing the cut-off date and the effective date to the same time. In other words, it is just a halfway extension, after all, because under the law as it now exists these agreements can be entered into up to February 28, but deliveries may continue to be made under them until September 30, 1949, or during a 6-month period, so that what we are really doing is to bring the two dates together.

Mr. President, I said something a moment ago about the pleasure some of the distinguished Members across the aisle are deriving from the fact that a Democratic Senate now is asking for a continuation of a Republican measure, and there has been much said here about how well this measure has worked. I agree that so far as it has gone it has worked well. But how far has it gone? Only a very small number of agreements have been entered into, most of them dealing with steel and steel products.

It has been said here that small business has indicated its complete satisfaction. I do not want to be understood as agreeing to any such statement as that. As a matter of fact, we had two representatives of small business before our committee. We had one other witness from Arkansas who really presented the case of the failure of the agreement to provide pipe to enable the opening of the Jones Mill aluminum plant, designed to produce aluminum, which is certainly in critical shortage in this country, and he said the plan had not worked in that instance.

Furthermore, Mr. President, I placed in the RECORD the protest I had received from some small-business men in my State. It had to do with one of the things the able Senator from North Dakota mentioned, soil pipe, which is absolutely essential for any housing program that may be undertaken. I do not know whether it is generally known, but the great center of the soil-pipe industry of the United States, and in fact the greatest in all the world, is located in my State, in the Birmingham-Gadsden-Anniston-Tuscaloosa area. Sixty-eight percent of all the soil pipe produced in the United States is made there. So I believe I know something of what has been happening with respect to the soil-pipe manufacturers in connection with iron and steel.

Reference has been made at different times to one or two individual plants. Mr. President, I want to say that it has not been a small matter with me. Complaints have come in from small-business men engaged in the manufacture of soil pipe. I placed in the RECORD a short quotation from one of the letters I had received, in which the writer stated that the voluntary agreement, so far as he was concerned, simply would not work and that was all there was to it. I remember he came to my office and talked with me personally after he had attended the industry committee meeting here, and he told me the agreement was not going to work. I asked him why. He said, "The Big Steel boys first say how much we are going to receive. Then we are supposed to form a committee to see how that is to be divided among ourselves, and of course that committee will be made up of the large users, the regular customers of the big steel companies, and they are going to receive just what they have been receiving."

I submit, Mr. President, that the record in this case shows that very largely that prediction came true. For instance, a soil-pipe manufacturer in my State wrote me that, whereas some of the big producers of soil pipe were able to buy pig iron in the Birmingham area at $36 a ton, he could not buy it there. The allocation program was not helping him to obtain $36-a-ton pig iron. He was obliged to buy pig iron from Texas, and pay $75 a ton for it. Yet he had to go on the market and compete with the manufacturers or with the syndicate the members of which were able to buy their pig iron at $36 a ton. I have received many complaints on the subject.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] referred to the fact that many manufacturers in his State used steel and steel products, but that he had received no complaints with respect to the shortage of steel. I want to tell of a friend of mine in Birmingham who called me on the telephone not long ago, and said, "I am simply being starved out of business. I cannot obtain iron." He told me a story. I said, "I wish you would write me a letter to that effect. What you have told me are facts which I should like to see referred to the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, to the Small Business Committee, and to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I should like to make some use of this matter." He said, "Oh, no, I am not going to write you a letter. I do not dare do that. If I wrote you a letter and it got out I would not even receive the small amount of steel I am now receiving."

I was interested in the extension of a natural gas pipe line in my area of the State.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. I should like to read a statement made by the administrator in charge of the program, as it appears on page 9 of the hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency on January 25, 1949. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] asked the question:

> Here is an elementary question:
> Once a firm has made its request known, does it automatically share in the allocation?
> Mr. CLARK. If it has made its request known, it does share, providing it qualifies in terms of the product required and the type of end product which is being produced. If they qualify, they are then taken care of.

I recall to the Senator's mind the testimony of Secretary Sawyer as it appears on page 6 of the record, wherein he mentioned cast iron pipe radiation, plumbing-drainage products, and cast-iron soil pipe particularly, which is manufactured largely in the Senator's State, and he said there were 40 participating firms, of whom 35 qualified as small business. That may not encompass the industry, but certainly it would seem that the small business in the soil-pipe industry has been taken into consideration, and sits as a part of the committee which makes the allocation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Sawyer said that they had the privilege of participating, and that a great many small businesses had participated. However, if anyone wants to see the extent to which small business has participated, I simply refer him to a table on page 48 of the hearings, and suggest that he compare the number of small businesses given there to the number of small businesses throughout the United States.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. THYE. No problem with which I have been confronted in the past year has caused as much work, worry, and concern as the shortage of steel to the small-business man. I honestly believe that if it had not been for the Small Business Committee functioning in Congress the small-business man would have had a greater problem than he actually did have. The Small Business Committee did a splendid job, as I observed it, in policing the affairs of the big steel companies to see that small business was given a certain amount of steel in every monthly allocation.

I do not care to hold a post mortem over yesterday. What I am concerned about is this: Do the facts, as the committee now finds them, show that the future will be brighter and that there will be more steel for the small-business men, or is there a necessity at this time actually to put into effect positive, rigid control? That is the question I think we are all wrestling with. Is it necessary to fix positive controls? If it is, we should be moving in that direction. If it is not, then surely we should extend the time through the interim, or the fall months, when we expect Congress to be in recess, into the next year when Congress will be back in session. In that view of the case, then an extension for a period of a year would be more reasonable than an extension for 6 months. So the whole question is: If we are going to have ample steel then we might as well extend the voluntary agreement provision for a year. If we are not, then we might as well talk about regimentation and doing something about it, rather than merely converse about it.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield for one question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. I take it from what my distinguished friend, the Senator from Alabama, has said, that he considers the situation to be still critical and grave?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Does the Senator refer to the shortage of steel?

Mr. BALDWIN. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I consider the situation critical and grave. I may call the attention of the Senator to the fact that Mr. Sawyer, in response to a question I put to him, said that he anticipated the shortage for 1949 would be 7,000,000 tons.

Mr. BALDWIN. If that is the case, I should like to recall to my friend's mind that when we were debating the subject in December 1947, an amendment was offered to section 2 of the bill, the extension of whose provisions we are discussing by the then minority leader the distinguished Senator from Kentucky,

Mr. BARKLEY, providing for a system of compulsory controls. That amendment is still in existence somewhere. My question is this: If my friends on the other side of the aisle feel that this is so urgent, and requires immediate attention, why do they not bring forward that amendment and let us have an issue on the question of compulsory controls now? Why postpone it? Why delay? Why not have a show-down now? The people of the country were given to understand that if control over the Congress were placed in Democratic hands, the matter of prices would be disposed of in short order. We have been in session for four weeks, and the first measure which comes before us to deal with the question of prices is the continuance of a Republican measure. Now my friend tells me that the next measure to come before us is to call for the continuance of another Republican measure. I ask my friend, if he is so disturbed about this thing, why he does not offer as an amendment the amendment which was offered a year and a half ago? It was most earnestly urged at that time that that amendment was the type of legislation needed to deal with this situation. Why does not my friend offer such an amendment?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am very glad my friend the Senator from Connecticut asked that question. I am also glad to have the question of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE]. I believe that the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota are quite pertinent to the discussion we are having. There is a shortage of steel——

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. May I finish answering the question?

Mr. BRICKER. I merely wished to verify some figures.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Having to do with the tonnage of the shortage?

Mr. BRICKER. Yes. The Secretary of Commerce did say that, according to his best estimates, there was a shortage of 7,000,000 tons, including our European shipments, upon a production basis of 68,000,000 tons this year of finished products. That was based upon a production of steel ingots estimated at 92,000,000 tons. The production in January, if carried throughout the year, would give us 97,000,000 tons of steel ingots, which would raise the production of finished products to approximately 72,000,000 or 73,000,000 tons, an increase over the estimate by the Secretary of Commerce. Likewise, production in Europe is going up rapidly. Production in Germany, France, Belgium, and England is increasing, so there will be a more adequate supply there, which might cut down the amount estimated for export, of 4,200,000 tons, which would, of course, narrow the difference between supply and demand in this country. As the best proof of that, in 1947 foreign shipments were, as I recall, 6,600,000 tons. Last year they were 4,600,000 tons, and the estimate for this year is 4,200,000 tons. If our production of ingots remains where it was this month, there will not be a difference of 7,000,000 tons, but it will be appreciably smaller than that. Frankly, on the basis of the estimate and the production capacity, I believe that if there is no interruption by strikes or in the supply of some of the component parts, there will be almost an adequate supply of steel by the end of this year, if not quite an adequate supply to take care of the domestic and foreign needs.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Ohio for his suggestions. I certainly hope that his hope may be realized. I know of nothing that would be better for the economy of the country than for that to come to pass. However, I know that the Senator from Ohio would be one of the first to realize that the statement he has just made had six or eight different contingencies in it. It is one of the "iffiest" statements I have ever heard. I think it may very well serve as an answer to the question propounded by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE]. We do not know whether rigid controls are going to be necessary. A year ago last December I supported the amendment for rigid controls, and I have no apology for having supported the amendment. I still believe that had that amendment been written into law we would have been much better off from the standpoint of manufacture of steel and steel products, and all the various products of which steel is the basic material.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I have listened nearly all afternoon to the debate upon this subject, and especially the questions which have been repeated over and over by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN]. At least five distinct times he has asked why some Senator does not offer the amendment which was offered by the distinguished Vice President when he was a Senator, 2 years ago. He has claimed all the credit for the measure which was enacted by the Republican-controlled Congress.

At this point I think it is well to remind the Senate that the only way the Republicans got back into session in 1947 was that the President of the United States, Harry S. Truman, called Congress back into extraordinary session to do something about inflation after the Republicans had adjourned the Congress. It was through the efforts of the President that any legislation whatever was enacted having anything to do with the problem of inflation. I mention that in passing.

I agree with the Senator from Alabama that if the Senator from Connecticut can get any enjoyment out of this legislation he is welcome to it. Instead of criticizing and condemning us for trying to continue it for 6 months, he ought to be commending us and thanking us for going along with such a wonderful piece of legislation enacted by the Eightieth Congress, which was Republican-controlled.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may say a word in response?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to my friend from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. Let me point out to my distinguished friend that I am enjoying this discussion, because, as I stated in my previous remarks, I am not only surprised but I am astounded that after 2 years of debate on what the Democrats would do to combat high prices if they once got in control of the Congress the very first step is to continue in force and effect a Republican measure, and their second step is going to be to continue in force and effect another one.

If this problem is so urgent, why do we not have the legislation which we were led to believe we were going to have? Apparently we do not have it because what the Republicans did is working. That is demonstrated by the fact that the Democrats now ask to have it continued. It is demonstrated by the fact that the heads of the agencies downtown say that it is adequate and is working. I do not believe that we ought to allow this occasion to pass without taking some note of that fact.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me say in response to my friend from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] that I have never seen anyone really excited or astounded who was also happy. The Senator from Connecticut may be happy about this measure, but he has also been astounded all afternoon by the fact that we dared bring in a proposal to continue something which the Republican-controlled Congress adopted 2 years ago. The only reason Republicans adopted any sort of an anti-inflation measure was, as I previously stated, that the President of the United States, Hon. Harry S. Truman, called the Congress back into session at that time and prodded it into action upon the serious question of inflation. It did nothing until the latter part of December of 1947, and then only in self-defense.

The Republicans took all the time they wanted in order to bring forth these few little popgun anti-inflation measures.

Now, because the President of the United States wants a little time, working with the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior, and other agencies of the executive branch of Government who are vitally concerned with economic stabilization, we find this political criticism on the opposite side of the aisle. We are criticized because we do not rush in and do this, that, or the other thing. So far as the Senator from Illinois is concerned, if I can only get my brethren on this side of the aisle to go along with me, we will control the date for the enactment of legislation instead of letting the Republicans do it.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President——

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, let me say a few words in my own time, and then I shall be glad to yield again. Particularly do I wish to yield to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], who has been on his feet for some time.

Before we get too far away, I should like to correct the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] in connection with one statement which he made, in fact, in connection with several statements.

I admit that the measure which we are considering today was passed by the Republican-controlled Congress as a substitute for the anti-inflation program recommended by the President, and advocated in legislation introduced by the then able minority leader, who is now Vice President. But when the Senator from Connecticut talks about export controls being Republican legislation, I should like to call his attention to the fact that that legislation has been on the statute books since 1940, and all the Republican Congress did was simply to extend it. When it comes to the question of the allocation of transportation facilities for grain, I should like to call his attention to the fact that that was provided for in the War Powers Act of 1942. So I do not know but that perhaps he has been getting a little too much pleasure out of what we Democrats propose to do with this so-called Republican measure.

I say again that I am glad we did find a little good in one measure they presented. I do not agree with him when he says it was adequate. It was not adequate; it has not been adequate. It has accomplished some good, and I hope that when we have had an opportunity to study this measure in the light of testimony that will be given to our committee by the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior, and—do not forget—the Attorney General, and the Secretary of Commerce, we may be able to continue a voluntary system of allocations that will be workable. I am not saying that I believe we shall be able to do so. In 1947 I supported the amendment for compulsory allocations, and I think we could have done an adequate job under it. I do not think we have done an adequate job under the present law; but it may be that we can stop up enough loopholes to make it adequate, so that rigid controls will not be necessary. But today as a committee we are not in position to recommend to the Senate that that be done.

I should like to call the attention of the able Senator from Minnesota to the fact that recently it was discovered that one iron fabricator was obtaining iron for use in the manufacture of warm-air heaters, but, instead, was using it for the manufacture of shoeshine stands. That question has been submitted to the Attorney General. We are not at all certain that this Republican measure of 1947 will permit the Attorney General to proceed against that man. Certainly if we can stop up loopholes such as that—and we do not know how many more there will be—we can increase the amount of iron that can be allocated to the processors and the fabricators all over the United States. It may be that we can work out a system whereby we can obtain assurance that the 26,000 miles of rural electrification lines can be supplied with the necessary conductors, so that 100,000 or more farm homes can be supplied with electricity. It may be that we can stop up enough loopholes to make the law workable. If we can, I assure the Senate that the Banking and Currency Committee will be glad to return with a recommendation that it be continued, not only for 1 year, but for 2 years. The Secretary of Commerce indicated in his testimony that that is what he was talking about.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I followed the statement of the Senator from Alabama with respect to what the other side hopes to accomplish in the way of providing more steel for more purposes for more people. However, I cannot understand how the extension of the voluntary agreements act for an additional 6 months beyond September could prejudice that program in the slightest. Will the Senator please address himself to that question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I spent perhaps 10 minutes or more in talking about that matter some little time ago. There was an exchange of suggestions between the able Senator from Maryland and myself with reference to it. Perhaps the Senator from Oregon was unfortunately detained from the floor of the Senate at that time.

However, with the indulgence of the other Senators, I do not mind restating very briefly what was said at that time. Under the law as it now stands, the power to enter into these agreements expires February 28. However, there is a 6-month extension within which the agreements made may be effective.

All we are doing in this bill is to bring the first date up to the latter date, so that the whole thing would be extended to September 30, 1949.

Mr. CORDON. I understand that perfectly. But what happens within another 6 months?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I hope the Senator will keep in mind the fact that a part of this law is a waiver of the Antitrust Act with reference to these particular agreements. Suppose we extend the law to March 30, 1949, and suppose voluntary agreements are made before there is any change in the law, and assume that later a change is made. To my way of thinking—and I believe the Senator from Oregon will agree with me—every one of those agreements, voluntarily entered into, and approved by the Attorney General of the United States, would become a commitment. The Antitrust Act would be waived so far as those particular agreements were concerned.

Later on, after we have made the thorough study and have listened to the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, and have taken their recommendations, even though we may decide that we want to stop up some of the loopholes, any proposals of that sort cannot be applied to the agreements which have been entered into prior to the enactment of the subsequent measure.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. Does the Senator know of any provision in the present law which requires the President to extend these agreements beyond any time which his pleasure and judgment dictate should be their limit? Let me call the attention of the Senator for a moment to the law itself. I am reading from page 3, section 2, subparagraph (b) of the original law:

> The President is authorized to approve any such agreement which he finds will carry out any of the purposes declared in section 1 of this joint resolution, except that he shall not approve any agreement unless such agreement specifically provides that it shall cease to be effective on or before March 1, 1949.

Does the Senator agree that that is authority for the President to make an agreement for the full period or one-half of the period or any other fraction of the period which in his judgment is proper?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I say to the Senator that that question has been submitted to the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. CORDON. Does not the Senator understand the plain language?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Attorney General has held that whereas no agreement could be entered into subsequent to February 28, 1949, nevertheless, once the agreement is made, deliveries could continue to be made under that agreement for 6 months.

Mr. CORDON. The bill now before the Senate, as amended, contains an amendment to the provision in the original act, and it is to be found at the bottom of the single sheet, which is Senate bill 547. That proposed amendment is:

> (f) This section shall expire on September 30, 1949, and any requests made and voluntary plans adopted under this section shall have no force or effect thereafter.

The plain purpose of that is to require that the execution of all agreements be within the period of the maximum limitation, which here is set in September, and which some on this side prefer to extend until next March. If that be the case, is it not the Senator's opinion of this plain language that the President might well develop and properly make agreements to extend say from this or any immediate period to, let us say, the last of May, the last of June, or the first of July, the end of the year, or any other period, and thus maintain within himself the power not only to use any standby control which he may get, if he gets it, but also the power to make these agreements, which power will lapse at the time set in this amendment, or on the 1st of March, whichever date is taken? Would it not be better for the country if the President were given the power to use his judgment under, mind you, Mr. President, the approval of the Attorney General as to the wisdom and legality of his action, and let that power continue so that he may get voluntary agreements, if he can, with his reserved right, if he gets it, to use the whip?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I may say to the honorable Senator from Oregon, I think I was in error a few moments ago in saying that the Attorney General had given an official opinion to the effect that deliveries could be made until September 30, 1949, but it is my understanding that that is the opinion of the officials who are administering the act, and that the matter has been submitted to the Attorney General. But let me call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to the fact that on August 18, 1948, a letter went to Secretary Sawyer from the acting majority leader, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], in which he stated his interpretation of the law. At that time, the Senator from Nebraska was chairman, if I remember correctly, of the Special Senate Committee To Study Problems of American Small Business, and he was writing in that capacity. He of course, as the able Senator knows, is now minority leader. He wrote to Secretary Sawyer, stating that his interpretation of the law had been checked with the Banking and Currency Committee—which, by the way, was under the control of the Republican majority and which had on it three members of the Small Business Committee—and his interpretation was that agreements made prior to March 1, 1949, could continue in existence for 6 months thereafter. He further stated, at the same time, that the Attorney General agreed with his view.

Secretary Sawyer, in reply to the Senator from Nebraska and the Small Business Committee, and the Republican Congress, said that he would abide by the interpretation, and would proceed on the assumption that agreements made prior to March 1, 1949, would continue to be in effect for 6 months thereafter, in accordance with the suggestion that came down to him from the Republican leadership of the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Very briefly. I want to conclude.

Mr. CORDON. I regret that I have taken so much of the Senator's time. I am deeply appreciative.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am not complaining. I merely said I would like to yield briefly, because I do not want to prolong my own remarks.

Mr. CORDON. I assure the Senator that with the few remarks I have made I shall not interrupt him further. I am deeply appreciative of the Senator's courtesy.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I have no desire to prolong the discussion further. The one point I think we should keep in mind is that we, the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, considered the pending legislation and voted for it. As I recall, at the time the vote was taken, there were 10 members present, and the vote was 8 to 2. Eight Democrats to two Republicans voted to report the legislation favorably. We realized it was a stop-gap measure. We were not asking for anything else. All in the world we were asking was that the voluntary agreement law, accomplishing whatever good it was accomplishing, be continued until we had a chance to hear from other interested persons regarding it, and could make a recommendation as to whether it should be continued for a longer period of time; and, if so, with what amendments; or, if not, what substitute legislation should be offered.

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. BALDWIN addressed the Chair.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. LUCAS. Was there any testimony before the committee with respect to continuation of the emergency legislation beyond the 6 months' period?

Mr. SPARKMAN. There were a few questions, I think, put to Secretary Sawyer, which may be said to bear upon it, but no direct testimony. We did not go into that question at all.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, the question whether it should be continued for 6 months or a year arose at the conclusion of all the testimony, did it not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. And in executive session.

Mr. LUCAS. Those who are now seeking to continue it for 1 year failed to produce a single material witness before the committee in support of that being done?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Or even to cross-examine the witnesses who had come before the committee for the purpose of recommending the 6-month stopgap legislation.

Mr. LUCAS. Did they ever give an excuse as to why they did not produce witnesses before the committee or present evidence bearing upon the continuation for a year?

Mr. SPARKMAN. None whatever.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BRICKER. I wish to correct the Senator's statement that the bill was ordered reported to the Senate by a vote of 8 to 2. After the amendment was defeated by a vote, as I recall, of 8 to 2, the bill was then ordered reported favorably by the unanimous vote of the committee.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator is correct. I meant that the question of the extension of time was decided by a vote of 8 to 2. The committee was unanimous in favorably reporting the bill, which is before the Senate today.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the Senator from Connecticut asking the Senator from Alabama to yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. No. I request the floor in my own right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I can see no harm in continuing the method of voluntary allocation, which apparently has worked so successfully, for a longer period than September 30. Of course, the reason which has been advanced by the proponents of the measure for continuing the law to September 30—and I may say I intend to vote for it—is that it is desired to continue in force and effect the present law until something better is found. Presumably, they think they can find something better. I say that in the face of the fact that all the testimony before the committee, even including the agencies downtown having charge of such matters, was to the effect that this had worked very successfully.

I assume that what may be proposed ultimately is a method whereby the President may impose some real controls. I submit that provision is already in the act, and I call the attention of the chairman of the committee, and the attention of my distinguished friend from Alabama, to section 6, which sets up a procedure whereby the President can secure from the Congress legislation providing for the control of any specific commodity which he may find to be in short supply. It may be, Mr. President, that while the Congress was under the control of a Republican majority, the President or the administration may have anticipated that such approval would not be forthcoming.

But that is not now the situation. Under the provisions of section 6, a President who was elected as a Democrat could come to a Congress controlled by a majority of Democrats in both Houses and lay before them his program to establish compulsory controls and, I assume, secure very prompt action on it.

When we read section 6 of this act, which was passed by a Republican-controlled Congress, along with a provision for the extension of voluntary controls, there is a complete program to deal with the question. I take it that all of us would prefer to see private business and individual enterprise do the job. Many of us think that when it fails to do the job it should be prodded into doing it. Some of us may think that if private enterprise fails to do the job the Government should step in and supplement its controls.

I submit that the act as it presently stands is admirably designed to do that very thing. So, if we were to continue it for a period of years instead of for six months, there is still in the act a provision whereby the President could ask for the enforcement of specific controls on particular items.

So, Mr. President, I think that in order to have a well-rounded program we could well adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, continuing the provision for a year.

I close by saying, Mr. President, that I am happy indeed that the first step in the President's program to control inflation is the adoption and the continuance of a measure enacted by a Republican-controlled Congress more than a year ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, the subject has been rather fully debated, but it may be that not sufficient attention has been paid to the legal effect of the law as it now exists and of the powers which would continue if the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio should be adopted and an extension of the act thereby made.

There seems to be some misunderstanding as to exactly what the act means. It would appear to the Senator from Oregon to be perfectly clear. Perhaps it is not. The authority granted to the President to negotiate agreements in the public interest with private industry in the field of allocations is an added power granted to the President which would be, except for this act, nonexistent, because it permits agreements which, except for this authority, would be in conflict with and prohibited by the antitrust laws. When the act was drawn the language was made very specific, in that no agreement could be made until the President, as the Chief Executive of the United States, should find it in the public interest, and then only after clearance from the Attorney General. If both those protections were thrown around the power granted, even a Republican majority in the Eightieth Congress was willing to trust a Democratic President of the United States with that power, which no Congress had ever permitted except in an emergency, in time of war.

When that power was granted to the President, it was not in the form of a command. It was a power which the President might or might not exercise. That would depend on whether it was found by him to be in the public interest. It was a power that he might exercise for a short time or for any length of time up to the maximum limit provided in the act.

There is no requirement in the act that agreements made by the Chief Executive must extend for the full maximum period. That is a matter which is discretionary with the President. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio prevails and this power is extended until the end of March of next year, there is no requirement that the President shall use it at all. He may make agreements for 1, 2, 3, 7, or any other number of months that he feels will best serve the public interest, provided only that the agreement does not go beyond the last day of March.

The arguments we hear that if this extension be granted to March 31 of next year, the President may be administering another act and that private industry will not know where it stands, to me is twaddle. There is no basis for it in the law as it exists or in the extension which is suggested. If we grant the President this additional power he will simply be in the most enviable position in which any president of a republic could ever wish to be. He will have the power to negotiate a voluntary agreement. He will have the power to carry out agreements for a long period of time if he shall deem it necessary, or make no agreement unless, in his judgment, it should be made. In any case in which he may make an agreement which is not carried out he would be justified in using any other power he might have. On the other hand, if after such extension there be given stand-by control, there is nothing in the stand-by control that would in any way apply to any private industry which was already operating voluntarily under agreement.

Mr. President, I can see no reason under the shining sun why this extension should not be made. I cannot understand why Senators on the other side of the aisle would not gladly accept the amendment. It is certainly in line with all the ideas and ideals of self-government.

The very thought of stand-by controls is predicated upon the basic proposition that such controls are not now needed, but that they should be available some time in the future if they shall be needed. Certainly if my friends on the other side of the aisle believe in that philosophy—and I believe in it—they should welcome the opportunity for the Chief Executive, who is also of their political faith, to have an opportunity to carry out this allocation on a voluntary basis, by voluntary agreement, rather than to establish all the intricate machinery necessary to force industry, as has been done in the sorry past.

There is no political aspect in this matter, so far as I am concerned. To me it would appear that my friends on the other side of the aisle should accept this amendment and be glad to do so. There can be no prejudice either to industry, the public, or the standing of the President in accepting this amendment for the period of time stated. On the other hand, Mr. President, if we do not extend it, what will happen? My friend from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], in his presentation a little while ago, said, in substance—I do not claim to quote him exactly—that we do not know that stand-by controls will be used or that it will be necessary to use them. I say to my friend from Alabama that if the bill passes according to the way in which it was reported on the floor, so that the voluntary-control provision expires on the 30th day of September of this year, all he will do is to guarantee that the controls must be put on under authority of that reserve stand-by power, because he will have taken from his own President the right to make such an agreement beyond the 30th day of September. Certainly it is not intended to do that. Certainly no one desires to set up all the intricate machinery of control and allocation if it be unnecessary.

There must be some other reason for this limitation as of September 30, when we realize that September 30 would represent the day in all the year upon which we could be almost morally certain that Congress would not be in session. If this act be continued only to September 30, we are taking a permissive authority from the President at a time when we cannot give it back to him. If we pass the bill but leave that date in the act, then we shall hear the argument made, "We must give the stand-by controls, or after the 30th day of September there will be no power of agreement and allocation." I hope, Mr. President, that that is not what is sought. That is not in the public interest.

There has been offered a sound and constructive amendment, to increase the period of time until the last of March of next year. That entire period of time can be utilized by the President, or not at all, as he sees fit. That time goes sufficiently far into the next session of the Congress to afford Congress an opportunity to determine whether the time for voluntary agreements should be extended even further. Any stand-by control that may be enacted can go side by side without any inconsistency whatever with that power, and we may, and I hope we will, find in that event that the record made of voluntary agreements, and the administration of those agreements, the keeping of those agreements by industry, will make unnecessary any execution or use of any control power which may be vested as a mandatory authority in the President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER].

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I question not in the slightest the excellent motives of the distinguished Senator from Ohio in offering his amendment, and I think I understand, from the able arguments made, that there are some reasons why such an amendment should be considered. But I think that the philosophy followed by the committee is a preferable one in this case, for a reason which I should like to state into the RECORD at this time.

Let me first, however, commend the committee for keeping this subject, in its report, on an entirely nonpolitical basis, and insofar as the junior Senator from Florida is concerned, his debate will be confined to such a basis.

I commend particularly the wording of the report, which I read into the RECORD now:

> The principal activities under this section, up to the present time, have been those carried on by the Office of Industry Cooperation of the Department of Commerce with respect to existing and proposed voluntary plans providing for the allocation of steel and pig iron to various programs of importance to the domestic economy, the national security, and the foreign policy of the United States. The committee finds that the existing voluntary plans have provided substantial benefits to the national interests.

There is no question there of depriving anyone of the credit, and I am glad that such is the approach.

The committee report continues, a little later:

> The committee is advised that a broader stabilization program will be submitted to the Congress in the near future and that this program will include provisions for the allocation of scarce materials for essential purposes. Pending consideration of this more comprehensive program, it is the recommendation of your committee that the authority for the present activities under section 2, Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, should be extended, in order that the benefits of this program to the domestic economy, the national security, and the foreign policy should not be lost.

There is no claim at all that there have not been benefits under the act which is now in force, but a well-considered statement, in my view of the facts, that since a much more comprehensive program for stabilization of industry, critical supplies, and so forth, is on the way and will be here shortly, final action on that particular measure should preclude any great extension, in terms of many months, of the present law. Hence the recommendation for the limited extension of 6 months.

Mr. President, before coming to my principal point, I wish again to commend the completely nonpolitical approach made by the committee, by unanimous vote, as I now understand, and I think that is a sound approach to make in matters which do vitally affect the national economy. I think that the recommendation is based on good, sound grounds, good business reasons, when a longer extension than 6 months is not recommended, because of the announced fact that in the early future this committee is expecting a more comprehensive program, and will expect to pass upon a program, so as to fit in any new enactment with the rather limited extension which is proposed under the bill now under consideration.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. Not for a moment, if the Senator please. I should like to complete my statement; then I shall be glad to yield.

I may say, Mr. President, that my own concern in regard to the pending measure arises because of some experience which I had about the time of the enactment of the present law, when serving on a subcommittee of the Small Business Committee of the Senate, and in trying to discover what was wrong with the steel industry. I call the attention of Senators to the fact that that subcommittee made a report, which appears in Senate Document 825, Eightieth Congress, which was agreed to by all members of the subcommittee. In other words, it was a nonpolitical report, in which the effort was to bring to the attention of the Senate and of the country the fact that certain things had caused grave concern to the members of the subcommittee in connection with steel. Some of the things I should like to quote out of the report for the RECORD at this time, if I may. First, from page 8 of the report I read this paragraph:

In addition to some steel mills withdrawing their distribution from areas previously served and refusing to ship steel where it is needed, the subcommittee has investigated other evidences of disruption to normal channels of supply marked by growths in horizontal and vertical integrations in the steel-producing industry. There is no question but that smaller steel producers and users are being forced out of business and their facilities either scrapped or taken over by the larger integrated companies.

Then, continuing on the same subject, on pages 9 and 10 of the report, I quote again:

Many complaints received by the subcommittee indicate that some of the integrated steel companies, which constitute the principal source of supply for crude, semifinished, and finished steel in this country, have refused to continue to supply old customers on the grounds that the steel is needed by the producer to take care of the requirements of his own wholly owned or controlled fabricating or manufacturing units.

I digress from the quotation simply to state that the committee was alarmed to find to what a degree the manufacturing companies had taken over the erectors and the fabricators, or had themselves organized competing erectors and fabricators, which were driving the little folks out of business.

I continue to read:

The supply of basic materials to the smaller units of the steel industry is one of the vital points in the relations between the large integrated producers and the small business of the steel industry.

Then there are several other statements to like effect. Instead of reading them at this time I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD immediately following my present remarks all of that portion of the report of the subcommittee beginning with the heading "Integrated operations reduce supplies to independents" on page 9 and continuing down to but not including the heading "Exports of steel" on page 10.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTEGRATED OPERATIONS REDUCE SUPPLIES TO INDEPENDENTS

Many complaints received by the subcommittee indicate that some of the integrated steel companies, which constitute the principal source of supply for crude, semifinished, and finished steel in this country, have refused to continue to supply old customers on the grounds that the steel is needed by the producer to take care of the requirements of his own wholly owned or controlled fabricating or manufacturing units.

The supply of basic materials to the smaller units of the steel industry is one of the vital points in the relations between the large integrated producers and the small business of the steel industry.

Colonel Rockwell, of the Rockwell Manufacturing Co., in testimony referred to above, has outlined the logical consequences of the continued development of integration of steel-producing and manufacturing facilities. He speaks with the authority of an experienced and eminent industrialist, and his words quoted below should carry weight:

"It is obvious that, if the steel companies continue to enter into competition with their customers in the fabricating and in the steel-consuming manufacturing industries, we shall soon be competing with vertical trusts of the type which existed in Germany.

"When there is a slowing down of business, such steel companies will try to obtain business from the independent steel barrel manufacturers and other consumers [of steel]; but, when business is expanding rapidly, such customers will be faced with a refusal to supply steel at the very time when it is impossible to buy from other steel companies who are considerate enough to take care of their established customers.

"As far as we know, this is the first time in history that some steel companies have had a sustained demand, and, at the same time, have been in competition with their customers. They have, therefore, cut off some established customers in order to build up their own business in the steel-fabricating or steel-consuming manufacturing industries."

One of the first complaints laid before the subcommittee was that of an independent steel erector, the Karl Koch Erecting Co., of the Bronx, N. Y. (p. 1904, hearings). This company testified that they were unable to bid on the erection of Government hospitals in New York State because the steel bids tendered by the only bidders, Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp. and Bethlehem Steel Corp., provided not only for the furnishing of the steel but its fabrication and erection as well. Under the limitations of the bidding form, the independent was unable to bid, due to the fact that he could not furnish the steel for the erection services he would perform. This method of bidding made a difference in the cost to the Government of $151,800 in the building of a veterans' hospital in Brooklyn, N. Y. (p. 1915, hearings.)

Mr. C. A. Johnson, general manager of sales, fabricated steel construction, Bethlehem Steel Corp., stated (p. 1931, hearings) in response to questioning by the subcommittee that his company would not bid on steel for these Government hospitals unless they could secure the complete job, which would include fabrication and erection. He also gave as his reason the need to keep the Bethlehem erection department busy.

As a result of these hearings, the subcommittee was able to secure for all the independent erectors a revision of the Government bid form which would enable them to bid on the separate services on Government construction, and require the integrated companies to bid, separately, on each service to be rendered.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, as one member of that subcommittee, it was crystal clear to me that many of the small erectors and fabricators had actually been driven out of business already, and that the course of operations was designed to eliminate more and more of them from business. It was my fear that the legislation in December of 1947 was too weak to cope with that particular situation.

The junior Senator from Florida supported the motion made by the then senior Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Barkley, but, having failed in its adoption, he supported the bill, taking what he could to deal effectively with this problem.

But now, Mr. President and Senators, I am not satisfied that that particular acute problem in this field which relates to small business has been solved, and my reason is that during the time of operation of the current law I have had not one, but repeated complaints from small-business operators in my own State and elsewhere, because they have not been able to get their supplies of steel from the manufacturers, and because the manufacturers are sending those supplies in undue quantities, so these small people believe, to the fabricators and erectors who belong to the manufacturers. And, Mr. President, because of my having received a large number of complaints of that kind during the operation of this existing law, I am glad that the committee confines itself in its recommendations to a limited extension of 6 months and gives notice and warning that it proposes during that period of time to take up a more comprehensive program, and of course to make report and recommendation for the enactment of legislation in that more comprehensive program.

And here is something that makes me even more fearful that the present law is not meeting the situation. I quote from the printed report of the hearings of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the United States Senate on the subject of the bill to extend the voluntary controls agreement, on January 25, 1949. I quote from page 43 of those hearings. The sentence which I shall read comes out of the report of Secretary Sawyer. It is in response to questions during the course of the hearings as to how small business was affected by the operation of the present law. In candor I must say that the Secretary in his testimony stated that he felt that small business was being pretty well cared for. All I can say is that that feeling varies from the reports that have come to the junior Senator from Florida. But when he was asked to submit written recommendations and a written statement and a written report on its operation under this measure, he included this particular sentence, which I call to the attention of the Senate, and which, it seems to me, makes it wholly clear that the operation of the present law, within the limited time that it has been afforded, has not been carried down the line to the point where it does serve to protect small users of steel and small business in the steel industry. I quote the sentence which appears as subsection (4) of section C on page 43:

All the present plans provide for shipments from producing mills, and it has not yet been possible to make arrangements for allocations for shipments by warehouse and other distributors. Therefore, the existing voluntary plans cannot take care of consumers who buy only from warehouses and other distributors.

That is the end of the quotation, Mr. President and Senators, and it would appear from the report of the Secretary of Commerce made to the committee but a few days ago, that he stated frankly to the committee that the operations of his Department, the operations of the Nation under the present law, had not been carried down to the consumers or to the small people, and that he made no pretense that such was the case.

Mr. President, in closing it seems to me that it would be very foolish for the Senate to create a problem such as that suggested by the distinguished junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], by extending the law for a greater period than the 6 months, and that, to the contrary, the proposed action should be regarded as a stopgap extension, and I, for one, in view of the wholly nonpolitical position taken by the committee will be looking with confidence to the committee to bring in a much-farther-reaching report based upon the comprehensive recommendations which the committee tells us it will be in position to receive and to study within a very short period.

I think that is the cautious, that is the prudent, that is the common-sense, that is the businesslike way to approach the problem, and so far as I am concerned, I believe that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] is not the proper way to approach the subject, and I hope it will be defeated.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. The Senator has read excerpts from the report of the Committee on Small Business, indicating that the handling of steel allocation was not satisfactory to small business. Does the Senator know whether that condition resulted from a failure of the Secretary of Commerce properly to administer an agreement, or from a failure of the President to make the right kind of an agreement?

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to make clear the statement I made. I thought it was clear before.

Mr. CORDON. The Senator had not touched that point.

Mr. HOLLAND. The report was made upon a study which was made by the subcommittee of the Small Business Committee just prior to the meeting of the special session of Congress in December, I believe it was, of 1947, and the report is dated in December of 1947, immediately after the enactment of the present law. Therefore the situation complained of in the report of the committee developed during the hiatus—during that time between the knocking out of all controls in the summer of 1946 and the time in December of 1947 when the new control measures were passed. But in addition to that definite knowledge which the Senator from Florida has as to the existence of that fact at that time, I also have ample showings from numerous small users that that condition has not been corrected. And then when I see in the report of Secretary Sawyer the statement which I read into the RECORD indicating that the program had not yet had time to be continued down to and to reach to the actual users of steel, it seems to me that there is a statement that should put me and should put the Senate on guard as to what has been done to small business under the operation of this particular law, and until we do know what has been done, after adequate studies have been made by the committee, which I think the Senator will agree has proceeded in a nonpolitical way—until we do know how small business now can say that it has been affected by the operations of this law, I think any approach to permanent or semipermanent legislation would be a mistake. That is the position I am taking here.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. The Senator from Ohio suggests that the extension of voluntary agreement be made to the 31st of March 1950 rather than the 30th of September 1949.

Is the Senator in agreement with the Senator from Oregon, that if that be not done, and the time limit be the 30th of September, as provided in the committee's bill, the Congress, in considering any legislation which may be presented, is faced with the proposition that it must take the administration bill or have nothing at all after the 30th of September? Is that the Senator's view?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is not the view of the junior Senator from Florida.

Mr. CORDON. What situation would exist?

Mr. HOLLAND. On the contrary, if the Senator will allow me to make my own answer to his suggestion——

Mr. CORDON. I have not attempted to suggest an answer. I apologize for the second question.

Mr. HOLLAND. On the contrary, it is my view that this report, taken as a whole, makes it very clear that the committee proposes to study the question diligently and to make recommendations for legislation which can be passed while we are in session in the first session of the Eighty-first Congress. I think the report makes it very clear that the committee is hoping that much more effective legislation can be enacted to operate after September 30, which will allow a little time to prepare all the multifarious details of such a program, and which will not allow this relatively uncontrolled situation to continue into next spring.

If I felt that the committee was not willing speedily to make a study and report, and that the committee was not anticipating the passage of more effective and more comprehensive legislation while we are in session during the first session of this Congress, effective September 30, I would agree with the distinguished senior Senator from Oregon. But there has been nothing in the performance of the committee which indicates to my mind anything other than an intention to go ahead as rapidly as possible consistent with caution and the exercise of good judgment, and to come back with a comprehensive program for enactment before we get away from here, effective September 30.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. If the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] should be adopted, and the Voluntary Agreements Act should be extended to the last of March of next year, could not the President in his wisdom, having in mind as the Senator has, a comprehensive study of the whole problem, and the possible introduction of comprehensive legislation to meet whatever situation the committee should find exists—could not the President, under the extended terms of the act, the purpose of which is only to limit the time of his authority and not to require his exercise of it up to that time, go forward and make voluntary agreements extending only to September 30 of this year, or even a shorter time, if he thought it was in the public interest, and so keep more careful and complete control of the whole situation in his own hands pending enactment of other legislation, if it were to be enacted? Could not that be done?

Mr. HOLLAND. Of course it could be done; but the Senator overlooks the fact that the President is not the only one concerned in this question, or in the enactment of further legislation to supplement this legislation. I apprehend that there would be factors in the steel industry, and there would be Members of this body and of the other body of Congress coming from the areas where those industries are very powerful industrial agencies, who, if machinery were created which would operate until March 30 next year, would be much more insistent in their objection to machinery which I might feel and the majority of the Senate might feel would be much more adequate to deal with this problem than is the present law. I for one would not want to put the Senate or the Congress in the position of having created a law which would encourage some to oppose the enactment of a better law because they would have this law operative as to their businesses until March 30 next year. I think much the sounder approach is that suggested by the committee, which I approve.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. The Senator has suggested, if I correctly understand him, that he not only does not want to encourage Senators who may disagree with the legislation offered to vote against it, but, in effect, by placing the September 30 limit on the voluntary agreements, if those Senators feel that any kind of allocation is necessary, he is going to coerce them into voting for the legislation which comes up later. Is not that correct?

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator uses the word "coerce." I would not use it. The word "influence" would be better.

Mr. CORDON. I will accept "influence."

Mr. HOLLAND. A limitation 8 months into the future could hardly be called close enough to this date to be at all coercive in its effect.

Mr. CORDON. Would the addition of 6 or 7 months seriously affect anybody?

Mr. HOLLAND. My answer would be that it would bring the matter into the next Congress, and would encourage those who might be disposed to do so in this Congress to use all kinds of parliamentary procedure to hold onto what the majority might feel was a much less effective machinery, namely, the one under the present act, rather than to go to a much more effective machinery, which I hope will be suggested and recommended shortly by the able committee.

Mr. CORDON. If I follow the Senator, his view is that he would rather have permissive authority than no authority, but he does not want the permissive authority to go any further than September 30, solely because he wants an inducement to those who disagree with him to go along with the over-all legislation which may come forward, even though they do not believe in it.

Mr. HOLLAND. I would rather state my position in this way: The Senator from Florida sees no point in extending the authority for 12 months when he thinks an extension of 6 months will allow not only ample time, but several times the ample amount of time necessary to give serious and deliberate consideration to the more effective legislation, which I confidently expect to come from the committee shortly.

Mr. CORDON. The Senator does not expect the Congress to be in session on September 30, does he?

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator from Florida joins the Senator from Oregon in his hope that we shall not be in session at that time, and thinks that that has nothing to do with the situation, because under the law, as the Senator understands, we may be here until the end of July. It does not seem to me that there could be any possible question of there being adequate time, and much more than adequate time between now and the end of July, to give full consideration to this important question, and to adopting much sounder legislation in this field than that which now exists.

Mr. CORDON. I thank the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, there has been considerable debate of this subject. As the Senate well knows, the committee voted, with only two dissenting votes, to report the bill favorably. It seems to me that about all that is involved is the point that the amendment is designed to foreclose a study by the committee of the proposals for additional controls which the administration is considering, but which have not yet been considered in the committee. Of course the minority do intend to foreclose such a study. Regardless of how the House of Representatives and the Senate may in the long run decide on the question of additional controls, I think that at the very least the matter should be considered by the committee, and that is the purpose of the committee bill. So of course I intend to support the bill.

The Senator from Alabama in the course of his remarks made some reference to a difficulty that we are having in bringing into production part of the aluminum plant at Jones Mill, Ark. I wish to clarify that point for a moment, because at the hearings the other day I had considerable to say about that particular item. The fact is that the pipe to bring natural gas from the natural gas fields to that plant has been on order for some 2 years by the Arkansas-Louisiana Gas Co. Intervening and subsequent to the ordering of that pipe by that gas company, the Atomic Energy Commission has decided that as a supplemental and an auxiliary source of gas, it would like to bring gas, by pipe line, to the Oak Ridge plant. The Department of Commerce has, I believe, at least tentatively—and I think it expects to do so permanently—made the allocation to the Oak Ridge plant.

My objection is simply that the Oak Ridge plant does not need pipe line in order to operate. It simply would give the Oak Ridge plant an additional or auxiliary source of fuel; but that is not as critical, from the point of view of national defense, as is the bringing into production of the two pot lines that are not now producing in the Jones Mill plant. In other words, it is a question of judgment as to which is the more important in the national interest, and there was a difference of opinion as between me and the persons who are interested in the production of aluminum and the Atomic Energy Commission. That was the point referred to by the Senator from Alabama. Regardless of my difference of judgment on that point, I still think this bill should be passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 88) extending the time for free entry of certain articles imported to promote international good will, and it was signed by the Vice President.

A UNITED STATES OF EUROPE

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, some time ago I thought there was a possibility of promptly obtaining a vote on the bill relating to voluntary agreements and plans for the allocation of scarce materials, and therefore I did not obtain the floor to speak on the matter to which I am about to address myself. Since that time I have understood that several other speeches on the subject are scheduled. Therefore I wish to say a few words about an action which I think is extremely important. It does not relate to the bill which has been under discussion during the day.

In March 1947, joined by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], I introduced in the Senate a joint resolution which would have placed the Congress of the United States on record as favoring the creation of a United States of Europe, within the framework of the United Nations.

This, I might add, was several months before the Secretary of State, General Marshall, made his Harvard speech on June 5, 1947, which resulted in the Marshall plan and the European recovery program. It was also several weeks before the then Under Secretary of State, Mr. Acheson, made his Cleveland, Miss., speech, which has been said to be the forerunner of the Marshall plan.

On April 7, 1947, when aid to Greece and Turkey was being discussed, I spoke at some length on the subject of European federation, saying this:

> I submit that unless we are able to create a different, a more sensible economic and political order in Europe, there is no hope for a prosperous or a peaceful solution to her difficulties. It is my belief that if all we are able to do is to recreate the prewar crazy quilt of jealous sovereignties, neither Europe nor the Near East is a good risk. If we persist in preserving an irrational and obsolete economic and political system in Europe, we can be sure that, for a third time, its internal frictions will supply the spark for world conflagration. No one can guarantee that a federation will absolutely prevent all sparks, but at least there will be a chance that it may.
> Unless we are willing to write off Europe as a friend and supporter of democratic principles, it behooves us to use our economic power and our talents of persuasion to induce Europeans to create a free and democratic federation of states. Under such a union the world may again see a renaissance of culture, of freedom, and of spiritual power which once before led the world out of the confusion and tyranny of the dark ages.

Mr. President, on March 3, 1948, when the Senate was debating the Economic Cooperation Act, I offered an amendment to the preamble of that act, to express the hope that the participating countries would exert efforts to achieve political unification.

During the course of the debate it became clear that although the then chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, the present chairman, and other members of the committee approved the objective and purposes of the amendment, at the same time they objected to its inclusion in the bill.

I then said:

> It is with reluctance that I withdraw the amendment; but in view of the opposition of the committee, and the probability that such a defeat would be interpreted as this Nation's disapproval of European unity, I feel compelled to follow this course. * * * I still feel that unless the CEEC countries can achieve political unification during the next few years, the ERP program not only will fail to bring peace and stability to Europe, but, on the contrary, if those countries succumb one by one to the Communists, it will actually result in a tremendous subsidy at our expense to the growth of Communist power.

Last June 11, when the Senate was considering the Vandenberg resolution, I asked the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee if, under paragraph 2 of that resolution, dealing with regional defense arrangements, a federation of the European countries might be contemplated.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] replied as follows:

Most emphatically, and I join the Senator from Arkansas in thinking that it would be one of the most hopeful possible evolutions that could be contemplated. * * * I think the emphasis in the present resolution upon the development of regional and other collective arrangements specifically includes the great idea of a United States of Europe, to which the Senator from Arkansas has been so devoted.

Upon this assurance, and the assurance of other members of the committee, that the concept of European federation was included in the language of the resolution, I did not press at that time for a more specific endorsement of the idea.

Mr. President, I give this background for the purpose of emphasizing that, although the Senate has not specifically recorded itself as favoring European federation, there is a great deal of legislative history on the subject, and there is reason to feel that many Senators believe in the necessity of European federation. I also wish to say I think that discussion is beginning to bear fruit.

In the New York Times of Saturday, January 29, 1949, there was a very interesting dispatch upon this subject, and I think it is perhaps the most significant move that has occurred in a long time with regard to progress under the ERP. Unfortunately the indication by Marshal Stalin of his willingness to talk things over has distracted the attention of most people from this action, which I feel has far greater significance. I wish to read only a selected paragraph or two, but at the conclusion of my remarks, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire article be included.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It is dated January 28:

The Western Union powers agreed today to create a Council of Europe and thus fulfill a dream of centuries of European statesmen.

There will be a committee composed of government Ministers meeting in secret and capable of making binding decisions, which means—which means the actual delegation of sovereign powers to a European body.

And I emphasize this sentence—

That is the crucial question which has been involved in the discussions of all international bodies since the creation of the League of Nations, and it is the very point upon which all of them have failed. In no previous case that I know of has any real delegation of sovereign power been given to any international body.

The next paragraph which I think is particularly important is:

These are not mere proposals; they are agreements made by the Foreign Ministers of Britain, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Luxemburg. The British Cabinet, for instance, held an emergency meeting this afternoon to approve these momentous decisions, which now commit the Government of Great Britain.

* * * * *

When the Foreign Ministers, who had been meeting in the office of Foreign Secretary Bevin, came out this evening at the end of their 2-day conference, they were visibly elated. They knew they had made history.

They had taken the first important practical step toward a goal that has beckoned European statesmen from the seventeenth century "grand design" of the French statesman Sully to Briand's "United States of Europe."

I think this is by far the most significant move by the European nations since the war.

I also notice in the same edition of the New York Times in a dispatch from Oslo that the Scandinavian Foreign Ministers endorse the plan. It is true that with regard to the Atlantic Pact, due to the pressure from Russia, the Norwegians did not see fit to participate; but apparently Norway endorses the creation of a Council of Europe. It is also my understanding that other countries in Europe will be invited to join the Council of Europe. The article mentions that:

Foreign Minister Count Carlo Sforza (of Italy) said today, "Italy will be one of the founding states" of the new Council of Europe.

Only a short time ago, Mr. President, it was assumed by many persons that the idea for the creation of a real political federation or council of Europe, using the terms that were used by the Ministers on last Friday, was entirely beyond any realistic hope at this time. In fact there was an article in the New York Times magazine of last week—that is, January 23—by Mr. Callendar, one of their staff writers, entitled "We Expect Too Much From the Marshall Plan." The thesis of that article, less than a week preceding the action on the part of the foreign minister of the Brussels pact countries, is that some of us expected entirely too much; in other words, we had expected it would promote a political federation of Europe, and that expectation was entirely beyond all reasonable possibilities at this time. I would say this action on the part of the foreign ministers on Saturday completely negatives Mr. Callendar's whole thesis.

There was one paragraph in Mr. Callendar's article which I think was entirely uncalled for, reading as follows:

Since the United States has accepted western Europe as both a financial and a military responsibility or liability, certain Americans have insisted upon urging and prodding Europe into a union that presumably would stand on its own feet and relieve the United States of its present responsibility for this Continent. This may not be precisely an isolationist attitude; but it is one that displays dislike of the huge international responsibilities that have been assumed by the United States and a desire to be rid of them as soon as possible.

I certainly, for one, would like to be rid of some, if not all, of these responsibilities, and would like to diminish the impact of those responsibilities upon our own economy. But I would not admit that that is, in the words of Mr. Callender, an isolationist attitude.

Mr. President, I think this action on the part of the Foreign Ministers of the Brussels Pact countries certainly deserves recognition by the Congress of the United States and by the people of the United States. Last fall, while I was in Europe, I stated that unless some progress were made toward political unification, unless they at least accept political unification as an objective of the present plan, I would find it extremely difficult to justify a continuation of the ERP program. The establishment of the Council of Europe, assuming the account which I have read from the Times is correct, I think is a justification for the continuation of the program. I might also call attention to the fact stated in an article in the New York Times of January 11, in which one of the prominent members of the British House of Commons stated that a United States of Europe would cut the Marshall plan costs by 66 percent.

That, of course, is a very extreme statement. I do not know how one would arrive at that exact percentage, but there is no doubt in my mind that it would certainly decrease the costs. That statement is from Mr. R. W. G. MacKay, who has written extensively on this subject.

Mr. President, I think the time has come when the Congress should specifically endorse the idea, particularly as we are about to consider the proposed North Atlantic Alliance and the renewal of the Economic Cooperation Act.

For this purpose, I have introduced today, together with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the following resolution:

In order to encourage a peaceful and prosperous order in Europe, but with no intention of imposing any particular form of political or economic association upon its people, it is hereby

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress favors the political federation of Europe.

I hope the Committee on Foreign Relations will give some consideration to this resolution when it holds hearings on the extension of the Economic Cooperation Act, and that it may give some expression of the belief that progress toward the goal of European federation should be accomplished with our assistance under the ECA.

At Harvard, Secretary Marshall said:

Any assistance that this Government may render should provide a cure rather than a mere palliative.

I believe that the revival of European economic prosperity alone, without some permanent form of political federation, is a mere palliative and not a cure. I do not believe that the relatively small and independent political sovereignties of Europe, as they now exist, can, under modern political and economic conditions, retain their independence or economic prosperity without aid for very long.

If the same old prewar Europe of many small, independent states is economically rehabilitated, I do not think we shall have achieved anything of lasting value, commensurate with the sacrifices that we shall have made. Europe reconstructed can protect herself from neither alien domination nor internal quarrels. Standing alone none of the 16 nations can withstand the determined pressure of the Russians. While they may think they can take refuge in neutrality, the last war has proved how futile that is.

For centuries—from the grand design of Henry IV, in 1638, to Winston Churchill today—many of the greatest statesmen of Europe have called for European federation. It is no longer a philosophical longing or an idealistic dream. The ancient prejudices about sovereignty are beginning to dissolve, and a United States of Europe has actually become a matter of practical politics, as was demonstrated on last Friday.

I believe that we should promote the idea of European federation with all our powers of persuasion and, provided the Europeans are willing, with all our economic and industrial strength.

My efforts to obtain an expression of the Congress endorsing European federation have met with one consistent objection: that it is an unwarranted interference in the affairs of other countries. I think the announcement by the Brussels powers will do much to dispel this notion. I am not, by this resolution, attempting to force an alien notion upon the free governments of Europe. I am rather attempting to record this Nation's endorsement of a great movement, and to urge its further development before it is too late.

We have made, and probably will make, additional enormous loans and grants to the nations of Europe, and we are about to consider a program of military assistance and alliance. As a consequence we are faced with such a tremendous drain upon our national resources that we are forced to take stock of our wealth lest we impoverish ourselves in helping others. It would be strange if we did not take a selfish interest in the possibilities of a United States of Europe. But whatever malicious propaganda the Kremlin may spread to the contrary, the fact remains that the primary reason for our assistance is our wish to create a stable and orderly world in which we, and all peoples of the world, may live in peace. I am convinced that the federation of Europe is a fundamental pillar of a stable world order.

Our concern is not simply an idealistic dream of bringing relief to suffering Europe; nor is it the hard-shelled manipulations of economic imperialism. We have a deep and inescapable interest in the welfare of Europe—in its military, economic, and political strength. Twice in 25 years we have shed our blood and spent our treasure in world wars which grew out of European feuds and power politics. We know that our present well-being will be short-lived unless Europe recovers and carries on normal economic, social, and political relations with us. Rich as our country is, we cannot indefinitely subsidize an impoverished, dependent, Europe. That Continent must learn again under modern industrial and commercial conditions how to take care of itself.

Our interests are personal; they are immediate and they are real. But there is another very urgent reason for our interest. If western Europe were to succumb to the Russians, then the systems, institutions, and values which have made all North America great, would be imperiled. A healthy, prosperous, rehabilitated, and united Europe is one of the best guaranties that our country, that all free peoples, will remain free and strong.

We have today in Europe another interest and responsibility. As a result of the war, we are now for practical political purposes a sovereign nation on the European Continent. The United States actually governs a substantial and important part of western Europe. Where our troops are occupying parts of Germany, Austria, and Trieste, we must govern and protect Europeans. We have no intention of retaining these territories for our own, and, indeed, we are anxious to rid ourselves of their burden. But we cannot until we are certain that our withdrawal will not menace the peace of western Europe and hence the United States.

The German problem, and to a lesser degree, the problems of Austria and Trieste, cannot be settled irrespective of our desires and interests. Indeed it is our duty to promote settlements which in our judgment are in the best interests of Europe and America.

Now, as we have an interest in the military, economic, and political welfare of Europe, and as our interests are genuine, and our purposes are not imperialistic, do we not have the right even to express the hope that Europe may achieve political federation?

If the reason for our reluctance to express our desires is our fear of offending Russia, is it not absurd to think that military cooperation, joint maneuvers, advice, and even equipment are not equally offensive?

If our reasoning is that expression of our hope that federation may be brought about is an unwarranted interference in the affairs of other countries, how can we explain that our advice in military and economic affairs is not? No one yet has been able to determine successfully the line between the external and the internal affairs of nations, but as their federation involves internal affairs that is only incidental to its real purpose. If, as history proves, their external affairs are of vital consequence to us, are we not entitled to urge a remedy for the recurrent quarrels they create?

This criticism, that advocating a federation of Europe is officious intermeddling by Americans, is often made. At the same time, however, we are told that we have a responsibility to use our power, our knowledge, and our wealth to rehabilitate the stricken areas of the world. These views are inconsistent. If we grant that we have this obligation, then we must also be obliged to see that the rehabilitation is sensible and effective. There can be no obligation to reestablish the same old divided Europe, from which two world wars have emerged to afflict us. Surely we have a legitimate interest in the purposes for which the products of our land and the work of our people are to be expended. As we govern and support much of Germany, are we not entitled to propose a solution to the problems of Germany's future in keeping with Europe's needs?

If we reason that federation is too remote, what can we possibly lose by encouraging and urging federation? Even if it is not to be achieved can we take the chance that but for our reluctance, or timidity, in promoting it, it might have come about?

Of course, we cannot force this goal of federation upon Europe. Yet we may have the power to make it a reality, by encouragement and assistance. We must use the power tactfully, but this is not to say we must not use it at all.

The final responsibility which I believe attaches to the United States is that, in opposing Soviet Russia's initiative, we must offer some alternative which will maintain order in Europe. Negation—even of Russian domination—is not enough for this aggressive and restless world. We shall continue to be negative at our own peril. In peace, as well as in war, victory will not come to the negative defensive strategy. A certain boldness, a positive resourcefulness, is essential to win any battle, in war or peace.

The Germans in 1914 and again in 1939 to 1941 did not believe that the democracies of the west would go to war over the neutrality of Belgium or the indepence of Poland. We shall never know what course world events would have taken had they known, but we can be reasonably sure it would have been different and better. We were then given a period of months and years in which to make our decision and to prepare to follow it.

The world today wants to know where we stand. Many Europeans believe we may once again withdraw from Europe. The Russians believe it and are striving to bring it about in Berlin and Germany and all over Europe. They hope that we shall become so disgusted, disillusioned, and tired of the ever-intensified war of nerves that we shall give up and go home. We are trying to convince Russia and Europe now that we will stay.

I believe that we can, and will, stay—but only so long as we believe that by our defense and assistance we can accomplish something which gives hope of progress toward lasting peace. From our own experience we can, and do, believe in the principle of federation as a means of assuring domestic tranquillity, common defense, and general welfare. It is an idea which we have held to for 160 years, in which we have faith for the future, and which, I am convinced, the people of Europe can adapt to their own great security, prosperity, and happiness.

It is, I believe, of the greatest importance that the people of Europe be given a goal, a hope for the future. The unity of Europe, solid and permanent, is such a goal. It is a goal which I believe will inspire them to great creative acts and to great sacrifices, such as they have performed in the past and which I am sure they can achieve again, to their own benefit and to the benefit of the world.

EXHIBIT A

COUNCIL OF EUROPE FORMED BY FIVE WESTERN UNION POWERS—TWO BODIES SET UP—SOVEREIGN RIGHTS GIVEN TO MINISTERIAL GROUP, WITH RULINGS BINDING—PUBLIC ASSEMBLY TO AID—OTHER COUNTRIES ARE INVITED TO JOIN—BRITISH CABINET QUICKLY APPROVES PLAN

(By Herbert L. Matthews)

LONDON, January 28.—The Western Union Powers agreed today to create a "Council of Europe" and thus fulfill a dream of centuries of European statesmen.

There will be a committee composed of government ministers meeting in secret and capable of making binding decisions, which means the actual delegation of sovereign powers to a European body.

Alongside this committee will be an advisory consultative body representing the national parliaments of Europe. This group will meet in public.

These are not mere proposals; they are agreements made by the Foreign Ministers of Britain, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Luxemburg. The British Cabinet, for instance, held an emergency meeting this afternoon to approve these momentous decisions, which now commit the Government of Great Britain.

ONLY DETAILS TO BE SETTLED

Only details remain to be settled. They are to be worked out by the Permanent Commission of the Brussels Pact Powers, which meets weekly in London. This commission is composed of the Ambassadors of the four continental countries plus Hubert Gladwyn Jebb, of the British Foreign Office.

When the Foreign Ministers, who had been meeting in the office of Foreign Secretary Bevin, came out this evening at the end of their two-day conference, they were visibly elated. They knew they had made history.

They had taken the first important practical step toward a goal that has beckoned European statesmen from the seventeenth century "grand design" of the French statesman Sully to Briand's "United States of Europe." Here is a relevant passage of the communiqué they issued after their meeting:

"After considering the most valuable preparatory work accomplished in Paris by the Committee for the Study of European Unity, the Council [the Consultative Council of Brussels Powers] agreed that there should be established a Council of Europe consisting of a ministerial committee meeting in private and a consultative body meeting in public."

OTHERS INVITED TO JOIN

"The Permanent Commission was instructed to study the detailed application of the decisions of principle taken by the Council. The Council decided to invite other European countries to take part in the negotiations for the establishment of the Council of Europe."

Although many of the proposed details remain secret and others are still to be worked out, it is possible to add some flesh to these bare bones.

It was agreed that the appointment of delegates to the consultative body and their voting powers should be left to the discretion of each country, which can satisfy its own constitutional practices.

France, for example, can elect her delegates by a majority vote of her National Assembly and thus exclude Communists. Britain could appoint delegates from the Labor Party or all three parties.

This is one of the compromises reached during the past 2 days because the French wanted delegates to the European assembly to be elected and Britain wanted them nominated by the Governments.

Britain originally wanted voting in the assembly, or consultative body as it is now called, to be compulsory bloc voting by nations. Mr. Bevin, as expected, yielded on this point and the decisions will be made by a majority vote of all delegates voting individually, not as national groups.

A British compromise proposal whereby the ministerial committee would control the agenda of the consultative body was accepted. Subjects for discussion by the consultative body can be determined on the initiative of either organization but the ultimate control of the agenda, which is to say the power of veto, will rest with the ministerial committee.

The principle on which voting will take place in both organizations has been decided but it is being kept secret. Guessing is that it will be by two-thirds vote in the ministerial committee and a majority in the consultative body. This would reflect the fact that the latter body is merely advisory whereas the former has executive powers.

Nothing is being said either about the weighting of representation, but it is presumed that the greater powers will have a proportionately heavy vote in the ministerial committee while each individual delegate will have equal weight in the consultative body.

NAMES WILL BE CHANGED

Incidentally the clumsy names used in tonight's communiqué—consultative body and ministerial committee—are only makeshift. In preliminary discussions they were called the European Assembly and the European Council, but as the combined organization is now called the Council of Europe, other names must be found.

The invitation to other European nations to join is what carries the new Council beyond the concept of the Western Union of the Brussels Pact Powers. The conference had hardly ended when Duke Tommaso Gallarati Scotti, Italian Ambassador, was called to the Foreign Office and informed that his Government would be invited to join the Council of Europe.

Portugal and the Scandinavian countries are doubtless being invited in on the ground floor. However, it was denied that all 19 European countries of the Organization for European Economic Cocperation would be invited or expected to take part from the beginning.

That is a goal to be achieved and western Germany will be a member in time, but the Brussels Pact Powers decided to start with a relatively small manageable council and expand it as time passed.

The permanent center of the Council of Europe will almost certainly be Strasbourg. It is centrally located and has a properly cosmopolitan European atmosphere.

For the time being the Western Union will remain in being. On its defense side it will soon merge into the projected north Atlantic defense pact. In other respects it will gradually expand into the Council of Europe. That Council, in its turn, will be integrated into the United Nations as a regional arrangement.

The Western Union also has important cultural and social relations now, which were discussed in a special communiqué. It was agreed, for instance, to hold courses for teachers on the Western Union, to hold exhibitions and issue pamphlets and films.

On the social side emphasis was placed on an exchange of views and information on public health, as well as exchanges of medical personnel, workers, and student employees.

Enterprises of this sort will not be abandoned for the Council of Europe cannot be formed overnight. The Permanent Commission should be able to work out most of the details by the time the Foreign Ministers of the Brussels Pact Powers meet again in April.

Four other governments will have to sanction today's agreement as the British Cabinet already has done. French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman, who alone might be expected to find difficulties, was confident tonight that he had won enough points from Mr. Bevin to get support in Paris.

The European movement, which Winston Churchill sponsored and which is headed by his son-in-law, Duncan Sandys, issued a statement enthusiastically welcoming the decision to set up the Council of Europe. It looks as if Mr. Bevin at home and Britain on the Continent have set many doubts at rest.

SFORZA SAYS ITALY WILL JOIN

ROME, January 28.—Foreign Minister Count Carlo Sforza said today, "Italy will be one of the founding states" of the new Council of Europe.

His brief statement, released by ANSA, semiofficial Italian news agency, indicated Italy already had been invited to take part in setting up the Council.

"European union is born," Count Sforza said, "and Italy will be one of the founding states. Italy will give all her efforts with full loyalty to the creation of the Council of Europe."

JUDGE KNOX'S METHOD OF SELECTING JURIES

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, on Thursday, I called to the attention of this body the statement made by Federal Judge John C. Knox that he handpicks the jurors in his district, and intends to keep on doing so. I expressed at that time my aversion to having jurors hand-picked by judges, or, for that matter, by anybody else, and I pointed out how historically miscarriages of justice have resulted from jury packing.

Since then I have taken a little time to look into the way Judge Knox handpicks jurors, and what the consequences of his selection are. As Senators know, Judge Knox is senior judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, which is our biggest and busiest Federal court. I felt that making this investigation was my simple duty as a United States Senator, as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and as a plain American citizen who happens to feel, along with the framers of our Constitution, that a fair and impartial administration of justice calls for juries selected, without hand picking, from a representative cross section of the people.

I was personally shocked by the facts that I learned in the course of this investigation. But beyond this, these facts are of such great concern to the integrity and reputation of our judicial system, and thus to our democracy itself, that it is time they were fully revealed to the Senate and to the American people.

But let me first disclose where the record of these facts can be found. Judge Knox's jury selection system is described in a memorandum of January 2, 1941, written for the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, by Leland L. Tolman, Assistant Chief, Division of Procedural Studies and Statistics. On February 5, 1941, Henry P. Chandler, the Director of that Office, sent copies of this memorandum to all United States circuit and district judges, and I have one of them in my hand, over the signature of Mr. Chandler.

In addition to this, a statistical analysis has been made of this system in operation, verified by affidavit, in a petition filed recently in the United States Supreme Court by the attorneys for the 12 Communist leaders who are now on trial in New York.

Just so that there shall be no mistake, I repeat now what I said on Thursday, that I care not who a defendant may be, and what the offense alleged, whether it is murder, arson, or robbery, whether he be Democrat or Republican or Communist, he is entitled in a United States court to a jury that is impartially and honestly picked. If some think differently, remember that Judge Knox's handpicked juries serve in all jury cases in his district, civil and criminal, whether the parties are radical or conservative, or whatever you please, in their political and economic beliefs.

But to get back to Judge Knox's jury-selection system. It seems that about 10 years ago Judge Knox decided that the jurors serving in the southern district of New York were an inferior lot. The jury rolls, it seems, included a lot of relief workers and housewives. Of course, this is hardly cause for amazement. In those days there were many relief workers in New York City, and there were then and still are plenty of housewives. But to Judge Knox, apparently, relief workers and housewives, no matter how big a part of the population they are, are not suitable for jury service. Why, I do not know. Perhaps he thinks that poor people and housewives are just naturally inferior, or perhaps they did not convict enough defendants to suit him. Anyway, Judge Knox decided to get jurors of "better quality."

The first thing Judge Knox did to serve this purpose, says Mr. Tolman's memorandum, was to appoint as jury commissioner an attorney who "has good business and social connections." Then, says the memorandum, which I have here, "he also arranged for the appointment, as deputy jury clerk, of an energetic young man of pleasing manner, who is a good judge of character, and has a thorough practical knowledge of the social, racial, and economic groups of New York City and their geographic distribution."

These, then, were the men who were to carry out Judge Knox's endeavors to get quality jurors, and I call attention to what their assets for this job were—"good business and social connections" and knowing the geographic distribution of the "social, racial, and economic groups of New York City."

Judge Knox now had the right kind of people to do the picking. Now he had to see that they had the right kind of people to pick from.

Until then, in the southern district of New York, the names of jurors had been picked primarily from the registry list of voters. But to Judge Knox this was an unsatisfactory list. They are just the people who decide who shall be our President and who shall be our Senators and who shall be our mayors and our governors. They are just the people who pick the persons who pick our Federal judges. They are the people who pay our salaries, and Judge Knox's, too. They are the people the Government is supposed to represent. In short, they are the American people. But the people are not good enough for Judge Knox. He has to have the better quality for jury service in his district.

According to Mr. Tolman's memorandum, therefore, the voters' registry list was supplemented by drawing from more select materials. What were these? Who's Who in New York, Poor's Directory of Directors, the Engineers' Directory, the Social Register, and various college and university alumni directories. Note the various. Mr. Tolman does not tell us, but we can guess, that to Judge Knox the alumni directories of Princeton or Dartmouth are better source material than those of the City College of New York or New York University.

Even more important than these books of the aristocracy is the subscription edition of the New York City telephone directory, which is arranged by street numbers and location rather than alphabetically by names. This directory permits the deputy jury clerk—you remember, Judge Knox' energetic young man of pleasing manner—to use his thorough knowledge of the geographic distribution of the social, racial, and economic groups of New York City to pick out the names of those who live in higher-class residential neighborhoods. In addition, this young man adds names of citizens who are personally known or introduced to him as good potential jurors. Relief workers and women were simply eliminated as volunteer jurors. If anyone has any doubt about it, I have a copy of the original memorandum here in my hand.

Now of course this so-called system of supplementing the registry list of voters does not really supplement the list at all. Those residents of New York who are in Who's Who, the Directory of Directors, and even the Social Register, are, by and large, also on the voters' registry list. The fact is, then, that these names are not added to the list; they are selected for preferential attention.

But just to make sure that no unsuitable people slip through, the jury clerk calls in and interviews each person whose name he puts on the list of prospective jurors. Only those people whom he is satisfied with following the interview are finally qualified as jurors. At the same time the jury commissioner—the man with the good connections — persuades personnel officers of large corporations to allow their employees to perform jury duty without financial loss. In other words, Judge Knox is willing to have on his juries lesser employees than executives, provided they know they are being paid by their big corporate employers during their service.

The consequence of all this is that the selection of the juries in the southern district of New York represents a deliberate and systematic exclusion of all but a token few of the lower income groups and of those persons who are without social graces valued by Judge Knox, in favor of an elite class.

According to a verified petition filed with the Supreme Court, an analysis of the jury lists in the district over a period of 9 years shows that 54 percent of the jury panel were executives, although they represent only 9 percent of the population. Twenty percent of the panel were professionals or semiprofessionals, although they were only 11 percent of the population. Clerical and sales employees, largely drawn from a few big corporations, made up 30 percent of the panels; they were 25 percent of the population. Manual workers made up only 5 percent of the panels, although they were 55 percent of the population.

I quote from the document sent out through the Administrative Office, from the Supreme Court Building in Washington. What do we find? This document is dated the 5th day of February 1941. We find about 2 percent of the names in the wheel are unemployed or retired. Eighty-eight percent are business or professional men. Ten percent are women.

The same verified petition also shows that the juries were loaded with persons who resided in the most exclusive neighborhoods. The so-called "silk-stocking" district, the Seventeenth Congressional District in Manhattan, supplied 56 percent of the members of six panels which were studied, although the district cast less than 20 percent of the vote in Manhattan alone in the 1948 elections. These same panels drew only 10.2 percent of their membership from the Eighteenth, Nineteenth, and Twenty-second, Twenty-third, and Twenty-fourth Congressional Districts taken together, although these districts accounted for 42 percent of the vote from both Manhattan and the Bronx. These latter districts contain mostly working-class people, including Negroes, Jews, citizens of Italian descent, and Puerto Ricans.

Mr. President, this system is not only offensive because of its snobbishness. It is a conscious selection of jurors on class and racial bases, and the result is that the so-called justice which is handed out in that district may be characterized as class and racial justice.

It is only natural that jurors tend to place greater credence in the testimony of people of their own kind. The whole purpose of the constitutional guaranty of a fair and impartial jury, representative of the community, is to offset the prejudices or predilections of particular groups. Only a fair cross section of the community will assure a fair and impartial trial in which evidence will be weighed according to the common judgment of the people, on its merits alone. It is perfectly clear that the system prevailing in the southern district of New York, and perhaps in many other places, is calculated to avoid juries which are truly representative.

To the people of the world, Mr. President, we boast of the superiorities of our government. We claim we are a democracy in which all people are free and equal. We profess equal justice for all, regardless of race or creed or economic status. How can we reconcile these assertions with the fact that in our largest Federal district, and perhaps elsewhere as well, our judiciary so blandly dispenses justice through hand-picked juries heavily weighted with the wealthy or well-to-do.

This situation is our problem and our responsibility. It is in the power of Congress to enact legislation which will guarantee the selection of fair and impartial juries in our Federal courts. It is fitting that the Senate should take the lead in this respect, since it is the Senate which confirmed the appointment of Judge Knox and all other Federal judges, and which therefore has some responsibility for their actions.

Hand-picked juries have no place in our democracy. They are a stench and are a disgrace to honest law enforcement. They result in there being no fair play either in criminal or civil cases.

THE CONFIRMATION OF MR. ACHESON'S NOMINATION

Mr. BRIDGES obtained the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. May I inquire of the Senator how long he expects to speak?

Mr. BRIDGES. Only a very few minutes I will say, on a very interesting subject.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, on Tuesday, January 18, the Senate confirmed the President's nomination of Dean Acheson to be Secretary of State. I was one of only six Senators to vote against that nomination. Once again I found myself among a small minority of Senators opposing a Presidential appointment for a high position in our Government. On previous occasions I have voted with the few against appointees to important Government posts later to have my minority opposition completely justified.

I made no statement when Mr. Acheson's nomination was before the Senate. But since the confirmation of that nomination, in reply to inquiries, I have defined my position.

In this uncertain time the post of Secretary of State is vitally important to the security of America and the peace of the world. I believe the eligibility of the man who occupies that post should be beyond any doubt. In my opinion, Mr. Acheson did not meet that test.

I have reasonable doubts about Mr. Acheson. The hearings conducted by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee did not remove those doubts. My mind persisted in its severe questioning of Mr. Acheson's previous associations and expressed attitudes. My doubts became more profound.

Throughout my service in the Senate I have made it a policy to resolve such doubts in favor of my country rather than to gamble with my country's future. That is what I did with reference to the Acheson appointment. I have told others and I tell the Senate today that I hope my doubts regarding Mr. Acheson will not be justified by the events of passing time.

Yet I feel I should call to the attention of the Senate a news report which appeared in the New York Times of Friday, January 28.

The headline reads:

United States aid seen lost in China, Greece—Prof. E. C. Acheson also doubts money expended on Germany ever will bring results.

First of all, who is Prof. E. C. Acheson? He is the brother of Dean Acheson, Secretary of State of the United States. The New York Times article says that during the war Professor Acheson served in the United States Embassy in China. The Times says further that Professor Acheson was President Truman's personal representative on an economic mission to Germany last year. He is now professor of foreign relations at George Washington University. The New York Times article about which I am talking and from which I shall quote says that Professor Acheson was expressing his foreign-policy views at a meeting in Washington on January 27.

Let me read from the Times article:

WASHINGTON, January 27.—Prof. Edward C. Acheson, brother of the new Secretary of State, has declared here that the United States has written off as practically a total loss its huge expenditures in Greece and China. He predicted that substantially the same thing would happen in the recovery program of western Germany.

I want the Senate to note the New York Times report of Professor Acheson's remarks interprets them as almost a statement of fact. The question arises, then, whether the professor's comments are based upon his own speculation or upon information which may have been given to him by his brother, the new Secretary of State. Can it be that the professor is voicing the opinions of the administration which have not yet been announced by the new Secretary of State to the Congress and the people? Can it be that the Truman doctrine and the Marshall plan to try to halt the spread of communism in the world are to be abandoned? Just what connection is there, if any, between the firmly expressed views of the professor and the views of his brother, the new Secretary of State? I, for one, should like to know.

I realize that no man is his brother's keeper, but I say very frankly, Mr. President, that the minds of Senators were plagued only a few days ago by perplexing questions regarding Dean Acheson's attitude toward Russia, the stubborn roadblock in the way of peace. Most Senators found his statements to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee convincingly firm as regards Russia. But on January 28 we read in the New York Times that the new Secretary's professor brother—who at least implies some authority to his statements—"took an optimistic view regarding future relations with Russia." I ask the Senate whether such an optimistic view could be based upon some particular information available to the brother of the new Secretary of State but not to the Congress or the people? Or could it be based upon some special representations made to Professor Acheson which would lead him to believe that the American attitude toward Russia is to soften and our relations with Russia thereby made more smooth? It is natural that such questions should arise from profound statements of a man who has been close to the President and is the brother of our Secretary of State. Spread abroad, as the remarks of the brother of the new Secretary of State will be, they could well create grave suspicion in the nations which have joined us in the effort to stop the spread of communism, that we are about to abandon that fight, or in some way alter our major policies.

As another example of the potential danger to the position of the United States that the remarks of Professor Acheson constitute, let me quote further from the New York Times article:

If the Russians get into China, which I doubt, they will have the same miserable experience they had when they sent Michael Borodin there in the 1920's. Borodin got nowhere then, and I see little prospect of the Russians getting anywhere now. The basic conditions and factors in China remain unchanged.

Those are the remarks of a former State Department official, a confidant of the President of the United States, and the brother of the new Secretary of State at the very moment when the world is witnessing the forces of communism taking over control of much of China.

That is one of the very tragic things that is happening in the world, and which has happened in our day. The fact that we in this country have turned our backs upon China, our friend, who stood by us in the days of trouble, will some day come back to haunt the administration in Washington which has made such a thing possible, by reason of our policy in virtually selling China down the river to the Communists.

Again I ask the Senate, is there any connection between the profound opinions of Professor Acheson—implying authority as he seems to do—and the opinions of his brother, the new Secretary of State?

In the same article, the New York Times quotes Professor Acheson as accusing General Clay of employing Nazi-like methods in Germany, which is the same as accusing the United States Government of retaining nazism abroad. Couple this with the friendly attitude Professor Acheson seems to express toward our future relations with Russia, and what questions arise in Senators' minds?

Again I refer to the fact that it was the doubt regarding Dean Acheson's attitude toward Russia, and our program against communism in general, which led to the hearing on his appointment to be Secretary of State. To say the least, it is unfortunate that his brother should speak now as he did in Washington, with the authority he seemed to imply. It is particularly unfortunate because of the publicity it will receive all over the world.

I consider it appropriate, under the circumstances, to call upon Dean Acheson, the new Secretary of State, to speak out and give the people of our country the opportunity to hear his opinions with reference to the statements his brother has already made. Will the Secretary of State tell the country whether there is any connection between his own views and those expressed by Professor Acheson? I feel that he should recognize the responsibility to reassure us all that there is no present intention or future possibility of any further compromise of American principles in Russia's favor. I urge the new Secretary of State to reemphasize firmly, with the influence of his high office, the American intention to promote peace on earth within the standards of American freedoms and the high level of American justice.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the New York Times article of January 28, 1949, to which I have referred, be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES AID SEEN LOST IN CHINA, GREECE—PROF. E. C. ACHESON ALSO DOUBTS MONEY EXPENDED ON GERMANY EVER WILL BRING RESULTS

WASHINGTON, January 27.—Prof. Edward C. Acheson, brother of the new Secretary of State, has declared here that the United States has written off as practically a total loss its huge expenditures in Greece and China. He predicted that substantially the same thing would happen in the recovery program of western Germany.

Mr. Acheson voiced these views at a meeting of Williams College alumni of the District of Columbia. Now a professor of foreign relations at George Washington University, he served in the United States Embassy in China during the war, and last year was President Truman's personal representative on an economic mission to Germany.

"In a few weeks we will have to write off China as a 100-percent loss," Mr. Acheson declared, "and it is only a matter of time when we will have to do the same regarding Greece. In Germany, our military will continue their occupation duties, but we will find it necessary to abandon the inferior Nazi-type controlled economy which General Clay has been operating there.

"We cannot expect the world to believe we are spreading democratic concepts when we employ in Germany the same kind of system the Nazis used with far more efficiency than we have demonstrated. If we are going to keep on with that kind of system, which I doubt, we might as well restore Hjalmar Schacht to power and let him run it. He originated the system of differential currencies now operating in Germany."

Mr. Acheson cited a personal experience to illustrate his condemnation of United States economic policies in Germany.

"I was sent to Europe by President Truman to negotiate for $75,000,000 in Danish foodstuffs for the Allied zones in Germany," he related. "We had a treaty with the Danes on how we would pay for these supplies. We were to pay for them in pounds sterling, because Denmark is in the sterling area. But General Clay rescinded this treaty, in effect, the day before I was to begin my negotiations with the Danish Ministers. He ruled that all purchases in Germany would have to be paid for in dollars. That cut the ground out from under me. The Danes wanted German coal, but paying for it in dollars would have made it too costly for them."

Professor Acheson took an optimistic view regarding future relations with Russia.

"How the Russians feel about the inevitability of war and what they will do to wage war are two different things," he declared. "If the Russians get into China, which I doubt, they will have the same miserable experience they had when they sent Michael Borodin there in the 1920's. Borodin got nowhere then, and I see little prospect of the Russians getting anywhere now. The basic conditions and factors in China remain unchanged.

"The Chinese people are 95 percent agricultural and 90 percent illiterate. No ideology can cope with that. Even the Kuomintang, which has been running China for many years, has failed to make any inroads against this situation. I do not think that the Chinese Communists are Moscow Communists. Even if they were, they will still have their hands full administering the vast territories they have overrun. As the Russian empire keeps spreading out in Europe and Asia, it is beginning to rattle at the edges. Yugoslavia is a graphic instance of this. That's why I feel there is a definite possibility of better relations with the Soviets."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I listened with interest, of course, to the remarks of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire about the Secretary of State, Mr. Acheson, and his brother. I do not know his brother. I have never seen him. I have never heard of him, and did not know that Dean Acheson had a brother until the information imparted by the Senator from New Hampshire.

When the nomination of Mr. Acheson was before the Committee on Foreign Relations we held a public hearing, which is unusual in the case of Cabinet officers. The hearing was held not in the committee room, but in the caucus room, where everyone had an opportunity to come and look and listen, and speak if he wished to do so.

The Senator from New Hampshire did not ask to appear as a witness. I do not know what information he may have had at that time. But every witness except two who appeared was permitted to testify. The two who did not testify were persons who knew nothing about the case, but were permitted to file statements. Their statements are now in the files of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

In addition to holding a public hearing we held a secret hearing, because the subject touched a great many intimate, high level, confidential international matters. In that hearing, before every member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, Mr. Acheson made a complete and full reply to all questions which were propounded to him. The Senator from New Hampshire says he thinks he ought to make a statement now showing that his attitude is different from that of his brother. The statement of Mr. Acheson was quoted in the Senate when his nomination was confirmed, making his position as to communism and totalitarianism clear beyond any question of doubt. His record in the Department and his record as a public officer bear witness to the fact that he has no sympathy with the evil doctrine of communism.

So, Mr. President, I do not think the Secretary of State is to be held responsible for what his professor brother may have said.

Was he in China when he said it, or was he here?

Mr. BRIDGES. He was here, close at hand, so that he had easy access to his brother.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did the Senator ever see him with his brother?

Mr. BRIDGES. No.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did he have access to his brother?

Mr. BRIDGES. I understand he had very close and intimate access.

Mr. CONNALLY. I assume that if he had any contacts, they were of a brotherly or kinship nature. Certainly he did not undertake to tell his brother how to conduct his affairs. He was a brother, and brothers seem to tend to have independent views on various questions—not similar views, but independent views.

He does not say he was a Communist; does he?

Mr. BRIDGES. No.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator draw the inference that he is somewhat sympathetic to communism?

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not draw the inference that he is sympathetic to communism, but I do draw the inference that he is certainly for a "soft" policy and for scuttling a good deal of the work this Government has been doing against communism in the world. When he says we must "write off" Greece, and then makes the same statements about China, and then makes very pointed remarks about the administration of General Clay in Germany, I say that at least, regardless of what the Secretary of State may have to say on this matter, it is unfortunate that he has a brother who at this time is making such remarks which will be so widely publicized all over the world.

Mr. CONNALLY. With the aid of the able Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. I merely desired to clear up the matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, many persons will read what the Senator from New Hampshire says. They will not pay much attention to what Professor Acheson has to say; but the Senator from New Hampshire from his place in the Senate will give the statements widespread publicity which will carry a degree of conviction which Professor Acheson in his own right never could convey.

Mr. President, we have made various appropriations of money for China. I do not recall the exact amounts. It seems to me there was one appropriation of $680,000,000 and another appropriation of $125,000,000, which the Chinese could use for arms and equipment. We sold China millions upon millions of dollars' worth of war matériel for only a fraction, a small percentage, of what it cost—1 percent or 2 percent in some cases—amounting practically to a gift. The Senator from New Hampshire has been chairman of the Appropriations Committee for the past 2 years. If those appropriations were not adequate, why did not the Senator from New Hampshire make them adequate?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The distinguished Senator from Texas may not recall it, but the Senate of the United States did appropriate, on the 1st of last April, $125,000,000 which might be used for military supplies for the Chinese. However, up to the time, perhaps within 2 or 3 weeks ago, when the critical situation in China became so acute, only two shiploads of those materials had arrived in the Pacific waters; and up to that time none of the actual materials had reached the fighting forces of China. In other words, regardless of the intent of the Congress and the appropriations made by the Congress, the supplies did not reach the Chinese Nationalist armies.

Prior to that, for a period of almost 2 years, in spite of their dire need for small arms and cartridges and other munitions in order to be able to continue to fight, we turned our back upon Chiang Kai-shek and the Chinese Nationalists, and we virtually turned them over to the mercies of the Chinese Communists.

One of the things Mr. Acheson said in the article, if the Senator will read it, is that the Chinese Communists are not Moscow Communists. I wish the Senator would read the article carefully before he takes issue with me, because I think probably he would share some of the views I have expressed regarding it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire refers to an appropriation of $125,000,000. Let me say that appropriation was so framed as to give the Chinese the right to do anything they wanted with it. That was done in order to enable them to spend the money for arms, ammunition, and other supplies of a military character.

But the Senator from New Hampshire omits to state that prior to that time we had, on the islands in the Pacific, great masses of military equipment, which we diverted to the Chinese, and the Chinese used it. The information coming to us was that hundreds of thousands of cartridges which supposedly were reaching the Chinese Nationalist armies, actually were turned over to the Communists, either by the Nationalists or by some other Chinese officials. The Communists thus were using material, including arms and ammunition, which the United States had supplied.

Let me refer for a moment to Secretary Marshall. The Senator from New Hampshire is acquainted with him, of course.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am.

Mr. CONNALLY. Before he became Secretary of State, General Marshall spent 13 months in China, trying to give aid to the Chinese.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas will permit me to interrupt him for a moment, let me say I do not think it is appropriate or correct to state that General Marshall spent 13 months in China attempting to give aid to the Chinese. I think he spent 13 months there in a rather futile effort to bring the Communists and the Nationalists together in a sort of coalition movement. But he accomplished nothing, and he returned very embittered. The result has been that China, to all intents and purposes, has been scuttled.

I have a very high opinion of General Marshall as Chief of Staff.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think he did a wonderful job during the war. But as an emissary of this Government to China, I think his efforts were of questionable value.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator from New Hampshire has so much confidence in Mr. Marshall as a general, it seems to me he might trust Mr. Marshall after he had 13 months' experience in China, with close contact with the situation there. Certainly under those circumstances, it seems to me, the Senator from New Hampshire might trust Mr. Marshall as well as he might trust some person who remained here in the United States.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas will yield to me, I should like to say to the able chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee that I do not know whether his committee has yet had a chance to examine the directive under which Mr. Marshall went to China. Both on behalf of the Senate and on behalf of the people of the United States I certainly hope the Foreign Relations Committee will examine the directive under which Mr. Marshall went to China. They should determine whether that directive grew out of the discussions at Yalta, where the Chinese, our historic friends and our allies in a great war, were "sold down the river."

Certainly the results of what happened at Yalta are now being made clear in China today, where it looks as if the Communists will be able to overcome our historic friends and allies in China.

I know the able Senator from Texas will not lose sight of the fact that sitting in with the high Government officials, including the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and our high naval and military authorities, was a State Department official by the name of Alger Hiss.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, well, Alger Hiss. Every time something comes up here they get out a Communist and chase him all around.

Mr. President, I do not sympathize with the Communists. However, it seems that the only argument some persons can present is to holler about Alger Hiss, and then refer to Yalta. They seem to have to dig up something about the dead President of the United States, and they go back to Yalta. The trouble started with the first conference we had on Europe. I heard Secretary Marshall when he came back from his first journey. We heard him testify before the committee. He told us what the troubles in China were, and I shall refer to some of them. He made no charges against the personal character of Chiang Kai-shek. Chiang was surrounded, he said, by many Chinese officials who had been with him since he first emerged as a leader, but who had lost the confidence of their people. Chiang did not have the courage to dismiss them, because they were his old friends and supporters. I do not know whether it was true, but they were charged with graft and corruption, and it was claimed a large part of the funds we were appropriating never got to the people of China themselves. General Marshall endeavored to bring about a coalition government, which he thought was the best way out. He endeavored to have the——

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment. Let me finish a sentence. I have yielded to the Senator several times. I shall yield again.

Mr. BRIDGES. I would like to ask the Senator a question, in a word, at that point.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me finish one little sentence, before the Senator interrupts. If the Senator will please bear with me——

Mr. BRIDGES. Very well.

Mr. CONNALLY. General Marshall undertook to bring about a coalition government. We heard him report about it. We heard him tell how he had flown from one place to another, with little groups assigned to that area, and he thought when he first came back that progress was being made. He thought that a coalition government would be the best solution of the situation. Otherwise, armed operations would have to continue. General Marshall went to China a second time. He was not able to bring about what he desired. He came away with sadness, and with disappointment, but not with bitterness. He did not come back with bitterness toward the Chinese people. He did come back with disappointment and bitterness toward those officials in the nationalist government who were untrue to their trust and who had lost the confidence of the people of China. I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. Those were the people who refused to join the Communists.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I do not know that that is true at all. The Senator may know. If he does, if the Senator will assert——

Mr. BRIDGES. I merely want to point out——

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator will assert on his responsibility as a Senator that that is true, I will accept it.

Mr. BRIDGES. I believe it to be true.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator believes. I want him to assert it as a fact. I do not want any belief. Some persons even believe in ghosts.

Mr. BRIDGES. I assert most things as facts, but I believe a good many things I do not know to be facts, but of which I may have a reasonably accurate knowledge. However, the Senator says that General Marshall's object was to bring the Communists together in a coalition government with the nationalists. I should like to ask the Senator if he can name any country in the world where the Communists have been brought into a coalition government, where within a reasonable time they have not undermined the government and taken over the country?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas is not going to undertake a historical research and lay before the Senator from New Hampshire all the scholarship of the past. The Senator comes from New England, where scholarship is just hanging around in gobs. The Senator should know his history, without referring to one who like myself comes from a bucolic area such as the State of Texas. Of course, the Communists are working at their job, just as every other cult and ideology is undertaking to advance its views—almost as vigorously as the Senator from New Hampshire tried in the recent election and is trying at present to put forward his views and his ideology. We cannot all succeed. In China there was a realistic condition. General Marshall had to face conditions. He had to make the best of what was there. He could not wave a magic wand and convert all the Communists north of the Yangtze River. He could not wave another wand and bring all the Nationalists into a love feast with the Communists, or the Communists with the Nationalists. No, Mr. President, he could not do that. But in closing I simply want to say that I think the attack by the Senator from New Hampshire on the Secretary of State is wholly unjustified.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I made no attack on the Secretary of State. I merely referred to the remarks of his brother, and as to the new Secretary of State, raised the question whether it would not be very proper for him to reveal to the Congress and to the country whether his brother's views, so forcibly expressed, represented his own. It was not an attack on the Secretary himself.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; it was no attack at all—it was merely kicking him in the ribs, punching him in the nose, and pummeling him. It was no attack at all. Of course, it was an attack; not such an attack as a witness might make under oath in court. It was not an attack like that of a witness who must produce facts. But it is an attack by way of insinuation. "His brother thinks so and so, and therefore, if his brother thinks so and so, he is bound to think so and so. His brother's mind is reflected in his mind."

I do not doubt that the characters of the two men differ considerably. I know nothing about the man of whom the Senator speaks, but I do know Mr. Dean Acheson. I know that he appeared before our committee and that every Senator was invited to come before the committee in secret hearing to interrogate him. Senators did not come. When the vote came, every Senator who was at the hearing voted unanimously to report the nomination favorably. The committee held a public hearing, at which everybody was invited to be present, and it was attended by a large audience. So, Mr. President, I hope the Senator——

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes, I yield. I hope, not much further.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator was chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and no doubt he is familiar with the incident. Can he tell us why General Marshall, as Secretary of State, and other responsible Government officials suppressed the Wedemeyer report on China?

Mr. CONNALLY. I know nothing about the Wedemeyer report. I have never seen it.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator knows about it, does he not?

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand there is such a document as the Wedemeyer report.

Mr. BRIDGES. Why does the Senator suppose we sent to China an outstanding general like General Wedemeyer, who spent much time in studying conditions and preparing a report, only to have the report treated as such a secret document that the whole power of the United States Government has been used to suppress it?

Mr. CONNALLY. I suppose one reason was, the report was not made to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. That is correct. Had it been, it would have been published.

Mr. CONNALLY. Another reason was, it was not made to the Senate of the United States. I assume the report was made to the Chief Executive of the United States, under whom General Wedemeyer was serving. I do not know why it was not made public. I suppose it served its purpose. I suppose it advised the President of the United States of the things General Wedemeyer wanted to impart to him, and it probably was not deemed necessary or advisable or wise to publish the report. That is my answer.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does not the Senator, as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, feel that was very vital, a very important report, and that it would have been only courtesy to him to show him that report?

Mr. CONNALLY. I was not chairman of the committee when the report came in.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator not think that as ranking minority member, he was entitled to see it?

Mr. CONNALLY. I have been chairman only a very short time.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator not think it would be a very nice thing if the Senator would call for it now?

Mr. CONNALLY. Why does the Senator not call for it? The Senator can offer a resolution. Let him submit a resolution calling upon the President to dig it up. Let him say in the resolution, "Cough up, Mr. President, the report of General Wedemeyer's." The Senator has his recourse. I was not chairman, and I was not responsible for the report, or for its publication. I know nothing of what is in the report.

There is a great deal of suspicion. It is as though someone were saying, "Let us find out something here, if we can, that we have not seen. Let us find something wrong here. I can smell it. Something wrong."

Mr. President, I do not want to indulge in such procedure.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should like to ask the Senator one further question. Inasmuch as the Senator has suggested that a resolution be introduced to call for the Wedemeyer report, and has recommended that be done——

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I have not recommended anything of the kind.

Mr. BRIDGES. I assumed that.

Mr. CONNALLY. No. The Senator makes too many assumptions. I said the Senator had his remedy, if he wanted to follow it. I have not recommended it. I have not suggested it.

Mr. BRIDGES. Very well.

Mr. CONNALLY. Anyone who suggests anything to the Senator from New Hampshire acts upon a great presumption.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Texas, who is chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, if I should offer such a resolution and it should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, will the Senator assure me that it will be reported favorably?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; the Senator from Texas will not assure the Senator from New Hampshire anything of the kind. The Senator from Texas is only a member of the committee. The resolution might contain anything.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be authorized to report during the adjournment following today's session Joint Resolution 31, providing for the acquisition and operation of the Freedom Train, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THRIFT IN THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, the Treasury has recently undertaken to establish among the school children of the Nation what is called thrift week in connection with the sale of bonds. I have in my hand a letter from a friend of mine in Mason City, Iowa, the writer being Mr. F. C. Heneman, who sends me a news story from the Mason City Globe Gazette which indicates, at least, I believe, the expression of one portion of public sentiment with regard to the whole philosophy involved. I wish to read a few excerpts from this news story:

The request to Mason City's pastors to help with the observance of thrift week failed of a wholehearted response.

"Our National Government today is trying to solve the problem of having an unprecedented deficit by having the Nation's school children practice thrift while the Nation's political leaders waste with an arrogance and contempt that no story book ever presumed to portray," Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, of the First Congregational Church stated.

"Somebody always has to pay the fiddler. In this case it is the taxpayers who have nothing to take the place of money when taxes take all the money they have.

"It would all come nearer making sense if the leaders in Washington, from the President on down, would set the example of thrift which our Nation and the world at large so sorely needs.

"It all sounds hypocritical, if not silly, for the National Government to ask all the children of the Nation who are in our public schools to practice thrift for 1 week while our Nation's political leaders go merrily on throwing the people's money to the four winds without thought for a single minute about the importance of thrift in high places as well as low."

Asking four billion additional taxes at this time is ridiculous, the pastor pointed out, adding that:

"Asking the people to practice thrift in order that the leaders in Washington may be able to spend with an abandon and prodigality which, if practiced by the citizenry of the Nation, would soon put the entire populace on the relief list—in the light of this—the request for their observance is absolutely out of place and grossly and unpardonably inconsistent," he said.

"The best observance that the public school could make of thrift week would be for the susperintendents, principals, and teachers to persuade every pupil or student to write a letter to the Federal thrift committee, United States Congress, Washington, D. C., asking that the Nation's leaders set a good example before the school children of the Nation by practicing the principles of thrift."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter of transmittal from Mr. Heneman and the entire news story be printed immediately following my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF MASON CITY,
Mason City, Iowa, January 28, 1949.

The Honorable BOURKE B. HICKENLOOPER,
United States Senator,

DEAR SENATOR HICKENLOOPER: As you probably know, the Treasury Department in connection with the sale of United States savings bonds, has been endeavoring to have a thrift week program put on through the school system of the country. At the same time they have asked the ministerial association to make thrift the topic of a Sunday morning service. I think you would be interested in some reactions that we have noticed in this town of a little more than 30,000 people. I am enclosing a clipping taken from the Mason City Globe Gazette of January 26, 1949, which represents a brief summary of points made by one of our leading ministers at his morning service.

I am also enclosing a copy of a letter from our superintendent of schools, who is a man of high standing in this community, in which he sets forth very clearly the ideas he has in connection with this type of move. I am sending these to you because I believe they are signs of our times and that you will find them of interest.

Sincerely yours,

F. C. HENEMAN, President.

[From the Mason City Globe-Gazette of January 26, 1949]

SAYS REQUEST FOR THRIFT IS HYPOCRITICAL

The request to Mason City pastors to help in the observance of thrift week failed of a wholehearted response.

"Our National Government today is trying to solve the problem of having an unprecedented deficit by having the Nation's school children practice thrift while the Nation's political leaders waste with an arrogance and contempt that no storybook ever presumed to portray," Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, of the First Congregational Church, stated.

"Somebody always has to pay the fiddler. In this case it is the taxpayers who have nothing to take the place of money when taxes take all the money they have."

SHOULD SET EXAMPLE

"It would all come nearer making sense if the leaders in Washington, from the President on down, would set the example of thrift which our Nation and the world at large so sorely need.

"It all sounds hypocritical, if not silly, for the National Government to ask all the children of the Nation who are in our public schools to practice thrift for 1 week while our Nation's political leaders go merrily on throwing the people's money to the four winds without thought for a single minute about the importance of thrift in high places as well as low."

Asking four billion additional taxes at this time is ridiculous, the pastor pointed out, adding that:

IS INCONSISTENT

"Asking the people to practice thrift in order that the leaders in Washington may be able to spend with an abandon and prodigality which, if practiced by the citizenry of the Nation, would soon put the entire populace on the relief list—in the light of this—the request for their observance is absolutely out of place and grossly and unpardonably inconsistent," he said.

"The best observance that the public school could make of thrift week would be for the superintendents, principals, and teachers to persuade every pupil or student to write a letter to the Federal thrift committee, United States Congress, Washington, D. C., asking that the Nation's leaders set a good example before the school children of the Nation by practicing the principles of thrift."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa asked unanimous consent, I understand, and I was on my feet addressing the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The consent was granted, the Chair understood.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was on my feet addressing the Chair, because I desired to make a statement to be placed in the RECORD immediately following the article which has been read by the Senator from Iowa.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming reserve the right to object?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I reserve the right to object because I think the article is an extremely good illustration of the complete misconception which a great many people have of the expenditures of the Federal Government.

The Eightieth Congress, which went out of existence at the beginning of this year, made appropriations for the fiscal year 1949. Those appropriations were made after due consideration of the President's budget. Many members of the majority in the Eightieth Congress asserted over and over again that the expenditures of the Federal Government were wasteful, that they should be reduced, and while they were making the protestations that the President's budget was wasteful, they were themselves approving recommendations of the Budget Bureau and passing the appropriation bills. The reductions which were put into effect made very little difference in the total budget, and frequently were followed by deficiency appropriations.

Now the fact of the matter is that the expenditures of the Federal Government have been made very high because from 75 to 80 percent of them are for war-connected expenses which cannot be avoided. So I want the author of the statement, when he reads it in the RECORD, to read also the statement of at least one Member of the Senate that his criticisms are utterly without foundation.

The President of the United States, in submitting his budgets to the Congress of the United States ever since he assumed that high executive responsibility, has endeavored—and I think successfully—to cut expenditures to the bone. He has been faced, however, with the necessity of providing funds to take care of veterans' services, to maintain the Army and the Navy and the United States Air Force, to carry on international obligations, and to pay the interest upon the national debt, which amounts to $5,000,000,000 annually—an interest which must be paid if the national debt is to be serviced. All of what is expressed in the statement is based upon an entire misconception of the responsibility of the Government.

I may say that the Senate only last week passed unanimously an appropriation bill adding $500,000 to the disaster fund of the President of the United States, although in a previous Congress the President's disaster fund was seriously cut. This same Congress, without any dissent at all, passed a bill which was introduced by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] on behalf of the Senator from six Western States, authorizing the appropriation of some $3,000,000 for relief from the unprecedented blizzard which affects the entire West, from western Nebraska and western South Dakota to the Pacific coast. These expenditures of government are made on the recommendation of the President and on the approval of the Congress only because they have to be made to provide for unavoidable expenses devolving upon the Government of the United States.

CONSTRUCTION OF LOW-RENT HOUSES

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, out of order I ask unanimous consent to introduce, on behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] and myself, a bill dealing with housing. I also ask to have the bill printed in the RECORD, and to be permited to make an explanatory statement with respect to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and printed in the RECORD. And without objection, the Senator may proceed with his statement.

The bill (S. 757) to provide an effective method for the construction of low-rent homes for low-income families with a minimum of Federal control and expenditure, introduced by Mr. CAIN (for himself and Mr. BRICKER), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as "The Mutual Low-Rent Homes Construction Act."

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. Because a shortage of housing is contrary to the national interest, and because increased home ownership will promote the national welfare, it is the policy of the United States to assist in relieving housing shortages, and to foster and promote the increase of home ownership among the people of the Nation. Because the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary housing for families of low income is a matter of national concern and a prerequisite to the achievement of the freedom from want and freedom from fear which are among our national objectives, it is the policy of the United States to join with States and municipalities in providing a subsidy to make possible the construction of low-rent homes wherever they may be needed in any State. It is the policy of the United States to provide this assistance to home construction without doing violence to the traditional American preference for private enterprise under local rather than Federal control and supervision, and without unjustifiably increasing the size or powers of the Federal agencies. It is the purpose and intent of this act to carry out these policies.

LOCAL LOW-RENT MUTUALS

SEC. 3. A local low-rent mutual, to qualify under this act, shall have (1) not less than 5 nor more than 7 trustees, each named for a term of 5 years, and each of whom shall have been individually appointed as such trustee by the local municipal or county government before the issuance of a State charter to the mutual, (2) a membership committee, appointed by unanimous vote of the trustees, which shall establish rules and procedure for the membership, and (3) members selected by the membership committee from families having family incomes in the lowest one-fifth of family incomes in the community.

GRANTS TO LOCAL LOW-RENT MUTUALS

SEC. 4. (a) The Administrator of the Federal Works Administration is authorized to make grants to local low-rent mutuals to assist in the construction of homes projects undertaken by such mutuals. The amount of any such grant shall be equal to 25 percent of the estimated total development cost of the homes project involved. The aggregate amount of all such grants shall not exceed $1,750,000,000.

fund shall have been made to such mutual, (3) the plans for the mutual low-rent homes project and the site for such project shall have been approved by the local governing authority for the community within which such site is located, and (4) the State within which such site is located, or some appropriate agency thereof, shall have made a grant to such mutual equal to 12½ percent of the estimated total development cost of such projects.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 5. The Administrator of the Federal Works Administration is authorized to make necessary rules and regulations to carry out the purposes of this act.

AUTHORITY FOR APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 6. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, including funds for making the grants provided in section 4. Not more than 10 percent of the funds appropriated pursuant to this section shall be available for low-rent homes projects in any one State.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, it is my privilege, on behalf of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] and myself, to submit for the consideration of the Congress and the Nation a bill which will provide 1,000,000 housing units, if they be needed, which will rent for $30 per month or less, at a cost to our Federal Government not to exceed $1,750,000,000.

I should like to point out to the Senators that when compared with S. 138, which is designed to provide for 1,000,000 public housing units, our bill would mean a savings of $16,050,000,000 to the taxpayers of the Nation. In addition, our bill would provide for eventual home ownership for the occupants of the low-rent housing units so provided.

Mr. President, since coming to the Congress 2 years ago the junior Senator from Washington has been more perplexed and concerned by the Nation's low-rent question than by any other. I have been among those who have strongly resisted the efforts of the administration, and many Members of the Congress, to have the Federal Government create and administer a large-scale subsidized low-rent program throughout the Nation. I have willingly agreed with those who wish to foster such a program that there is a real need to create a substantial housing for a segment of our society which is economically unable to secure present-day housing at a price they can afford to pay, but I have vigorously opposed their belief that this objective can best or only be achieved through management, supervision, and almost complete subsidy by the Federal Government. My thought has been that management and supervision are proper prerogatives of local government, and that required subsidies must be jointly shared by local, State, and Federal levels of government.

Those who have shared my point of view, and there are a number on both side of the aisle, have likewise shared my conspicuous opposition weakness. We have up to this time been opposing something we thought to be wrong, with nothing. We have had nothing constructive to offer as an approach to the subsidized low-rent question. We have merely been against what we did not like. This negative position has brought us distress, and it has been often misunderstood by many who considered us to be obstructionists.

The bill which the Senator from Ohio and I have just sent to the desk is conceived by us to be a solid, reasonable, and constructive approach to the subsidized low-rent problem. All we hope is that serious students of the housing question, both in and out of Congress, will critically examine this new approach, for it has not previously been publicly considered. The Senator from Ohio and I have absolutely no pride of authorship. The idea we advance is not original with us. It has come partly from America and partly from abroad—certainly from Sweden. If others, after study, think it as good as we do we want to join with them in doing something about it.

From some points of view the bill has three surface weaknesses, none of which I conceive to be valid. When compared to every other present proposal before the Congress, the Cain-Bricker proposal does not cost enough. The bill is so simple in concept and words that it can be understood by everybody, and there are those who think that legislation must be complicated to be good. The proposal, if adopted, would return the low-rent problem to the American city and county, where it belongs. That many will fight the idea for this reason is clearly obvious. All the sponsors ask, Mr. President, is that the legislation be examined against the standard of writing legislation which serves the best interests of our citizens everywhere.

I should like to outline briefly what our bill proposes. It is designed to organize mutual low-rent-housing societies at the local level by providing grants-in-aid by local, State, and Federal Governments equal to 50 percent of the total development cost of the housing projects.

We feel that local influence and control must prevail if a project is to be successful. We provide for initiating the grants-in-aid by the local government through the medium of a local referendum which will assure 12½ percent of the total development cost of the project by the municipality. After the local community has voted upon the subject and pledged 12½ percent of the cost, the State in which the project is located would provide 12½ percent of the cost. Then the Federal Government would match these two grants-in-aid by local and State governments in the amount of 25 percent of the total development cost. Thus, with local, State, and Federal grants-in-aid, 50 percent of the cost would be assured.

The remaining 50 percent for the development would be secured from private first-mortgage sources with a long-term mortgage regularly amortized and with the lowest possible interest rate.

Mr. President, I mentioned a few moments ago that our bill, for comparison purposes, would provide the same number of low-rent housing units, namely 1,000,000, at a maximum cost of $7,000 per unit. That totals $7,000,000,000 for the total cost of 1,000,000 units. However, the Federal Government is obligated only to the extent of one-fourth of this total cost, or $1,750,000,000. I should like to point out that S. 138 provides for an annual subsidy of $445,000,000 for a 40-year period, which amount totals $17,800,000,000, and which, presumably, is to supply 1,000,000 public-housing units. Therefore, the difference, Mr. President, between the cost to the Federal Government in form of subsidy for 1,000,000 units under S. 138 and the Cain-Bricker proposal is $16,050,000,000.

Every Senator has heard much, Mr. President, about Federal aid to education, Federal aid to medicine, Federal aid for this, and Federal aid for that. The saving which could be realized in this one piece of legislation alone would more than pay for all of the other proposals—assuming, of course, Mr. President, that the Senate would approve those proposals.

Whereas a substantially large agency is necessary to administer the administration's legislation, our bill would require nothing but local administration. This is made possible by the fact that the bill provides for only one payment in the form of grants-in-aid and no Federal or State administrative agency, while the administration bill provides for a continuity of 40 years' administration through a Federal agency during the time provided for payment of the subsidy.

The maximum cost limit under this Cain-Bricker bill is $7,000 per house, including the land, while the administration bill limits the cost to $2,500 per room.

Taking the average two bedroom, five-room house, the maximum cost per house to the taxpayer under S. 138 would be $12,500 exclusive of land and other facilities. Mr. President, practically every city in this Nation has tax land already owned by the city. This could well be the nucleus for the start of a project as proposed in our bill.

I repeat, Mr. President, that this bill provides that only one-fourth of the total cost of the development of these projects be assumed by the Government. Under S. 138, the administration bill, a minimum of 90 percent of the total cost is borne by the Federal Government.

Home ownership is the eventual goal of our bill. The tenants who are participants in these mutual housing developments would eventually become owners of their own homes in which they live. This is impossible under the administration's housing bill, because it is set up to be rental housing at all times.

Although the administration bill refers to local public-housing agencies as the governing agencies, I know from my own personal experience that this is not true, because the plans, sites, tenants, and procedures are all screened and finally passed upon by Washington. Under the Cain-Bricker bill, full and complete control would be vested in the local community and local authorities. Neither Federal nor State Government would have any controlling influence.

Qualifications for admission to these mutual housing projects proposed in our bill are specifically limited to those families having an income in the lowest one-fifth of the family incomes in the community, as determined by the trustees who are appointed by the municipal or county government. Under S. 138 the local public housing agency must show the Washington office that a gap—and I quote from the bill, Mr. President—

> A gap of at least 20 percent has been left between the upper rental limits for admission to the proposed low-rent housing and the lowest rents at which private enterprise is providing (through new construction and available existing structures) a substantial supply of * * * housing toward meeting the need of an adequate volume thereof.

The only assurance that the lowest income groups can get into the housing provided for by the administration bill is that there shall be no discrimination against them.

The Cain-Bricker bill provides that the mutual housing projects to be constructed shall pay local ad valorem taxes to lessen the tax burden of the local community. The administration bill, however, specifically exempts the public housing units from paying local real-estate taxes, thereby adding to the burden of the community which must provide sewerage, water, police, and fire protection with no income from the project to assist in payment for these services. However, a token payment may be made in lieu of taxes.

The rents being paid in public housing projects today admittedly average over $30 per month. Rentals under the Cain-Bricker bill could be kept within a $13–$30 per month range. This would be possible because administration costs are confined to the local project and are not part of a superstructure of Federal agencies.

Mr. President, our bill recognizes States' rights. Under this proposal action must first be taken by the local community through local referendum before a project can be considered. In other words, the voters in every community in the Nation would have an opportunity to choose for themselves whether or not they want a mutual low-rent project in their community, as well as determine the extent of their need. Under the administration bill the local public housing agency deals directly with the Federal Government, bypassing the State. The extent of local determination is merely a request for assistance. The final decision rests in Washington. I have always contended, Mr. President, that Washington cannot foresee the requirements and needs of every community of this Nation. It must be a community-controlled-and-operated project to succeed.

While under this proposed bill the local community would participate in 12½ percent of the construction cost, the administration bill requires the community to pay 10 percent of the construction cost. But, Mr. President, I should like to point out to the Senators that the community would recover, under the Cain-Bricker bill, its portion of the grant-in-aid in the form of real-estate taxes in 7 to 12 years. Under the administration bill no real-estate taxes are paid, except the possible token payments in lieu of taxes.

I should like to point out now that because of economic rents being paid today in public-housing projects surpluses have been accumulated, and these surpluses, under the administration bill, would accrue to the benefit of the Federal Government. Under the Cain-Bricker bill, however, any profits by reason of good management go to the tenants in lower rents.

I want to state here that we used the one million units figure only as a basis for comparison with S. 138, the administration bill. There is no specific number of units that may be constructed under our proposed bill, because, of course, that number must be determined by the local communities. And there is no number picked out of a hat based upon economic theories. This bill will provide incentive for home ownership and will give the tenant an opportunity to help himself by sharing responsibilities that are rightfully his and the community's.

Aside from the fact that this bill would save the taxpayers $14,300,000,000—which is quite a sizable sum—it does not set up a Federal bureau which, by reason of the legislation, would be continued for at least 40 years. It will provide better housing for the people for whom it is intended—those in the lowest income groups of their respective communities. And, finally, full and complete authority always is vested in the local community.

Mr. President, I have in my hand a detailed explanation of the bill which, because I think it will be of thought-provoking interest to every Senator, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. Willett was for a number of years active in banking and the purchase and sale of securities before assuming his position with the Federal Government. It was because of his demonstrated capacity as assistant loan manager of the RFC and in other capacities that President Truman first appointed him a Director of the Corporation on June 19, 1948.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM—ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I inquire what business will be considered next, and when will the Senate meet again?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senate will adjourn until Thursday next. At that time the only business coming before the Senate will be the bill reported from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, dealing with the continuation of the Freedom Train. That is a nonpartisan measure, and I anticipate that it will take only a short time.

Mr. President, I now move that the Senate adjourn until Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, February 3, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 31, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou Eternal One, from whom all blessings flow, our times are in Thine hands. We implore Thee to help us to be diligent, lest we fail ere the setting of the sun. Give us a sane and reasonable faith, lest our fears conquer us; give us a sympathy that includes all suffering and distressed humanity; give us a religion that will stand every test, and a large measure of health, wisdom, and deep consideration for all men. Through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 27, 1949, was read and approved.

GEN. COURTNEY HODGES

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. As there is no legislative program for today, without objection that may be done.

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, today a great soldier will retire from the United States Army after more than 43 years of continuous service. I speak of Gen. Courtney Hodges, who rose from the enlisted ranks to become a four-star general and the great wartime commander of our mighty First Army.

He was born in Perry, Ga., on January 5, 1887. He was the son of John Hicks

Hodges and Katherine Norwood Hodges. His father was a newspaper publisher.

Ever since his boyhood, he was filled with an ambition to become a soldier. And so in 1904, at the age of 17, he entered the United States Military Academy at West Point. But misfortune overtook him in his first year as a result of his difficulties in geometry and he was forced to leave the Academy.

Undaunted and determined upon a soldier's career, he promptly enlisted as a private in the Seventeenth Infantry, United States Army, at Fort McPherson, Ga. He served 3 years as an enlisted man and then won a competitive examination for a commission as a second lieutenant of infantry. This was in 1909, when he was 22 years old. After 7 years of service at Army posts in the southwest United States and in the Philippines, he was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant in 1916. From March of that year until the following February he served in Mexico under General Pershing.

In 1918, now a captain, he was sent to France with the Sixth United States Infantry Regiment, Fifth Division. During World War I he received promotions through temporary grades to lieutenant colonel and fought as a battalion commander and later as a regimental commander in the Lorraine, Argonne, and St. Mihiel offensives. He rendered service with such distinction in these actions that he won the Distinguished Service Cross and the Silver Star.

During the long peacetime years after World War I, he devoted himself assiduously to the task of increasing his professional knowledge and abilities. He attended the Field Artillery School at Fort Sill, Okla., in 1920, and was promoted to the permanent grade of major in that year. Shortly thereafter he served as an instructor in the department of tactics at West Point. Tours of duty at the highest level service schools followed with his assignment to the Command and General Staff School at Leavenworth in 1925 and with later duties at the Infantry School, Fort Benning, Ga., and the Air Corps Tactical School at Langley Field. Finally, in 1934 he completed the course at the War College in Washington, D. C., thus completing his formal military education.

Following his promotion to lieutenant colonel in October of 1934, he served for 2 years on the general staff of the Philippine department, from 1936 to 1938. Thereafter he returned to the United States and was assigned as assistant commandant and later as commandant of the Infantry School at Fort Benning, Ga. There he laid the foundations for modern infantry training and the instruction of officers and men which later made possible the rapid wartime expansion of that important school. His work in this respect alone should earn him the undying gratitude of all Americans. But however important, it has been completely eclipsed by his later more illustrious accomplishments as a field commander in World War II.

With the expansion of the Army immediately prior to World War II, he was rapidly promoted to the rank of colonel and brigadier general. In March of 1941 he was assigned to the Office of the Chief of Infantry in Washington, D. C., and soon thereafter he himself became in succession Acting Chief of Infantry and then Chief of Infantry. He was promoted to the rank of major general in May 1941. Because of General Hodges' recognized abilities as an able and experienced field commander, it was not long after the commencement of World War II before he was ordered to Texas to activate the X Corps, which was then a part of the Third Army, under Gen. Walter Krueger. In February 1943, after promotion to the rank of lieutenant general, he succeeded General Krueger. A year later he was ordered overseas as deputy commander of the First United States Army, under Gen. Omar N. Bradley, commanding general. From his headquarters in Bristol, England, he took up the task of directing the training and coordination of the various corps, divisions, and other units attached to the First Army in preparation for the coming assault on Fortress Europe.

On June 6, 1944, D-day, General Hodges landed in Normandy. A few weeks later, when General Bradley assumed command of the Twelfth Army Group, General Hodges took command of the First Army. That was in August of 1944, and under his leadership the First Army punched a hole through the German defenses at Avranches and Mortain, thus enabling Gen. George S. Patton's armor to make the famous breakthrough at St. Lo. General Hodges threw back a strong counter attack by five Panzer divisions at Mortain and rushed forward to meet the British Second Army, coming up from the west, thus creating the Falaise-Argentan pocket, where some 100,000 Germans were surrounded and captured, thus eliminating the German Seventh Army as a combat force.

General Hodges' First Army not only made the first landings on the Normandy Beach, and the first breakthrough at St. Lo, but was also the first to enter Paris on August 25, 1944. Following the capitulation of the French capital, General Hodges drove on to the Aisne and the Marne, reaching the Belgian frontier on September 2. He liberated Liége on the 8th of September, crossed Luxemburg, and on September 11 the First Army again checked off another first by being the first American troops to enter Germany.

The capture of Aachen and the battle of the Huertgen Forest followed in October and November. The stage was now set for the capture of the Roer River dams, the strategic key to any further advance across the Roer River to the Cologne plain. However, this planned operation was suddenly interrupted by the ferocious counterattack of Von Rundstedt, known as the Battle of the Bulge.

In 2 weeks of the bitterest fighting in fog, rain, snow, and freezing weather, the combat divisions of General Hodges' First Army halted Von Rundstedt's attack and resumed their own offensive on January 3, 1945.

Exploiting Von Rundstedt's failure, General Hodges took off again to the east early in January of 1945 and a few weeks later, on March 7, he reached the Rhine through the ruins of Cologne. At this point one of the most dramatic incidents of the war occurred, the crossing of the Ludendorff Bridge at Remagen before the Germans had time to destroy it. This opportunity was immediately exploited to its fullest extent as armor and infantry poured rapidly across the damaged bridge and established a firm bridgehead across the Rhine before the damaged structure finally collapsed.

Two and one-half weeks later, the First Army broke out of its Remagen bridgehead and raced on across Germany in its final drive to destroy the German forces. Some elements pushed on toward Frankfurt-am-Main and others sped forward to make contact with the United States Ninth Army, which by now had also crossed the Rhine and was driving eastward.

Finally at Torgau, on the Elbe, on April 25, 1945, 10 days after General Hodges had been promoted to the four-star rank of full general, First Army divisions were the first American troops to contact the Russian armies at the Elbe-Mulde River line. Thus the First Army was first on the Normandy beaches, first to break through at St. Lo, first to liberate Paris, first into Germany, first across the Rhine, and first to make contact with the Russians. The First United States Army had lived up to its name and its great accomplishments were due in no small measure to the leadership and ability of General Hodges, a soldier's soldier, whom Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower has referred to as sturdy and steady Hodges. Sturdy and steady he was, indeed, and at the same time a man so modest and self-effacing that, in spite of his gigantic accomplishments in World War II, he has not received the same public attention as some of our more widely proclaimed heroes. He is one of those quiet men of extraordinary competence whose very steadiness itself has kept him out of the spotlight of glamor. But history will recognize him among the ranks of our greatest soldiers.

It is sad, indeed, that this energetic man, whose blue eyes and vigor of movement belie his 62 years of age, must now enter upon retirement. May we wish him continued good health and a long and happy life and may we express to him the profound gratitude of all Americans.

MOHANDAS KARAMCHAND GANDHI

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, yesterday was the anniversary of the death by assassination of Mahatma Gandhi, one of those rare ones who lived his belief in every hour of his days and nights, whose influence encircles the earth.

It was my privilege to be included among those invited by the Ambassador of India to the impressive and deeply moving memorial services held in the auditorium of the Department of the Interior. With great understanding the Indian Embassy recognized that here in Washington are many who revere this great spirit that chose to serve mankind in this moment of universal need in the frail form of Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi, known to us as the Mahatma, to many of his followers as Bapu—an untranslatable name of love.

No one who was present could fail to have been deeply moved by the simplicity of the service. For myself I was lifted up as I have not been in many long moons. The reality of spiritual force pervaded me, the universality of truth enveloped me, and I came away renewed in body and soul. It is with deep appreciation that I take this method of thanking the Ambassador from India and Lady Rama Rau for this uplifting experience that has given me new courage and certain hope that one day all the people of the world will live together in complete understanding and demonstration of the nonviolence for which Mahatma Gandhi gave his life.

That there may be in the RECORD a less personal word of this memorial hour I am inserting a clipping of this morning from the Washington Post:

MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR GANDHI ATTRACT MORE THAN 700 HERE—INDIAN AMBASSADOR CONDUCTS RITES IN INTERIOR AUDITORIUM

An impressive memorial service to Mahatma Gandhi, featured by prayers chanted and spoken by the Indian leader's personal physician, was held here yesterday on the first anniversary of Gandhi's assassination.

Conducted by Sir Benegal Rama Rau, Ambassador of India to the United States, the service was held at the Department of the Interior auditorium and was attended by more than 700 persons, including ambassadors and other high-ranking Washington representatives of many nations.

Gandhi's physician, Dr. Sushila Nayar, was attended in the prayer service by 11 ladies of the Indian Embassy, attired in flowing saris of white, as a symbol of the simplicity which was one of the spiritual leader's characteristics.

Explaining that Mahatma Gandhi respected all true religions, she opened the service by chanting a Buddhist prayer, and, after 2 minutes of silence, sang verses from the Hindu scriptures. Then followed excerpts from the Mohammedan Koran, from the Bhagavad-Gita, supreme scripture of Hindu India, from scriptures of the Sikh sect, and from the Sermon on the Mount, Gandhi's favorite part of the Bible.

Dr. Nayar, who is in this country for postgraduate work at Johns Hopkins and Columbia Universities, said the United Nations is not respected in some places because the big nations have violated one of Gandhi's principles, that of nonaccumulation of great material possessions. Accumulation of material power has made everyone want to be big, just as Gandhi insisted it always did, with individuals or with nations, she said.

Dr. Paul Douglass, president of American University, reviewed the high points of Gandhi's life, while Lady Rama Rau in a brief talk spoke of him as a great spiritual leader from the historical point of view, but a "man whom we loved" to "the humble Indians."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include a newspaper editorial in each.

Mr. RICH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by the chairman of the board of directors of the Jones & Laughlin Steel Co.

Mr. BREHM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. LEFEVRE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from the Wall Street Journal.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a bill he is today introducing.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article entitled "Expansion Estimates to 1960 for Pacific Northwest Industries." I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $266.25, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. TRIMBLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. MADDEN asked an was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. FARRINGTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement with respect to William McKinley and the annexation of Hawaii.

PERMITTING UNINCORPORATED BUSINESSES TO BE TAXED LIKE CORPORATIONS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today a bill which will permit unincorporated businesses to be taxed like corporations. The bill will permit the business enterprise, if the owners so elect, to be treated as if it were a corporation, and amounts received from such business enterprise by the individual owners will be regarded as dividends. By treating such business enterprise as a corporation, it will be permitted to accumulate earnings for expansion and increased production purposes without being subject to any higher rate than the rate applicable to corporations.

At the present time, an individual in business is compelled to pay the full normal and surtax on any earnings left in his business. Of course, if the earnings are accumulated beyond the reasonable needs of the business enterprise, the provisions of section 102, relating to unreasonable accumulation of earnings for the purpose of avoiding individual surtaxes, will be applicable. Because of administrative difficulties, the relief is necessarily granted to businesses owned by not more than 10 individuals.

My bill becomes effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1949. It is introduced at this time so that it can receive full study and analysis by all persons interested in such a proposal.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS] has had a death in his family necessitating his return to Louisiana. I ask unanimous consent that he be granted a leave of absence for 6 days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO COMMITTEES

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk House Resolution 68 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the following committees of the House of Representatives:

Committee on District of Columbia: JAMES WADSWORTH, New York.

Committee on Un-American Activities: J. PARNELL THOMAS, New Jersey; RICHARD M. NIXON, California; FRANCIS CASE, South Dakota; HAROLD H. VELDE, Illinois.

The resolution was agreed to. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INDEPENDENT OIL OPERATORS

Mr. REGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and include a telegram.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REGAN. Mr. Speaker, the independent oil operators of our country are rapidly being squeezed out of business through two forces that our Government should do its utmost to correct.

These independent oil operators are composed of the real type of American pioneers that have made this country of ours great.

Men who go forth to risk their all in the discovery of new horizons and new wealth for the benefit and good of all and for the hoped-for reward and gain that their efforts and risks sometimes provide them.

During the recent war in which our country was engaged it was these men, the independent oilmen of America, that concentrated their energies and their means, their ability, and techniques to keep apace with our great increase in demand for petroleum and its products that played such a huge and all-important part in winning the war.

Since the cessation of hostilities these same men have found it increasingly difficult to pursue their business.

First, the black market and extreme scarcity of well pipe due to a large extent to the export of great tonnage of this necessary commodity to the foreign fields of Iran, Iraq, and Saudi Arabia.

Now, following the exportation of this tremendous quantity of pipe the resultant production of foreign oil is reaching our shores to create a surplus and discourage, if not stop, further exploration drilling, discoveries, and production in our own country.

Are we to encourage and condone this procedure to the end that this vital industry shall further suffer and be killed?

I offer a telegram from my good friend, R. L. Wood, as one of the many expressions of protest received from representatives and members of the great fraternity of pioneers:

WICHITA FALLS, TEX., January 28, 1949.
Congressman KEN REGAN,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Statement by the executive committee and State vice presidents of the Independent Petroleum Association of America at Wichita Falls, Tex., January 28, 1949:

"An increasing flood of foreign oil is jeopardizing our national economy, our national security, and resulting in the unemployment of American labor.

"Two world wars have proved that America cannot depend on foreign oil in an emergency. Foreign oil, thousands of miles away in troubled areas and under the insecure control of a combination of a few importing companies, is a slender thread on which to hang the security of the American people.

"Domestic oil producers since the war have increased the production of crude oil in the United States until they are now more than able to supply every need of the American consumer. The output of domestic oil can be further increased. It will not be increased if this market is absorbed by foreign oil, thus depriving the independent oil producer of the funds necessary to discover and develop adequate reserves in the United States.

"The few large importing companies, through short-sightedness, indifference, or selfish interest, are endangering the national security in their rush to produce and sell their foreign oil in the markets of this country. Most of their foreign reserves are in the Middle East. Less than 2 hours' bombing time from Russia.

"This revival of international cartels, which owe allegiance to no country, should not be permitted to monopolize or destroy American life.

"The Independent Petroleum Association of America insists that the Congress should protect the welfare and security of the American people by enacting such legislation as is necessary to restrict petroleum imports to only such quantities as may be needed to supplement domestic production."

BOB WOOD.

OUR PRESIDENTS' HEALTH

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I recommend to my colleagues that they read a recent book, by Dr. Carl Wold, on the physical health of our Presidents. Dr. Wold has spent years on this research and tells how the health of our Presidents has affected great decisions of this country and the world. Look magazine for this week publishes one of the chapters of this book on the health of Franklin Delano Roosevelt. His paralysis, later illnesses, and unusually lengthy term of service, during an era of great national strain, focused more than usual attention on the state of the President's health.

Our Presidents carry a tremendous burden that at times seems more than the strongest man might be able to bear. Our Presidents, because of their tremendous responsibilities, need to divide these responsibilities so that part of them could be carried by a so-called Assistant President, and by a strong Cabinet.

I am certain that if the people had been properly informed of Franklin Roosevelt's health by competent, unbiased physicians, he, himself, never would have made the sacrifice of running for a fourth term, and indeed might be alive today. It seems to me that often selfish, greedy politicians, officeholders, and leeches on our political body use undue force and persuasion to keep their political advantages.

The world now knows that Franklin Roosevelt was an ill man at the end of his third term. His condition became worse when he was a candidate for a fourth term. In the early part of his fourth term he had important conferences with world leaders. He and his advisers made agreements with Joe Stalin that have cost this country billions of dollars and perhaps even a third world war. He gave his best and perhaps came to an untimely death because of the crushing burdens forced upon an ill man.

I have often recommended that Presidents be examined periodically by unbiased, well qualified medical men and that a report be given to the proper committee of Congress. I am also just as certain that no President should ever serve more than two terms. This Nation ought to profit by past mistakes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DONDERO (at the request of Mr. MICHENER) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from a constituent.

Mr. LANHAM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include three speeches that I made in this House in the last two Congresses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 22, Rept. No. 9), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of 10 Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a study and investigation of the problems of small business, existing, arising, or that may arise, with particular reference to (1) whether the potentialities of small business are being adequately developed and, if not, what factors have hindered and are hindering the normal operation of established small business and/or its development and enterprise; (2) whether agencies, departments of the Government or Government owned or controlled corporations are properly, adequately, or equitably serving the needs of small business; (3) whether small business is being treated fairly and the public welfare properly and justly served through the allotments of valuable materials in which there are shortages, in the granting of priorities or preferences in the use, sales, or purchase of said materials; and (4) the need for a sound program for the solution of the postwar problems of small business.

The committee may from time to time submit to the House such preliminary reports as it deems advisable; and prior to the close of the present Congress shall submit to the House its final report on the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable. Any report submitted when the House is not in session may be filed with the Clerk of the House.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to borrow from Government departments and agencies such special assistants, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any properly designated chairman of a subcommittee thereof, or any member designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 2, strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "nine."

Page 3, at the end of line 6, after the period, insert the following: "The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file another privileged report, and possibly one other in addition thereto. One is a bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency on which there has been a unanimous report. A request will be made for a rule at 2 o'clock on another bill, which also has the unanimous support of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what committee does that bill come from?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will deal with that matter in a moment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

COCKTAIL PARTIES

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I have read numerous reports in the press recently from individuals placed in high position by the electorate to the effect that the rounds of cocktail parties and the drinking in Washington have become so great that they cannot attend to their public business.

I am afraid that the publication of those statements in the press would be a reflection upon the hard-working Members of Congress of the United States who have the ability to withstand the invitations of those society climbers who would have the Members of Congress attend cocktail parties every day. But I want it said that as a result of 10 years' experience of my own here in this body it has been my observation that the hard-working Members of this body, and most of them are, are able to resist the temptation, if such a thing exists. I can say to those who are complaining that all they have to do is simply say "No." Let them not attend those cocktail parties that are interfering with their activities, and quit drinking cocktails if it interferes with doing business. The overwhelming majority of the Members of Congress have done so and are able to do so today.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENSEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Times-Herald.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I present a privileged resolution (H. Res. 50) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is requested to transmit to the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable time the following information, namely:

1. What does the Department know about whether Egypt and Transjordan, or either of them, has invoked its mutual assistance treaty with Great Britain?

2. Has the United States asked Great Britain for an explanation of the recent presence of its military aircraft over the battle zone between the Israeli and Egyptian forces on the border of Palestine and Egypt?

3. Has the United States asked Great Britain for an explanation of the recent shipment or proposed shipment of troops to the port of Aqaba in Transjordan, and the purposes for which said troops are proposed to be employed?

4. In the opinion of the Department, did the presence of British military aircraft over the Israeli-Egyptian fighting zone, or the arrival of British troops at Aqaba, infringe upon the resolutions of the General Assembly or the Security Council of the United Nations adopted in 1948 with respect to Palestine?

5. What information does the Department have regarding British sales or shipments, if any, directly or indirectly, of arms or implements of war since April 17, 1948, to Transjordan, Egypt, Syria, Lebanon, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, or Yemen?

6. If the sales or shipments referred to in question 5 have taken place, did such sales or shipments constitute, in the opinion of the Department, infringements upon the resolutions of the General Assembly or the Security Council of the United Nations adopted in 1948 with respect to Palestine?

7. What is the present policy of the Department regarding the continuance or lifting of the embargo, announced on December 5, 1947, on the shipment of arms or implements of war to Israel and the other Middle Eastern countries?

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk the adverse report of the committee, together with a memorandum report from the Secretary of State. I ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee, together with the memorandum report, be read, but that the excerpts accompanying the report from the records of the United Nations not be read, due to their length and in order to conserve the time of the House, but that such excerpts be printed in the RECORD, together with the other documents.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman is not asking for the passage of this resolution now, is he? He is not attempting to bring the resolution up, is he?

Mr. KEE. Of course, the resolution is before the House.

Mr. RANKIN. I certainly am not willing to join in this war on Great Britain.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Mississippi will be patient, the Chair understands that a motion will be offered which will dispose of that question.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand; but I am not willing to join in this war on the British people. This Palestine proposition has developed into a satellite state of Soviet Russia. We need not kid ourselves any further. I am not willing for the Congress of the United States to join in making war on Great Britain or aiding Russia by financing or feeding or supplying her satellite state.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 50) to obtain information from the Secretary of State on the Palestine situation, having considered the same, reports unfavorably thereon without amendment and recommends that the resolution do not pass.

The recommendation of the committee is based on a communication received from the Department of State, the text of which is included in this report for the information of the House.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 26, 1949.

The Honorable SOL BLOOM,
Chairman, Foreign Affairs Committee, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BLOOM: Pursuant to our conversation this morning, I enclose a memorandum report on House Resolution 50, together with copies of the General Assembly's resolutions of May 15, 1947, and December 11, 1948, as well as the resolutions of the Security Council dated May 29 and July 15, 1948.

If I can be of further assistance to you, do not hesitate to make known your desires.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT MCCLINTOCK,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE MEMORANDUM ON HOUSE RESOLUTION 50, JANUARY 26, 1949

House Resolution 50, calling for information on the Palestine situation, comes at a time when very delicate and important conversations are in progress between the representatives of the Provisional Government of Israel and several of the Arab governments, looking toward the establishment of peace in Palestine. It would be unfortunate if information furnished pursuant to House Resolution 50 should become public during these negotiations. Furthermore, the United States Government is a member of the Palestine Conciliation Commission appointed pursuant to the General Assembly's resolution of December 11, 1948. This Government must use its utmost endeavor to preserve its position of strict impartiality as a member of the Palestine Conciliation Commission in order that its best efforts may be used on the Commission in an endeavor to assist the parties to the Palestine dispute to reach a peaceful and permanent solution of their problem.

UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION OF MAY 15, 1947

The General Assembly calls upon all governments and peoples, and particularly upon the inhabitants of Palestine, to refrain, pending action by the General Assembly on the report of the Special Committee on Palestine, from the threat or use of force or any other action which might create an atmosphere prejudicial to an early settlement of the question of Palestine.

Seventy-ninth plenary meeting, May 15, 1947.

(b) To carry out the specific functions and directives given to it by the present resolution and such additional functions and directives as may be given to it by the General Assembly or by the Security Council;

(c) To undertake, upon the request of the Security Council, any of the functions now assigned to the United Nations mediator on Palestine or to the United Nations Truce Commission by resolutions of the Security Council; upon such request to the Conciliation Commission by the Security Council with respect to all the remaining functions of the United Nations mediator on Palestine under Security Council resolutions, the office of the mediator shall be terminated;

3. Decides that a committee of the Assembly, consisting of China, France, the Union of

8. Resolves that, in view of its association with three world religions, the Jerusalem area, including the present municipality of Jerusalem plus the surrounding villages and towns, the most eastern of which shall be Avu Dis; the most southern, Bethlehem; the most western, Ein Karim (including also the built-up area of Motsa); and the most northern, Shufat, should be accorded special and separate treatment from the rest of Palestine and should be placed under effective United Nations control;

Requests the Security Council to take further steps to insure the demilitarization of Jerusalem at the earliest possible date;

Instructs the Conciliation Commission to present to the fourth regular session of the General Assembly detailed proposals for a permanent international regime for the Jerusalem area which will provide for the maximum local autonomy for distinctive groups consistent with the special international status of the Jerusalem area;

The Conciliation Commission is authorized to appoint a United Nations representative who shall cooperate with the local authorities with respect to the interim administration of the Jerusalem area;

Instructs the Conciliation Commission to report immediately to the Security Council, for appropriate action by that organ, any attempt by any party to impede such access;

10. Instructs the Conciliation Commission to seek arrangements among the governments and authorities concerned which will facilitate the economic development of the area, including arrangements for access to ports and airfields and the use of transportation and communication facilities;

Instructs the Conciliation Commission to facilitate the repatriation, resettlement, and economic and social rehabilitation of the refugees and the payment of compensation, and to maintain close relations with the director of the United Nations Relief for Palestine Refugees and, through him, with the appropriate organs and agencies of the United Nations;

12. Authorizes the Conciliation Commission to appoint such subsidiary bodies and to employ such technical experts, acting under its authority, as it may find necessary for the effective discharge of its functions and responsibilities under the present resolution;

The Conciliation Commission will have its official headquarters at Jerusalem. The authorities responsible for maintaining order in Jerusalem will be responsible for taking all measures necessary to insure the security of the Commission. The Secretary-General will provide a limited number of guards for the protection of the staff and premises of the Commission;

Calls upon all governments and authorities concerned to order a cessation of all acts of armed force for a period of 4 weeks:

Calls upon all governments and authorities concerned to undertake that they will not introduce fighting personnel into Palestine, Egypt, Iraq, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Transjordan, and Yeman during the cease fire;

Calls upon all governments and authorities concerned, should men of military age be introduced into countries or territories under their control, to undertake not to mobilize or submit them to military training during the cease fire;

RESOLUTION ON THE PALESTINIAN QUESTION ADOPTED AT THE THREE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-EIGHTH MEETING OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL, JULY 15, 1948

The Security Council taking into consideration that the provisional government of Israel has indicated its acceptance in principle of a prolongation of the truce in Palestine; that the states members of the Arab League have rejected successive appeals of the United Nations mediator, and of the Security Council in its resolution of July 7, 1948, for the prolongation of the truce in Palestine; and that there has consequently developed a renewal of hostilities in Palestine;

Determines that the situation in Palestine constitutes a threat to the peace within the meaning of article 39 of the Charter;

Orders the governments and authorities concerned, pursuant to article 40 of the Charter of the United Nations, to desist from further military action and to this end to issue cease-fire orders to their military and paramilitary forces, to take effect at a time to be determined by the mediator, but in any event not later than 3 days from the date of the adoption of this resolution;

Declares that failure by any of the governments or authorities concerned to comply with the preceding paragraph of this resolution would demonstrate the existence of a breach of the peace within the meaning of article 39 of the Charter requiring immediate consideration by the Security Council with a view to such further action under chapter VII of the Charter as may be decided upon by the Council;

Calls upon all governments and authorities concerned to continue to cooperate with the mediator with a view to the maintenance of peace in Palestine in conformity with the resolution adopted by the Security Council on May 29, 1948;

Orders as a matter of special and urgent necessity an immediate and unconditional cease fire in the city of Jerusalem to take effect 24 hours from the time of the adoption of this resolution, and instructs the Truce Commission to take any necessary steps to make this cease fire effective;

Instructs the mediator to continue his efforts to bring about the demilitarization of the city of Jerusalem, without prejudice to the future political status of Jerusalem, and to assure the protection of and access to the holy places, religious buildings, and sites in Palestine;

Instructs the mediator to supervise the observance of the truce and to establish procedures for examining alleged breaches of the truce since June 11, 1948, authorizes him to deal with breaches so far as it is within his capacity to do so by appropriate local action, and requests him to keep the Security Council currently informed concerning the operation of the truce and when necessary to take appropriate action;

Decides that, subject to further decision by the Security Council or the General Assembly, the truce shall remain in force, in accordance with the present resolution and with that of May 29, 1948, until a peaceful adjustment of the future situation of Palestine is reached;

Reiterates the appeal to the parties contained in the last paragraph of its resolution of May 22 and urges upon the parties that they continue conversations with the mediator in a spirit of conciliation and mutual concession in order that all points under dispute may be settled peacefully;

Requests the Secretary-General to provide the mediator with the necessary staff and facilities to assist in carrying out the functions assigned to him under the resolution of the General Assembly of May 14, and under this resolution; and Requests that the Secretary-General make appropriate arrangements to provide necessary funds to meet the obligations arising from this resolution.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN) there were—ayes 101, noes 1.

So the motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL WEDNESDAY AND LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object, I simply do this to inquire as to the program on Wednesday.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am glad the gentleman made that inquiry, as I had intended to make a statement to the House. I had previously indicated there would be nothing on Monday and Tuesday, and that as far as Wednesday or any other day of this week was concerned I would give 24 hours' notice to the Members.

On Wednesday, if a rule is reported from the Rules Committee—and I am not specifying the order as I make this statement—we will call up H. R. 1660. That is a bill to continue through September 30, 1949, certain authority conferred on the President by section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, regarding voluntary agreements and plans.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is the same bill that we passed last year?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is correct.

This bill simply extends it until September 30.

Then there is House Resolution 22, introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], creating a select committee to be known as the Small Business Committee. The older Members are familiar with that.

Then there is H. R. 128, a bill to provide that acreage planted to cotton in 1949 shall not be considered in computing the cotton acreage for any ensuing year. I understand that has the unanimous approval of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That will be on Wednesday?

Mr. McCORMACK. I have scheduled those matters for Wednesday. If they are not completed then, of course they will come up on Thursday.

While I have no knowledge of any other legislation for the remainder of the week, I wish to announce that if any is reported out I reserve to myself the right to call up any such bills on Thursday and Friday. I know of none now. I will try to give the House 24 hours' notice, if I can, in connection with any other legislation. I give notice now that if they are reported out and they can be called up I shall call them up.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. You are simply serving notice so that everybody will be on the job Thursday and Friday?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly, but particularly Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mr. Frank R. Kent; also to extend his remarks and include an article from the Wall Street Journal.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include extraneous matter.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include telegrams and resolutions.

BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY OF WILLIAM McKINLEY

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, last Saturday was the birthday anniversary of William McKinley. Heretofore we have observed that with some fitting ceremony. The House not being in session, we could not do it this year.

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and also I ask unanimous consent that any Member may have permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD with reference to McKinley and his achievements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the requests of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, last Saturday was the birthday of President McKinley.

For quite a number of years we have here in this House taken notice of McKinley's birthday by some kind of fitting observance. Because this date came on Saturday this year, when this House was not in session, we could not well hold one of our usual ceremonies, so we decided to distribute our red carnations today as we have done for a number of years. To our colleagues the gentleman from Ohio, Congressman McGREGOR, and the gentlewoman from Ohio, Congresswoman BOLTON, we are indebted for making the arrangements whereby the carnations were distributed.

We, the congressional delegation from Ohio, appreciate the fact that practically all of the membership are wearing one of these carnations here now, and this regardless of political affiliations.

The reason we from Ohio feel justified in holding these special observances is due to the fact that Mr. McKinley was, without any doubt, one of America's greatest Congressmen. We have had many great Presidents, but we have had very few Presidents who have been Members of Congress. From Lincoln, who had once been a Member of Congress, down to Mr. Truman, who had been a Member of the United States Senate, I think that Mr. McKinley and Mr. Harding were the only Presidents, except Mr. Garfield, who had ever been Members of Congress.

I have always maintained that the most important work of Mr. McKinley was the work that he did while he was a Member of Congress. He was a great Governor of Ohio after he left Congress, and he was a great President after the people of the country promoted him from the governorship to the Presidency, but he would never have been elected Governor except for his preeminent service as a Member of the Congress.

McKinley was a man of the highest character. His strength of character manifested itself when he volunteered to join the Union Army when he was only 18 years of age. This strength of character manifested itself when General Sheridan, in one of the fierce conflicts of the Civil War, complimented him for his heroism and his sensible generalship in that great battle.

McKinley was a man of great ability. He discharged his every responsibility with great fidelity.

McKinley was a great statesman. This fact will be attested to by all impartial persons who write history.

McKinley was a great Congressman, for his record made on this floor will prove it.

WILLIAM McKINLEY AND THE ANNEXATION OF HAWAII

Mr. FARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, on the lawn of Hawaii's largest high school stands an imposing statue of William McKinley. The school, which bears his name, is a living memorial to the twenty-fourth President of the United States.

To the people of Hawaii, President McKinley's name holds a place of honor and esteem. There is reason for this—it was he, on July 7, 1898, who signed the resolution which made Hawaii a part of the United States.

Soldier, statesman, teacher, and twice-elected leader of his country, William McKinley was a man of great foresight and keen awareness of America's destiny. He saw Hawaii not as an isolated group of islands in the middle of the Pacific, but as a crossroads of trade and commerce and a new American frontier in the West.

President McKinley's role was not merely that of affixing his signature to a resolution. The annexation of Hawaii to the United States was to him a matter of deep personal conviction. He had the vision to see that the people of Hawaii, like the people of Texas, Oregon, and California, were pioneers who were forging a new frontier.

The move to annex Hawaii was not without opposition. In 1893, 4 years before McKinley became President, a treaty of annexation was offered in the Senate but action was not completed.

President McKinley took office in March 1897 and 3 months later another annexation treaty was submitted to the Senate.

In an accompanying message of support, President McKinley reviewed the history of American-Hawaiian relations and justified annexation on the grounds that it was a logical and legitimate step and not a departure in American foreign policy. He stressed the fact that the new Republic of Hawaii, founded on the will of the people, had demonstrated its stability and its fitness to become a part of the United States.

In spite of this, and the strong public support which annexation had received, there was a highly vocal group in the Senate, consisting chiefly of antiexpansionists and opposing commercial interests, that argued against the treaty. As a result the Senate again adjourned without taking action.

When Congress reconvened in 1898, the administration renewed its fight for acceptance of the treaty. President McKinley, aware of the growing tension over the issue both in the Senate and in the islands, had a joint resolution for annexation introduced in Congress in place of the treaty.

Although the President's move was dictated by practical statesmanship, it gave the House of Representatives a chance to express its will on this vital measure.

The strategy brought quick results. The House approved the resolution 209 to 91. In the Senate the issue continued to be debated heatedly, but largely as a result of President McKinley's dynamic leadership the resolution was approved in the Senate by a vote of 42 to 21. The President signed the bill on July 7, 1898, and Hawaii became an integral and indivisible part of the American Union. Two years later Hawaii became a Territory and, we of Hawaii believe, set on the road to statehood.

There are few people now who will question this great American's judgment. Today, a half century after annexation, the record of Hawaii as an American community and its contribution to the country can leave no doubt as to wisdom and foresight of our country's twenty-fourth President, William McKinley.

Today the students of McKinley High School in Honolulu will honor the memory of this great American whose statue serves as a constant reminder to the people of Hawaii of his faith in them and their role in the American Commonwealth.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RABAUT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a statement of the executive committee of the National Catholic Resettlement Council, asking for an impartial and effective administration of the Displaced Persons Act.

Mr. KENNEDY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a speech on displaced persons.

Mr. BOYKIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include two articles from his home paper.

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday of this week may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

COCKTAIL PARTIES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I was very happy to hear the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] make the remarks he did. A lot of misinformation naturally goes throughout the country as the result of some unnecessary and unfortunate observations that have been made.

Members of Congress are a very hard-working group. We do not want to be praised for it; that is our duty. But on the other hand it is only fair that the people of the country realize, and this is what the gentleman had in mind, that there is very little activity of the nature referred to that received wide publicity, engaged in by the great majority of the Members of Congress. This is an 18-hour day job for any of us; and so far as I know, on both sides of the aisle, the Members of this body and of the other body likewise—a great majority of the Members of both bodies—devote themselves wholly to the duty of representing their people and trying to carry out their legislative duties as Members of Congress.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Leaving out religious bodies, I dare say that this is the soberest body of men on earth of its size.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's observation is absolutely correct; not only sober in the use of intoxicants, but sober in thought.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I have been invited to a great many of these cocktail parties but I have still to take my first drink.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. If the gentleman will yield, Mr. Speaker, somebody must have drunk my share, for I have not been asked to go to any cocktail parties.

Mr. McCORMACK. Other than the observation made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, I think perhaps the best thing to do is to ignore the matter. We simply want to stop the erroneous impression from going further.

This is a hard-working body, and the people of the country should know it. I know they appreciate it.

ANNOUNCEMENT FROM COMMITTEE ON LABOR

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have heard rumors and even received calls from Members of the House to the effect that the Committee on Education and Labor was not interested in testimony from interested witnesses. That is not a fact. We are trying to give everybody as much time as possible. That is the reason we are holding hearings forenoons and afternoons also when time is available.

I wish also to announce that yesterday you read in the press that repeal of the Taft-Hartley bill was introduced in the Senate in the nature of a substitute. I am today dropping the original bill in the hopper, in substance the same as the Senate bill.

THE AIR FORCE

Mr. COFFEY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call attention to some remarks recently made by Fleet Adm. Chester W. Nimitz, who was commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet during the last war, and whose brilliant contribution to victory over Japan is one of the most glorious in the history of that war.

While I join with every American in expressing the greatest admiration for Fleet Admiral Nimitz and his demonstrated ability as a naval strategist, I am alarmed by this grand old seadog's statement that the World War II land-sea-air team in any future war will have the same roles as in the last war. When we put our faith in the limited description of air-power effectiveness given us by the admiral, I am afraid that we may be following the fatal example of the French who placed their confidence in the Maginot Line philosophy of the generals of World War I. A later error equally fatal was made by the Germans when they concentrated on short-range tactical planes for their air force basing this decision on their earlier successes.

I feel that each of my countrymen, in view of the present world situation, must remain keenly aware of recent technical developments and their application in the development of new strategic concepts. Those of us more recently in touch with the latest techniques and technology of war think in terms, not just of orthodox bombing, as Admiral Nimitz expressed himself in a recent article, but rather as members of a nation living in an atomic age and possessing atomic weapons. I believe the present Air Force leaders have an acute understanding of this fact and have developed means and methods of delivering this new weapon to any place in the world.

Let us very briefly review a few of the basic and salient facts of the last war. For the first 2 years the Air Force, inadequate as it was, fought a delaying action characterized by the Battle of Midway and culminating in the beginning of the daylight bombing of Germany. Some of the action during this period was tactically offensive, but the strategic conception was a holding action, while our pitifully small Army and our Navy, all but destroyed at Pearl Harbor, prepared themselves for their later glorious achievements. The success of this mission was realized when our Army, Navy, and Air Force coequally shared in that great combined operation, the invasion of Normandy. This landing epitomized the triphibious warfare concept of Admiral Nimitz. Then plans were made ready for a similar combined offensive against Japan. The cost in lives anticipated by this offensive was made unnecessary, however, by the swarms of B–29's and escorting fighters over the strategic heart of Nippon and the coup de grace administered by one B–29 against Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

World War II has written indelibly the fundamentals of a new strategic concept. That which has astounded the world, particularly in the closing days of this war, will be vastly outmoded and outdated for any future war. In this the possibility of a future war and national protection against future wars lies the rebuttal to a triphibious cause.

Let us for the moment examine the portent of this statement.

The atomic bomb is at present nothing more than a very fine bomb, a thousand times more powerful than any before it, but nevertheless a bomb to be delivered to the target by its carrier, the airplane. This bomb gives to the aggressor nation an advantage so catastrophical in its implication that no defenses exist as such. If this aggressor should shoot first and can shoot several times before we can shoot back, he will, in all likelihood, win the next war. To secure ourselves against any again-rising international gangster, we must be able to strike with greater power, almost simultaneously with his initial attack. The knowledge that we will be able to do this will best deter him from making this attack.

Let us look also at another aspect of this possible future war:

Where is it likely its theater will be? From where can any aggressor nation attack most swiftly with the least amount of warning at the heart of our Nation? Obviously, to meet these conditions, he will want to strike over the shortest possible route, along which it will be most difficult for us to place the radar nets and other warning devices which we have on hand. That is across the polar wastes. Just as obviously we must strike back in a similar direction. Now, I ask you, Is any war fought in this area an army, a navy, or an air war?

There appears to be some objection to this strategic plan on the grounds that triphibious success—as costly as it was—in this war leads to the conclusion that the land-sea-air team composed of each member in equal strength is now essentially sound. Admiral Nimitz's recent article in support of this balanced team challenges the arguments for the new strategic concept on the grounds that he does not believe it to be practicable to use orthodox bombs in the quantities necessary to inflict important damage on military objectives by air operations in excess of 3,000 miles involving a round trip of 6,000 miles. In other words, if we do not have bomber aircraft that can get to the target from fixed bases as they now exist and are available to us, let us move up the bases, let us advance the aircraft by means of carriers. But this is a tactical rather than a strategic argument. It is the frighteningly recurring Maginot-line-mind argument that we now refer to as triphibious operation. What the admiral calls an orthodox bomb is no longer a strategic weapon.

In any future war, the bombs for a strategic target will be the same, and we dare not have it otherwise, as imprinted Hiroshima so deeply in our minds. Furthermore, it is a fact that what the Air Force calls its "today" airplane has already made a round trip of just under 10,000 miles, employing refueling techniques now being rapidly developed. Such in-flight refueling methods are thoroughly practical. Some of you may recall that 20 years ago, in 1929, Maj. Carl Spaatz, Capt. Ira Eaker, and Lt. Pete Quesada kept a Fokker trimotor aloft over Los Angeles for 151 hours—over 6 days—by in-flight refueling. At present-day bombardment aircraft speeds of 300 miles per hour and over, their plane would have traveled over 45,000 miles without coming to earth. At this point it is interesting to note that the cost of one of the new mammoth aircraft carriers now planned by our Navy could provide for the construction and delivery of 150 modern, long-range strategic bombers and their operational cost for 2 years. Add to this the probable number of bombers that could be built for the initial cost and operation of the task force supporting one supercarrier—cruisers, destroyers, submarines, and a line of supply ships extending entirely across the ocean.

We can summarize our rebuttal with the words of one of the world's foremost aeronautical experts, Alexander D. Seversky, who, in his article, Peace Through Air Power, in the current Reader's Digest stated:

We need to be reminded that the triphibious strategy of World War II was an improvisation forced upon us by failure to provide air power with sufficient range to strike at the vitals of Japan from bases already in our possession.

This is the opinion of a man who has proven not only his technical ability but also his farsightedness time and time again. I ask unanimous consent to include this article in the RECORD.

The picture of air power in the atomic era is a frightful one, a fright no longer conceivable and interpolated into our past conception of military might. Similarly, if another war should come 20 years hence, the conduct of that war may be beyond our present imagination, but there is one thing we can be sure of—the weapons, projectiles, rays, or what have you, will come to us through the medium of air.

We, the representatives of our people, recognizing our responsibility for the security of our Nation, must stay alert to the new techniques, the new technology, and to up-to-date concepts of global stategy. Only thus may we utilize, with the wisest economy, our resources allocated to national defense.

Let us not suffer again the consequences of disinterest, or inaction, or, above all, wrong action. While paying tribute to the heroes of World War II, we must not allow our clear conception of the future to be clouded by the glories of the past.

[From the Reader's Digest of February 1949]

PEACE THROUGH AIR POWER

(Condensed from a chapter of a forthcoming book)

(By Maj. Alexander P. de Seversky)

In a world that has not yet learned to dispense with force, our ardent hope is that our military strength will prevent war. The important question is, What kind of strength?

Mere quantity in armed men and weapons will not serve. If war comes, the enemy will have at his disposal teeming populations, and possibly vast resources of the whole Eurasian Continent. American strategy must therefore gear to quality rather than quantity.

Fortunately, we have within our grasp a strategy that meets this condition. It is uniquely suited to American genius and capacity. It is the strategy of air power.

But what kind of air power? The assumption that a lot of indiscriminate planes—a 70-group air force, a huge naval air arm, a tactical air force supporting an army, marine aviation, Coast Guard aviation—add up to air power is wrong. A country may possess swarms of aircraft, yet be deficient in air power, as Hitler and Tojo learned too late.

True air power means a strategic striking force that can rise from our own American continent for direct assault against the industrial solar plexus of the enemy and return to its home bases. It means aviation freed from dependence on overseas bases. The creation of such an aerial force is fully possible. It calls for no new inventions; the necessary aircraft are already in the skies, but we are not building enough of them. What is more, this air power can be created as soon as, if not sooner than, the mountains of equipment on land, sea, and in the air now proposed.

Instead of continuing to spread our limited manpower and resources thin in all three elements, the proposed air strategy would concentrate on the decisive weapon for clean-cut superiority in the decisive element. By reducing sharply the roles of armies and navies, the fearful drain on men and materials can be stopped, the crushing burden of military expenditures can be eased.

With control of the air ocean enveloping the whole globe in our hands—the test and purpose of adequate air power—our position would be analagous to Great Britain's in the last century. A small island off Europe in effect gave mankind a century of peace, the Pax Britannica. It did this without militarizing or regimenting its people. This miracle was possible because Britain did not attempt to be strong on land and sea at the same time. Living in an era when water was the decisive medium for carrying destruction to enemies, Britain channeled practically its entire military potential into sea power, attaining command of the seas through an invincible fleet.

Today the air has become the primary medium of global power. An air force capable of commanding the skies can enforce its will on everything below. If we hold our effort on land and sea to a minimum and channel our resources into long-range air power, we likewise can be incomparably strong without the risk of military regimentation. When we muster the intellectual courage to face the new power equation, we can have a century of peace. Not a Pax Americana but a Pax Democratica, in partnership with all other free nations.

It sounds incredible today, but more than 2 years after the outbreak of World War II, and months after America was in it, bomber aircraft were still at the bottom of the priority lists. The men who were then—and for the most part are still—in charge of our military destinies looked on them as an unwarranted luxury. For these generals and admirals the unfolding struggle was merely a continuation, with modern trimmings, of the surface strategy of World War I.

That grim spectacle of stubborn inertia left airmen like myself no alternative but to speak out vigorously.[1] I believed an enlightened public opinion could serve as a corrective on the natural conservatism of a great military establishment rooted in tradition. That faith was amply justified.

Today it is again a deep anxiety for the state of our national security that moves me to write. The moment is crucial because we are now in the first stages of a large-scale rearmament. The plans now being shaped up, if allowed to congeal, cannot easily be undone. They will commit us irrevocably.

It would be against nature to expect the elder services to make a strategy decision amounting to an order for their own demotion to secondary roles. It is the American people who must determine the military course through their Congress and their President. They must choose between the profligate land-sea-air strategy of the recent past and the interhemispheric air strategy opened up by modern aeronautics.

Winning nations tend to glorify the methods and weapons that brought them victory. France at the end of World War I, flushed with triumph in the trenches, proceeded to construct a supercolossal de luxe trench: the Maginot Line. It was an engineering marvel, embodying all the latest scientific gadgets. But it was still a trench: a steel-and-concrete monument to the tragic belief that any new war would be as static as the last one.

[1] See Victory Through Air Power, the Reader's Digest, July 1942.

True, a young officer named Charles de Gaulle foresaw the advent of mobile and motorized warfare that would nullify supertrenches. But would France listen? Its illusions of safety were confirmed by such newly haloed heroes as Foch, Joffre, Pétain, Gamelin. To question their military wisdom at that time seemed close to treason.

The implications of the Maginot Line—a symbol of futility—have not been fully grasped. We Americans are at this very moment perpetrating a tragedy of the same order, for the same reasons, with the blessings of our own haloed heroes of recent victory. Having won the last war with triphibious task forces, Army-Navy-Air teams, we are proceeding to build supercolossal task forces which will embody all the latest technological innovations. Little gliders are being displaced by big gliders; tanks by supertanks. Assault barges firing primitive rockets are being replaced by superbarges firing V–2 rockets. Escort carriers are to be replaced by gigantic floating islands at a quarter of a billion dollars a throw. In America today, as in France a generation ago, legislators are overawed by the prestige of the five-star generals and admirals who delivered victory.

We need to be reminded that the triphibious strategy of World War II was an improvisation forced upon us by failure to provide air power with sufficient range to strike at the vitals of Japan from bases already in our possession. Such air power was technically possible but had been arbitrarily brushed aside by surface-minded planners. The land-sea-air team was an emergency device for carrying short-range aviation step by step, island by island, within striking distance of the ultimate target.

Indeed, as the range of available aviation was extended, those steps could be stretched, by-passing the intermediary islands where the enemy was entrenched. Every enlargement of range thus paid off in lives saved. In the final stage, our Superforts were planted within direct striking reach of Japan proper. At that point their surface teammates became in effect mere bystanders, as air power undertook the systematic demolition of the enemy sources of power.

Air power finished the job—and this is the key to an understanding of the events—with great Nipponese armies on the home islands and on the Asiatic mainland still intact, but impotent. Air power finished the job with a fantastic mass of American land and sea forces likewise intact and useless.

As late as June 21, 1943, General Marshall explained in a speech that "your adversary may be hammered to his knees by bombing but he will recover unless the knock-out blow is delivered by the army." Fortunately he was wrong. The knock-out blow was delivered by air power, sparing perhaps a million American and Japanese lives. Our actual invasion came after the surrender. A handful of American officers landed and took control of a country still possessing millions of fresh troops.

Most civilians could grasp the obvious lessons of this picture. But professional surface-strategists, innocent of the aeronautical facts of life, were bewildered. With few exceptions, they emerged from the war sold to the hilt on the triphibious team for securing outlying bases. They still remain blind to strategy based on victory without the orthodox show-down by foot soldiers on a battlefield. We are still witnessing the Maginot Line mentality at work. The current program of defense through balanced forces operating from a chain of bases means only one thing: the perpetuation of the methods of the last war.

Our projected 70-group air force is built around 20 groups of medium bombers of the B–29 and B–50 types—which is to say, around a 5,000-mile flying range, 2,000-mile striking radius. (Striking radius is about 40 percent of total flying range.) It provides for only 5 groups of long-range B–36 bombers, which have an effective flying range of 10,000 miles—with current modifications promising 13,000 miles—enough to blast any target in Eurasia from our own continent. Why do we thus continue to put our faith in an old-fashioned and technologically outmoded air force?

The telltale fact about the 2,000-mile radius is that it requires an array of overseas bases. Bases in turn call for large land and sea forces to hold and supply them. The over-all military pattern thus remains unchanged. Whether we have 70 groups or 700, the complex set-up on the surface remains indispensable. The more air power of this limited reach, the larger the land and sea forces required to make it operative.

Before the last war we had built and flown 32-ton aircraft with a flying range of some 8,000 miles. Did we put them into production to fight the war? Not at all. Instead, we produced 20-ton aircraft with a flying range of 2,000 miles. Today we have a few bombers of 150 tons with a flying range of 10,000 miles. But what are we building? Seventy-ton bombers with a flying range of 5,000 miles (combat striking range, 2,000)—just short enough to rule out transoceanic offensives.

True, we are now resorting to air-refueling and other tricks to extend the range of action. These will work under conditions of surprise, but I am convinced that sustained offensives cannot be maintained without planes of inter-hemispheric range. One can understand the present face-lifting improvisations by our Air Force. Its leaders have no alternative. Aircraft of inadequate range have been imposed upon them by military planners hell-bent on fighting from distant bases guaranteed by huge armies and navies.

The agruments advanced today for holding back the extreme planes are the same as those we heard when the 32-ton B–19 seemed extreme. The real explanation for freezing our strategy at the 2,000-mile radius is not technological but psychological. Military minds of the old stamp cannot admit the possibility of war without show-down land and sea battles, spearheaded by marines and supported by complex supply lines all over the world.

I do not hesitate to challenge the 2,000-mile-radius restriction. It is destined to join the Maginot Line in the limbo of outlived military notions. Even if a war should begin on this basis, it would inevitably be transformed into an all-out contest of inter-hemispheric dimensions before a decision could be scored. The logic of air power means an air force with enough range to strike from its own continent. The nation that is first in preparing for intercontinental aerial warfare will win the next war.

The United States should begin now. Tomorrow may be too late.

The advent of the atomic bomb does not alter this picture. The bomb is not a new military force, in the sense that the Army, Navy, and the Air Force are military forces. It is a new and horribly destructive explosive, as yet of finite scope. Before it can score a decision, it must be delivered, like any other explosive, by one or a combination of military forces to the right target at the right time. Thus it is not the stock pile of atomic bombs that will decide the issue, but superior means of delivery—and that means air power. Far from nullifying the art of war, the atom bomb puts a higher premium on correct strategy.

There are two possible strategies open to us. One, when air power can deliver the atom bomb only when provided with overseas bases. This demands a large army and a great navy. The national effort is split three ways so that none of the forces attains its maximum potential.

Two, when air power has sufficient range to deliver the atom bomb directly from this continent, without need of overseas bases. This reduces our Army and Navy to a minimum and allows us to put most of the national effort into the Air Force so that it attains its maximum potential.

There is nothing novel about the first strategic plan. That is how the last war was fought, and it is, unfortunately, the strategy underlying our present plans for national defense. But suppose that Soviet Russia possessed similar air bases in Cuba or Greenland—how long would they remain Russian after the start of hostilities? Obviously, we could kill them off by throwing against them the full weight of our bombing power. We would operate from the source of our strength and supplies, while the enemy could use only one segment of his and would have to depend on thousands of miles of vulnerable supply lines. The idea that Russia could hold Cuba or Greenland is fantastic.

But is it any less fantastic when we propose to hold bases on the periphery of the Eurasian Continent? Our projected air outposts in north Africa, Europe, the Near East, and the Far East are within striking range of Soviet air power. Most of these bases could be attacked not only by long-range bombers but also by great masses of short-range tactical planes, a type in which quantity rather than quality is the vital consideration. And we know that German and Russian factories are now producing thousands of tactical planes. The Soviet leaders can be expected to use these planes ruthlessly, considering them as expendable as so many shells. Finally, to hold these bases and keep them supplied would also mean challenging the 300 divisions of the Red Army.

The use of outer bases for initial surprise action is possible. But their permanent control for sustained strategic offensive is the stuff of dreams. Being within the orbit of the total hostile air potential, these bases will be captured or demolished, paralyzing the strategy dependent upon them. The ultimate decision will be postponed until we are ready to use long-range strategic aviation based on our own continent. Unless the enemy is ready with that kind of air power first.

Everything we have said about fixed bases applies a hundredfold to the floating bases called aircraft carriers. The only advantage they claim is mobility. But maneuverability reckoned in hundreds of miles becomes meaningless against aircraft covering thousands of miles. How a ship sailing 600 miles a day can evade detection by planes flying 600 miles an hour the admirals haven't explained.

In the last war carriers could not operate in the Mediterranean or North Sea within reach of the German Luftwaffe. Enlarging a carrier merely provides the foe with a larger target. The 80,000-ton floating islands on which our Navy has set its hopes are military monstrosities. They will be quarter-of-a-billion-dollar expendables, good at most for one limited sneak assault before they are annihilated. And their planes will be inferior to equivalent planes operating from the ground. I have no doubt that when military history is written these marine mastodons will be cited as a prime example of strategic folly.

If this strategy of carriers, overseas bases, and short-range aviation is allowed to stand, we would be called upon, in the event of war, to produce simultaneously the world's largest army, navy, and air force, while dividing our aeronautical effort between strategic and tactical planes, both in maximum numbers. Since our resources are not infinite, we could not hope for absolute superiority in any one of these forces. And, according to Government figures, we would be putting 10 dollars into surface elements for every dollar put into the skies. We don't need a calculating machine to realize that we are here dealing with strategy which, if it is to have the magnitude for victory over the world's No. 1 land power, would bankrupt a nation 10 times as rich as the United States.

A recent press summary of the views of our high command stated that "the United States can develop overwhelming superiority in the air and at sea, but will find it hard to compete with Russia's land power." The allusion to sea superiority is frivolous. Soviet Russia, a self-contained and blockade-proof continent, has no navy, needs no navy, fears no navy. But if a contest on land is dangerous, if superiority in the air can be made overwhelming, why do we earmark a third of America's manpower and resources to face an admittedly superior land force and the near certainty of defeat? Why allocate another third to futile and irrelevant sea power? Why not convert the whole potential to the force recognized as our realm of supremacy—the Air Force?

Let us have the intellectual clarity and daring to break with the past. For a small fraction of the cost of conquering, maintaining, and supplying bases for short-range aviation, we can buy long-range aviation that nullifies the need for those bases and the huge surface forces that go with them.

The Air Force stated recently that "the possession of the B–36 will make it possible for us to operate against a possible aggressor anywhere in the world" from bases on the North American continent. Why, then, is the bulk of our money being put into 20 groups of medium bombers, while only 5 groups of the B–36 type are projected?

The answer is that our defense policy is shaped by men reared on surface concepts. Critics warn that the huge, unwieldy B–36 will be shot down. Of course some will. The medium-range bombers we plan to send from overseas bases will also be shot down. War without combat is a pipe dream.

We face today a crucial choice. Either we continue to divide our national potential three ways for land-sea-air operations tied to distant bases or we channel our strategy boldly into the skies for direct operations, with command of the whole air ocean as the objective.

That is the only strategy that will serve as a real deterrent to aggressors. It is the natural product of our way of life. No one will be able to challenge that kind of force. In order to create it—and more important, to exercise it properly—the challenger would have to possess talents equivalent to ours, and to acquire those talents he would have to adopt our way of life. But if he adopts our way of life, there will be no need for war.

The change called for is a bold reversal of prevailing concepts. Nothing less than an aroused public opinion can accomplish this. The pressure of the American people on their representatives in Congress can force revision of obsolete strategic plans.

The decision must be made quickly. Only the Nation as a whole can make it. Our people must choose between outmoded methods and an historic opportunity to win peace through air power.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

(Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include an editorial.)

INFORMATION, PLEASE

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, without having consulted any Member of the Senate or the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and disregarding the truth of the statement that "fools rush in where angels fear to tread," because it is my desire to maintain friendly relations and a good-neighbor policy with the citizens of our sister Republic to the south, will endeavor once for all to settle a question as to my gender. Although fearful, I will endeavor to follow this suggestion as to the giving of advice to Mr. Dewey, which advice, I hope, will not involve us in any international entanglements, but which, if accepted, might aid in giving the American people an overdue opportunity to express their will on foreign and domestic policy.

From an individual who may be man or woman, spinster or bachelor, widow or widower, who gives the address of Medellin 184, P. B., Colonia Roma, Mexico City, Mexico, signed Lee Gandee, comes the following letter:

DEAR MRS. HOFFMAN: I noticed in the papers that you have been reelected and mentioned it to a friend of mine from Detroit. She said she knew that you had been reelected, but this chance remark led to a discussion that has grown into something of a dispute which you can settle perhaps better than anyone else.

My friend maintains that you are a spinster, and that you have been in Congress several years. She likes to speak of you as an example of the success that a liberated American woman can enjoy in a political career, by devoting her life to public affairs unencumbered by a husband and children. The Mexicans, who believe that woman's place is the home, find her opinions quite shocking. I maintain that you have had no such career, for I am quite certain that I remember a Mr. HOFFMAN having been in the House of Representatives not many years ago, and I think I read some time later that following his death, you as his widow, were selected to complete his term, as has been the case with other women in Congress. I have given this explanation to our mutual friends, who feel that there is a certain propriety in this situation which places you in a more favorable light than my friend's contention. It is a high compliment to your ability that the electorate of your district has returned you to office in your own right. Please accept my congratulations.

It is to be deplored that Mr. Dewey, due to his poor technique of campaigning, failed to enjoy the success that you have attained. It must be a bitter experience for him to be repudiated, when a mere woman, faced with the inherent obstacles attending female participation in public life, has been returned to office by her constituents. You ought to give him a little motherly advice.

I shall appreciate having you settle our contention by telling us your exact status, whether spinster or widow.

Yours very truly.

As so often happens, I cannot settle this argument with the simple statement that either party is right. As a matter of fact, both are in error. I am not, as Lee Gandee insists, a widow and, on the other hand, I cannot accurately be described as a spinster. I do not chew tobacco, smoke, or make a practice of drinking hard liquor, but those facts are no longer decisive on the question of sex.

Searching back into history, yes, even before man or woman began to write or print on paper a record of their doings, there is evidence that our ancestors, both men and women, had and exercised equal rights in the pursuit of many activities.

But judged by all the accepted standards of the modern day, as well as by those which prevailed in the horse-and-buggy days, it has been established that I at least belong to the male sex, though my good wife sometimes insists that I have never grown up, am still in some respects a child, that I have never attained the dignity which a Congressman, to say nothing of a Senator, should have. That is not due to the fact that time has not given me an opportunity to become either inactive or dignified. Sometimes pompousness is mistaken for dignity. As long as I am able to enjoy some of the pleasures of youth such as hunting and fishing and to act like a boy when such a trip appears possible, I will probably embarrass some of my friends by my lack of dignity and sedateness. In fact, figuratively speaking, I hope to be able to walk to my own funeral.

After giving the matter the usual consideration given by a Congressman or a Senator to a constituent's inquiries or requests, I wrote my Mexican correspondent that I was neither a spinster nor a widow; that I was twice a father, five times a grandfather, and still the husband of a long-suffering wife gifted with an unusually kind and tolerant disposition.

Thinking that my Mexican correspondent might be disappointed to learn that I am not a woman, attention was called to the fact that today we have in the House a number of women on both sides of the aisle who are not only a credit to their constituents, but who chart a course in decorum, legislative procedure, and domestic and foreign policy which might well serve as a guide for their less accomplished colleagues.

Attention was also called to the fact that a former Member of the House from Maine—and I trust this observation is not a transgression of the rules of the House—now sits in another body—the Senate—where it is certain other Members of that august body will have an opportunity to profit by watching her in action. Already in the Senate, as formerly in the House, she has outlined a sound domestic policy which the country may follow with profit.

But to get back to that part of the letter which refers to Mr. Dewey, my correspondent writes:

It is to be deplored that Mr. Dewey, due to his poor technique of campaigning, failed to enjoy the success that you have attained—reelection. It must be a bitter experience for him to be repudiated, when a mere woman, faced with the inherent obstacles attending female participation in public life, has been returned to office by her constituents. You ought to give him a little motherly advice.

Let me again quote that last sentence: "You ought to give him a little motherly advice."

Mr. Dewey has a wonderful mother, a typical American mother. Undoubtedly she has given him much good advice. Beyond question, she is, as she has a right to be, extremely proud of her son, who made an unexcelled record as a prosecutor in New York. Tom Dewey is known throughout the Nation as one who did a most remarkable job in exposing the activities of and convicting gangster criminals. Tom Dewey has a magnificent record as an administrator of the great State of New York. He has given that State a businesslike administration and has earned the approval, as a governor, of the overwhelming majority of the citizens of that great State. No one has ever questioned his sincerity, his executive ability, and undoubtedly there lies before him brilliant success in his chosen field of the law and politics.

He has never asked and undoubtedly never will ask for my advice, for he has always had experts to advise him. However, believing in the good-neighbor policy, I am willing to do the best I can, and, on the suggestion of my Mexican correspondent, offer gratuitously to the Honorable Thomas E. Dewey a few random thoughts. I might, if it was to be motherly advice, advise him as mother advised me, by using the old, old words: "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again."

But, speaking as a Republican, I might quote to Mr. Dewey these words:

Like warmed-up cabbage served at each repast, the repetition kills the wretch at last.

I might use the old saying of the Danes:

The goose goes so often to the kitchen that at last she is fastened to the spit.

Thomas Fuller once said:

The pitcher that goes often to the well, comes home broken at last.

Bovee wrote:

A sound discretion is not so much indicated by never making a mistake as by never repeating it.

Then here is one more from the Universal Songster:

Hope tells a flattering tale,
Delusive, vain, and hollow.
Ah! let not hope prevail,
Lest disappointment follow.

Or, disregarding the words of others, think it permissible to suggest to Mr. Dewey that he and his associates, yes, and I might include certain other individuals who are presumed to have been the Republican leaders during the last few years, having gone to bat twice and whiffed on two occasions, the last time with three men on base and two out, Tom and some others might sit on the bench through at least one game and let someone else come up as a pinch hitter.

Of course, we have been told so many times that we almost believe it, that Senator TAFT just cannot get the votes. We learned to our sorrow that a group of Dewey's supporters and promoters gave Senator BRICKER, who looks, talks, thinks, and acts like a real American President, a basswood bat at a gridiron dinner, and so sent him back to the bench.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] was at Omaha. Did Mr. Dewey win there?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman, in his statement relative to the soundness of officials in Ohio, is eminently correct. Anyone from Ohio always takes a sound position on governmental matters, especially the gentleman from the other body who was a candidate for President.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I was speaking of Governor BRICKER. I regret very much that he was not the nominee of the Republican Party.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. And so do I regret that Ohio's candidate, Senator TAFT, was not the nominee. I might also add, in answer to the gentleman's inquiry about Omaha, that if the gentleman's representatives on the committee from his own State of Michigan had followed the advice, counsel, and leadership of members of the national committee from the State of Ohio he would not be quite as embarrassed as I am sure he is at this moment.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. You are right again. They did it, but they will hear from some of us in Michigan. Do not think they will not. They can ride on the rear end of an old broken-down wagon, but I will not.

Mr. Dewey would make a great Senator from the great State of New York, and, as such, he could very effectively voice the desires of his New York City constituents that we go along with the Acheson foreign policy as announced by the President in his inaugural address, and increase our efforts to feed, clothe, and house the unfortunate peoples of the world. But as a candidate for the Presidency, Mr. Dewey has twice gone to bat. Perhaps the pitcher in the first contest was a Bob Feller or a Dizzy Dean and hence the young man's strike-out was excusable. But on this last occasion, a soft, easy ball was tossed up to him and he just did not take his bat off his shoulder or start to swing until the catcher had it in his mitt.

No, in all fairness, Mr. Dewey, his "me-too" and international supporters, should get out of the batter's box, cease trying to carry the ball, and if they cannot run interference or do some minor job on the team, go back and sit down on the bench.

It is long past time when the American people should have an opportunity to vote upon the very simple issue as to whether the interests of this country are to be given first consideration or whether the ideas, the policies, and the practices used in other lands where they have been demonstrated to be failures, should be continued here without the people being given an opportunity at a national election to say whether they approve or disapprove. The rank and file of Republicans are tired of taking a New Deal remedy even though the bottle out of which it comes is labeled "Republican."

From the Niles Daily Star of Niles, Mich., comes an editorial of John R. Schamehorn, under date of January 25, which reads as follows:

TIME TO STEP DOWN

There are continuing signs that Thomas E. Dewey is still attempting to head up the Republican Party. If he continues in those efforts it will inevitably result in disaster for both himself and the party.

Dewey and his advisers were solely responsible for shaping policies during the last campaign and it resulted in failure, as it did 4 years ago. The whole thing seemed to be so much in the bag that he declined to put on a hard-hitting campaign.

His speeches were so indecisive, in fact, that he was continually criticized for not expressing his opinion on various issues of the campaign.

As a twice rejected candidate, Dewey should step aside as far as national politics is concerned and not pretend any longer to head the party. He had that chance a few days ago but failed to take advantage of it. Instead, he left the impression that he might be available again in 1952.

Mr. Dewey should know from past history that voters will not support him in a third attempt for the White House. Under the circumstances, he should make a prompt disclaimer of any further aspirations in that direction so that party leaders will not be hampered by the efforts of any of his faithful supporters in a die-hard struggle that could only result in further damage to the party.

That is typical of practically every editorial comment in southwestern Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has expired.

Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

OLEOMARGARINE AND THE DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, the new dairy policy toward oleo is in harmony with the Democratic platform. The Democratic platform favored the removal of taxes on oleomargarine, but said nothing about allowing the unrestricted sale of the yellow product. The President has said that he wants the taxes removed. Leading dairy and farm organizations favor the same action.

However, the time is absolutely inopportune for placing a greater burden on dairy farmers. Numerous bills have been introduced to permit unrestricted sale of oleomargarine colored yellow in imitation of butter. Yet there is growing economic distress among the people who milk cows in the great dairy States. Why anybody would want to do anything to make their burden heavier, I am unable to understand.

I am speaking about the people in every congressional district in the country who build the county roads and maintain schools. Hay is now as high as $45 a ton and cottonseed cake fed to dairy cattle costs from $80 to $100 a ton, yet the oleo interests would make it still more difficult for these people to survive.

In the Western States it has been snowing intermittently since the first of January. Hundreds of thousands of cattle and sheep are marooned, and losses will be tremendous. This is one of the most devastating and unprecedented blows at our livestock economy within the memory of man. We cannot afford further to imperil our supplies of meat, as well as our source of milk and other vital food products, by striking at the dairy industry.

Members of this House who are also members of the Committee on Agriculture are well aware of the difficulties which face the southern cotton grower. It is necessary, we are told, to preserve the economy of the Cotton South. But, Mr. Speaker, it is even more necessary to preserve the family-sized farms of this country that depend upon dairying for their continued existence. To the more than 2,500,000 dairy farmers of this country, the dairy industry represents a regular source of cash income throughout the year, a decent standard of living for their families, education for their children, and increasing productivity for their land.

These things are important to the farmers of the South as well as to the northern farmers—perhaps even more important. Dairy farming has made splendid progress in the South, to the enrichment of whole areas of land that had begun to lose its fertility under single-crop cultivation. The hard facts are that we cannot afford to sacrifice either southern gains or northern accomplishments in the development of a diversified agriculture merely to meet the selfish demands of a handful of oleomargarine manufacturers.

Oleomargarine is a substitute for butter, and therefore competes with butter in the market place. Ordinarily, substitutes do not differ greatly from the original in price, but through the years oleomargarine has maintained a price level approximately half that of butter, on the average. The price of butter has not been dragged down to the level of the substitute, because oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, has not been as acceptable to consumers as real butter. Moreover, colored oleomargarine—being less distinguishable from butter than the uncolored form—has been carefully regulated under Federal tax legislation. Finally, the dairy farmer has not been able to afford to produce butter at the price of oleomargarine.

Now it is proposed to repeal the restrictions on yellow oleomargarine, which will then be able to compete more closely with butter. Oleomargarine manufacturers may take advantage of this opportunity to increase their prices and profits, thus destroying the price differential. Or they may hold their prices unchanged and increase their profits through increased sales volumes, at the expense of butter. In any case, it cannot be denied that an improved competitive position for oleomargarine would result in reduced sales of butter.

INCREASED OLEO SALES HURT BUTTER SALES

In the past an increase in the sales of oleomargarine has usually been accompanied by a somewhat larger decrease in the sales of butter. In the 35 years from 1912 to 1947, there were 22 years when oleo consumption went up, and in 16 of those years, butter consumption decreased. On an average, over those 22 years the increase in oleo consumption per capita was approximately one-third of a pound, while the accompanying change in butter consumption was a per capita decrease of almost one-half a pound.

During 11 of the 13 years in which oleo sales showed a decrease, butter sales increased. The average oleo decreases were about one-third of a pound per capita, accompanied by an average increase in butter sales of slightly more than that amount.

It is clear that when oleo is sold as a substitute for butter, either fraudulently or because consumers made a conscious choice, the immediate effect on the dairy farmer is the same as though the supply of butter had increased. Naturally this lowers the price at which his butter can be sold. On the average, a 1-percent increase in the quantity of butter available tends to result in a 1-percent decrease in the selling price of butter. In other words, the loss of 1 percent of butter sales to competitive oleomargarine results in a 1-percent drop in the price of butter.

The experience of other countries shows that unrestricted competition in yellow oleomargarine demolishes the market for butter. In this country, under similar conditions, oleomargarine might very well take over from two-thirds to three-fourths of the total sales of spread fats, according to competent economists. The total annual consumption of oleomargarine in the United States would then be 1,500,000,000 pounds, as against 870,000,000 pounds in 1948. On a pound-for-pound displacement, the butter market would shrink to 900,000,000 pounds as against 1,500,000,000 pounds in 1948.

IMMEDIATE RESULTS OF INCREASED OLEO SALES

The first result of a possible 600,000,000-pound expansion in oleo sales would be a 20 to 40 percent drop in butter prices. In this connection, a 10-percent increase in butter production in the fall of 1948, over the corresponding months of 1947, was accompanied by an equal reduction in oleo sales on a 25-percent fall in butter prices.

Price reduction of 20 to 40 percent probably would protect butter against loss of sales, but dairymen could not stand any such decline in butter prices for long. Thus, as a second effect of increasing oleo sales, there would be a drastic decline in butter production, as dairymen in large numbers left the dairy business or sought other markets than butter. This decline in production would lead to some recovery of butter prices, but a decline of 5 to 10 percent over the long-run probably would liquidate milk production to the equivalent of 600,000,000 pounds of butter.

DAIRY FARMING WOULD VANISH IN SOME AREAS

These effects accounted for part of the 600,000,000-pound butter decline in production from 1941 to 1948. The declines would have been more drastic, and wider spread, if the artificially stimulated export trade in dairy products of 1941 to 1948 had not absorbed the annual output of approximately one million cows. Allowance also should be made for the increase in demand resulting from population growth.

It is reasonable to expect that the further displacement of 600,000,000 pounds of butter by oleo would lead to the displacement of another 2,000,000 cows. But 2,000,000 cows in butter areas produce only 360,000,000 pounds of butterfat annually, and a 600,000,000-pound loss of butter markets would mean 480,000,000 pounds of butterfat. Where would the other 120,000,000 pounds of butterfat go?

THE STRUGGLE FOR MARKETS WOULD ENDANGER DAIRY PRICES IN ALL CORNERS OF THE UNITED STATES

Some dairy farmers, rather than accept extinction, would struggle to dispose of their milk in the form of products whose prices already teeter precariously between too low for producers and too high for the market demand. Increased cheese, evaporated milk, ice cream, and fluid cream—even increased fluid milk—would overburden those markets and tear down the level of returns to every producer in the land.

Even the South would reel from the blow. There a thriving dairy industry has supported the most vigorously growing farm enterprise for more than two decades, yet the wrecking of price levels at the South's ice-cream plants, condenseries, and cheese factories would cripple dairying in that region. Factory dairy products other than butter now utilize 33 percent of the milk sold by farmers in the South Atlantic States and 45 percent in the South Central States. These markets in South, North, East, and West would react to the pressure of dairy farmers deprived of their butter market. The lowered level of all dairy prices then would force some dairy farmers out of business in every State—up to another half-million cows.

NET RESULTS TO FARM INCOME

It should be apparent that anything which would lead to a liquidation of 10 percent of the milk cows in the country would be a major disaster, yet there is another way of calculating the effect of increased oleo sales.

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics calculates that the farmer received 12.8 cents out of every pound of oleomargarine sold in 1947. The farmer received 59.7 cents per pound from butter. Thus, for every pound of oleo which displaced a pound of butter, the total income of American agriculture was reduced by 46.9 cents. If oleo replaced butter to the extent of 600,000,000 pounds, the loss to agricultural income in general would total more than a quarter of a billion dollars. This would occur even before reckoning the sizable side effects on other dairy products. It disregards the probability that increased demand for vegetable oils would be met by increased imports, with no benefit at all to domestic producers.

Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill which would protect the farmers of this country against the loss of more than a billion dollars. The bill is fair to the consumer, in that it makes it possible for the housewife to buy all the oleomargarine she wants in its most economical, uncolored form, without the payment of any taxes whatever. It is a fair bill in that it relieves the oleo retailer, wholesaler, and manufacturer from all license fees and reporting requirements. But most of all, my bill is a fair bill in that it protects the dairy farmer against a sure loss of income—a loss which a large part of our agricultural economy cannot afford at this time.

I am convinced that the administration does not intend to let farm income suffer in this country, and that no Member of this House would willfully sponsor any measure to that effect. By contrast, my bill is in complete harmony, as I have said earlier, with the Democratic platform on which the majority of this House was elected.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANGER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman will recollect that some Members of this House who favor the coloring of oleomargarine yellow have insisted that the dairy farmers of the country must yield to scientific progress. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to elaborate on that a little bit.

The scientific progress that has been made on oleo to make it taste and appear like butter results from a ruling made by Mr. McNutt, when he was head of the Pure Food and Drug Section, because he issued a regulation that the oleo industry could put in vitamins the equivalent to butter and he also ruled that they could use butter flavor and flavor the product to taste like butter. He also ruled that they could churn it in milk in order to give butter texture to the product so that it would taste like butter and have the same nutritive value as butter. I therefore contend that it was not as a result of scientific progress but it was by edict of a man in Government who issued a regulation permitting this apparent deception and fraud on behalf of a product in order to take the market away from the legitimate dairy farmers of the country.

Now, as the gentleman said, they want to color the product yellow to make it look like butter, thereby to not only destroy the integrity of two and a half million dairy farmers but also permit deception and fraud on the housewives of the country.

Mr. GRANGER. I think that is a fair statement. I do not want to argue the quality of margarine as compared with butter. But, now, we are getting down to what the issue really is in this fight. It is simply a question of color, and the oleo interests are determined to sell oleomargarine as butter. Make no mistake about that. If they are able to do that, it is going to mean that many of the dairy farmers of the country, and especially those in the South, will go out of business. I have been all over the South in the last 2 or 3 years. There has been great development down there in every line, and especially in dairying. While this bill is not sponsored entirely by people from that section of the country, undoubtedly they have a right to be interested in it.

It seems to me it would be a short-sighted policy to do anything to retard its development. The dairy farms and the dairy herds conform in every way with the preservation of our soil. As a Member said here the other day, one of the crying needs of our time is the preservation of our soil. The dairy farmer in his operations conforms in every detail with that program.

As I have said time and time again, these are little people that we cannot afford to run out of business. As a result of dairy farming, we have built up in every section of the country, in every congressional district, some activity connected with dairying. Either cheese making, butter making, or the preparation and delivery of milk to the home.

I dare say that in every congressional district of this country, regardless of where it is situated, there are more people who earn a living from dairying than there are who do from the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANGER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER] that the dairy farmers of his State are being punished a great deal worse by this one-way freight rate than they are by competition with oleomargarine. That applies to every dairy farmer west of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio, outside of a few along the Pacific coast, where preferential rates are given to meet water competition.

I wonder if the gentleman will go along with us on the bill I have introduced to outlaw the one-way freight rates that the South and West have been punished with for the last 75 years, in order that those dairy farmers—and I will say to the gentleman from Missouri who is looking at me that I refer to farmers from Missouri and from every other State west of the Mississippi River—might receive something like justice in transportation rates for the dairy products and for other products they manufacture. I wonder if the gentleman will go along with me on that proposition?

Mr. GRANGER. I have always gone along with the gentleman in his fight for justice, for the South and West and other sections, with respect to how railroad rates should be handled, and certainly I would be willing to go along with him on that.

BUTTER VERSUS OLEOMARGARINE

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the splendid remarks made by the gentleman. I ask unanimous consent that the request I made earlier in the day be vacated and that I be allowed at this point in the RECORD to extend my remarks and include therein a very well written article by Louis Bromfield.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, Louis Bromfield, world-famed novelist and operator of the successful Malabar Farm in my district, recently prepared a keen analysis on the butter-oleo question which appeared in approximately 50 newspapers in 20 States through the Bell Syndicate. Mr. Bromfield's judgment is considered as most responsible in agricultural circles throughout the world. I introduce the text of this article into the RECORD at this point:

A VOICE FROM THE COUNTRY—ASK RESTRICTION ON MARGARINE PROFITS

(By Louis Bromfield)

The butter-oleomargarine fight has come into the open again and it might be well to analyze the true elements in a situation which affects every citizen far beyond the point of whether oleo is cheaper than butter or whether it be taxed or not. Probably no controversy in American history as presented has caused so much confusion in the minds of the people. This is so because the issue has been based, by the oleo interests, upon the easy political dodge of cheaper living costs and partly because many of the newspaper editorials on the subject have been written with perhaps incomplete knowledge of the whole question. Very great and even economically profound implications lie behind the battle.

Let me say at the outset that most of the butter producers have long since abandoned their fight to maintain the tariff tax which the oleo interests refer to as discriminatory.

The butter people seek only two things—the restriction of the oleo people's attempt to deceive by the close imitation possible and some sort of restriction upon the immense profit potentialities of the oleo and oleo-oil manufacturers. With the butter business, which can never create its product at a figure anywhere near the production costs of oleomargarine, knocked out by competition from big business and monopoly, there is no limit within reason to the profits of the industrially produced oleo.

Essentially the struggle is one between big business and tacit monopoly on one side and small private enterprise on the other and, as such, it touches the very foundations of our social economy and our political future.

Butter is produced largely by some 4,500 creameries, mostly individually or cooperatively owned, and by the thousands of dairy and general farmers who produce the cream from which butter is made. Oleomargarine, an assembly line industrial product, is concentrated in the hands of 28 companies, with 65 percent of production in the hands of only five gigantic industrial corporations such as Procter & Gamble and vast Lever Bros. interests.

PACKAGES SIMILAR

Since the very beginning, the whole purpose of the oleo interests has been to attempt the imitation of butter as closely as possible. Their slogan might well have been not "as good as butter" but "the same as butter" which oleo is not.

One only has to look about in a grocery to see oleo packaged exactly like butter, nearly always in yellow cartons, with dairy scenes for ornamentation, even to such deceptive trade names as "Churngold."

The obvious campaign is less to imitate than to deceive and plenty of us know even today how often in restaurants and dining cars, oleo is served as butter.

It seems to me that the element of unfair and deceptive competition in this respect is clear as crystal.

The oleo interests, down to the oil-refining plants, represent big business and the oleo interests have been very successful in dividing the dairy from the soybean and cotton elements in the farm bloc so that agricultural representation has become badly weakened and divided.

They have accomplished this by holding up phantom profits on the materials used in making their synthetic product to cotton and soybean farmers, who, largely speaking, represent the most destructive and greedy element in American agriculture and are already the most highly subsidized at the taxpayers expense.

Before the war, foreign vegetable oils, produced by labor in Asia and Africa, paid at what in this country could only be regarded as slave wages, were largely used in oleo manufacture.

During the war, the oleo manufacturing interests found these cheap foreign oils unavailable and were forced to use home-produced cottonseed and soybean oils, but once the same interests have won their fight, there is no reason, judging from the whole history of big business, to prevent them from shifting back again to cheap labor materials produced abroad.

The American cotton and soybean people, left holding the bag, will then ask for another protective tariff to add to living costs.

LASTING BENEFITS DOUBTED

Protective tariffs are by no means dead and can never be until that incredible day when there is free trade and universal leveling off of wages and living standards to a point far below that to which the American people are accustomed.

In the meanwhile, there will be either tariffs on imported goods or internal subsidies and high prices, both paid inside the country by the average tax-paying citizen. The popular assumption that wholly unrestricted oleo production will provide a universally cheap table spread by which everyone will benefit is merely a silly oversimplification of a very complex and profound problem.

It is significant that the interest in tariffs generally has shifted from the big manufacturing interests to organized labor and small business because obviously American labor cannot compete with slave-labor wages in the more primitive parts of the world and small business cannot compete with the power of the price controls exercised by vast cartels and tacit monopolies.

The question of tacit monopolies and hidden understandings among a few enormous industrial producers is one which has consumed endless precious hours in the Supreme Court, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and other governmental agencies.

Where understandings among vast cartels and interests begin and end is a difficult problem, but even the average citizen knows that they operate.

The whole oleo question is one in which both organized labor and the Small Businessmen's Association might well take an interest, and the average citizen along with them. It is not as simple or as demagogic a question as the oleo interests have tried to make it.

Incidentally, I have in my possession an original letter circulated among the oleo interests pointing out the great advantages of pouring plenty of money into the advertising accounts of newspapers, especially in the butter areas, as mean an insult to the integrity of the American press as has been perpetrated in a long time.

I might also point out that great cartels and monopolies are the first step in the death of real free enterprise and in the direction of state socialism. There arrives a point when, as Europe well knows, they become intolerable and the state takes over.

Socialism arrives at the point where free enterprise has ceased utterly to exist and the big-business monopolies have taken over.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. C. Stanley Lowell, pastor, Wesley Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the Father of us all, wilt Thou grant in Thy goodness that as we enter this time-honored room we may leave behind all that which does not deserve to be here. Let all self-seeking and tainted motives remain without. Let false pride and lurking grudge set no foot within these walls. Let all that is ignoble and mean, all that is partial and prejudiced find no place in these solemn deliberations.

Yet, as we come may we bring with us all that edifies and ennobles. Let integrity of purpose here be joined with unwearying resolve. Let there be firmness in the right mellowed with the understanding of human frailty. Let there be a kinship of words and deeds for good. Let sharp division whet the edge of our common purpose. Thou knowest what we are. We would it were more. Yet let us bring the very best and all we have to the meeting of these sacred trusts.

As we bring our best, wilt Thou, our Father, make it better. Let others concern themselves, if they will, with the facade of power. Teach us the meaning of its substance—not of wealth, nor of arms, nor of things, but of the spirit. May our excellence be not in might nor in power but in virtue. Let our strength be as the strength of ten because our hearts are pure. We pray in the name of Christ the Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 31, 1949, was read and approved.

THE LATE HONORABLE HOMER HOCH

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, it is with sorrow and deep regret I announce the death of Justice Homer Hoch, a former Member of this House. Justice Hoch passed away at Topeka, Kans., last Monday morning.

Homer Hoch was a member of this House during a period of 14 years, having been elected from the Fourth Congressional District of Kansas in 1918, and served until 1932.

As a Member of Congress he served with credit to himself and to the State he represented in this body. While a Member of Congress he was active in legislative matters, and for a long period of time was a member of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. He was coauthor of the Hoch-Smith resolution, which paved the way for general grain-rate reductions on middle western railroads. While serving in this body, he was called upon to preside many times as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Justice Hoch was the son of a former Governor of the State of Kansas. Prior to his election to Congress he was engaged in the newspaper business at Marion, Kans. After his service in Congress, he returned to Kansas and was appointed to the chairmanship of the corporation committee of our State. He was afterward elected to the Supreme Court of Kansas, where he was serving with distinction at the time of his death.

Justice Hoch's long career in public service kept him well abreast of the law, first as a lawyer, then a lawmaker, and finally an interpreter on the Kansas court bench. Justice Hoch was known to his colleagues on the high bench as one who felt that law should be interpreted in the light of its social effects upon the people of his State and Nation, rather than in narrow confines of strict legal construction.

In the passing of Justice Hoch the State and Nation mourn one of their foremost, outstanding citizens. He was a great man with a deep sense of justice toward his fellow men. He was indeed a Christian gentleman.

Well may he rest from his labors and may his State and Nation confer upon him the commendation, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the death of the Honorable Homer Hoch, of Kansas, practically coincided with the birthday of that great State. I think that fact symbolical in that Justice Hoch and his family were a part of the great State of Kansas and its great history.

Judge Hoch's father served with distinction as Governor of the State. He himself served with great honor in many public offices, his final one being that of justice of the supreme court of the State. He was recognized, not only by his colleagues and the State of Kansas, but by the legal profession and others throughout the country, as an able, conscientious, and sincere jurist. His quiet, yet courageous, manner caused him to be loved by all who knew him.

It is with deep regret that I have learned of this tragic end of Justice Hoch. His loss to Kansas is a loss to his Nation.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I have learned of the death of Homer Hoch, who was, for 14 years, a distinguished Member of this House.

I had the privilege of serving with him in the House for 6 years. I am sure that all Members who were here at that time will recall him as a most able, hard-working, and conscientious Member of Congress. During the time I knew him he was one of the leaders in the House, one of its ablest debaters, and a skilled parliamentarian and presiding officer. His public service did not end with his retirement from Congress in 1932, and since that time he has rendered great service to our State as chairman of the corporation commission, and as a distinguished member of its highest court. In all he spent over 30 years in the service of the public. Homer Hoch was a friendly man. He was very helpful to me when I first came to Congress as a new Member. I shall never forget the kindness that he showed me at that time. He was a man who in every respect could be called a good man, with everything which that term implies. He will be missed among all those who knew him. My deepest sympathy goes to his widow and his fine son and daughter.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCRIVNER].

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my words to those already spoken in memory of this beloved Kansan, whose service to the public should be an example to every young man seeking to follow a public career.

Justice Hoch was a success in the finest sense of the word.

His passing is a great loss to the State of Kansas.

His accomplishments and service are reasons for the justifiable pride his family, his friends, and his neighbors had in him.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the price we pay for living is to see our dear friends pass from us. It is with great regret that I learned of the death of my good friend of many years, Homer Hoch. When I first came to Congress he was one of the outstanding men in this body. He was an able debater and a splendid parliamentarian. He served often with distinction as a presiding officer. He rendered a great service to his country here and later in his own State of Kansas.

The country has lost a great citizen, and I extend my deep sympathy to his family in their hour of bereavement.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, no news has brought more sadness to me than this report of the death of Homer Hoch, with whom I served in this House for many years.

Someone has said that the friendships that spring up between Members of the different parties in this House should be compared to the flowers that overhang the walls of party politics.

We went through some of the hardest battles together I have ever experienced; and I am not giving away any secrets when I tell you I have been through many battles in this House.

Homer Hoch and I were largely responsible for preventing the reapportioning of the House of Representatives under the census of 1920. Because it was taken at the wrong time of the year and at a time when large numbers of our soldiers had not returned from the first World War it would have discriminated against the agricultural States. I remember distinctly that we fought for an amendment that would have protected his State and mine, and other agricultural States, from having their representation taken away and given to people from foreign countries who had been in this country only a short time.

During the last few years of his services here we fought through an amendment to the Muscle Shoals bill that blazed the way for protecting the American people in the enjoyment of that vast wealth of water power this country possesses. When the Muscle Shoals bill was passed, Mr. Hoch being in the majority, we agreed that he should offer the amendment to have the Government fix the retail price of the power generated and not have the power trust plunder the people in the TVA area with exorbitant overcharges.

That amendment was adopted, the bill was passed, but was vetoed by the then President of the United States.

It was later written into the bill which Senator Norris and I sponsored, creating the Tennessee Valley Authority which, as I have often said, has wrought the greatest developments of ancient or modern times.

I never met a finer man in or out of Congress than Homer Hoch. He was a Christian gentleman, who put the welfare of his country above party politics.

I recall the old days when we lived together at Congress Hall. It brings back a good many other faces like Dan Anthony, Gordon Lee, and a large number of others who have now passed on.

When I remember all
The friends so linked together,
I've seen around me fall
Like leaves in wintry weather—
I feel like one
Who treads alone
Some banquet hall deserted,
Whose lights are fled,
Whose garlands dead,
And all but he departed.

Kansas has lost one of its greatest citizens; this country has lost one of our finest Americans in the passing of Homer Hoch.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, in the passing of Homer Hoch, I have lost a good friend—the State of Kansas has lost an able and devoted son. Mr. Hoch was a useful and patriotic citizen of our common country.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who may so desire may extend their remarks at this point on the life and character of the late Homer Hoch.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, it was with deep regret that I learned of the passing of Justice Homer Hoch. It was not my privilege to serve with him in the House. It was, though, my privilege to know him as a warm friend. I knew him well, and admired him profoundly because of his kindliness, his sympathetic understanding, and his gentleness. I knew him not only as a fellow publisher, but as an outstanding and useful citizen in the service of his community, his State, and the Nation. The entire country has lost a great and honorable man.

I join my colleagues in paying this tribute of respect to him, and expressing our deep sympathy to his family at his passing.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, Homer Hoch and I entered Congress at the same time. We immediately became acquainted and that perfunctory new Members' acquaintance soon ripened into genuine friendship, and that friendship has endured down through the years.

Mr. Hoch was an unusual man. Coming from a good family, the son of the Governor of his State, he was especially well educated. He was a cultured, friendly, Christian gentleman in every sense of the word. His passing will be a great shock to his splendid family. During his service in Washington, I was in his home many times, and his family life was ideal. Mrs. Hoch was a charming hostess, and the children just what children should be. Since Mr. Hoch retired from Congress, I have often heard from him directly and indirectly, and I do know that he carried on his traditional congressional record as a leader of men and a distinguished public servant.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with others who served in Congress with Mr. Hoch in these memorial exercises. I extend to the family my genuine sympathy.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to serve with Hon. Homer Hoch during the entire time he so ably served the people of the Fourth Congressional District of Kansas in the House of Representatives of the United States. The fine character of the man won for him the respect of his colleagues and of all who knew him. I can say that his service in the House of Representatives was that of a statesman of a very high order. The attribute of a statesman was once stated by Edmund Burke, "A disposition to preserve and an ability to improve, taken together would be my standard of a statesman." Measured by this yardstick, Hon. Homer Hoch, of Kansas, will always and rightfully be known as a true statesman. I extend my heartfelt sympathy to his bereaved family.

MIDDLETON BEAMAN

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, one of the most prominent members of the House organization for many years—learned, scholarly, gentlemanly, devoted to his duties throughout the years—is Middleton Beaman, who was legislative counsel of the House of Representatives. For more than 30 years in different capacities, all responsible, he served with outstanding ability, with great devotion, this legislative body of which you and I have the honor to be Members. Congresses came and Congresses went, but Middleton Beaman always continued, highly respected by all the Members of the House without regard to party, making powerful contribution to the drafting of legislation that we, who are Members of the House, well know about but which the people generally are little acquainted with.

After over 30 years of service he has retired. We regret very much to see the retirement of this outstanding member of the House organization. I will not say "employee" or "servant" because I do not like to use those words in relation to Middleton Beaman. I shall say instead outstanding member of the House organization.

My purpose today is to pay tribute to him and to the great contribution he has made, to let him know as he leaves the House organization that he leaves with the profound respect and admiration of every Member of the House who served in any Congress with which he was connected in his many years of service and to also express the hope that in retirement he will enjoy many years of happiness and contentment. I also hope that he will visit the House frequently, that he will not in retirement remain inactive, but will keep in touch with his many friends here and keep close contact with the many friendships he has developed in past Congresses.

I also hope that in retirement he will devote some time to the writing of a book with reference to his experiences, giving to the people of the country the benefit of his vast knowledge in the intricate field of legislation, a benefit that would be of great advantage not only to Members of Congress but to the people generally.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to concur in the remarks of the majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], with reference to the services of Mr. Beaman, head of the legislative counsel. His position was one of great responsibility, which required great technical skill as well as a thorough knowledge of his work. He worked for our committee in drafting various pieces of legislation which were presented to the House in the past.

I have never known a man who performed his work more efficiently and more thoroughly or more satisfactorily. He was an indefatigable worker. He did not spare himself at all. He worked night and day in order to prepare legislation for the various committees to present to the House.

As I stated, I concur in the remarks of the majority leader in expressing the hope that Mr. Beaman may have many years yet in which to rest from his labors and to enjoy a well-earned rest that he richly deserves. In my experience of 38 years I have never known of any man connected with the public service and the work of the Congress who has discharged his duty more thoroughly, more efficiently, and more satisfactorily than Mr. Beaman.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, as one who has had the opportunity to observe the work of Mr. Beaman, I appreciate the great loss that the House organization has had in his retirement. Mr. Beaman was faithful, conscientious, and loyal. He understood thoroughly the legislation that came before the House. I am delighted to join with the majority leader in wishing for him many years of happiness and good health.

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a happy privilege for me to join in expressing my very sincere tribute to Mr. Beaman, and I concur in the remarks made by the distinguished majority leader and others who have spoken. As a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, it has been my privilege to work with him very closely throughout the years, and I regard him as one of the most valuable men holding any position in the service of this Government. It is my conviction that many of the outstanding statutes have stood the test of constitutionality very largely because of the able assistance given by Mr. Beaman. He was one of the greatest lawyers I have ever known. It was my privilege to be a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means that worked for months in the drafting of the Social Security Act. I shall never forget the outstanding contribution made by Mr. Beaman in the drafting of that measure. It was my privilege to attend many conferences with the late President Roosevelt, with the Attorney General of the United States, and other officials who were working on that important measure. We found the advice and counsel of Mr. Beaman to be valuable at all times, and it is my conviction that that measure today has stood the test of constitutionality largely because of the valuable contribution made by Mr. Beaman.

I join in this tribute, and join in wishing for him many years of happiness in his retirement, although we regret exceedingly to see him leave the position in which he rendered such faithful service to the House of Representatives.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman, and I am in complete agreement with him, because I was a member of the committee that conducted hearings on social-security legislation which was drafted under the chairmanship of the able and distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have just learned that my friend, Mr. Middleton Beaman, has just retired as legislative counsel of the House of Representatives. I am sure that those who have known Mr. Beaman during his long career in this position feel that he has justly earned his retirement. There is no question that his extraordinary legal ability in drafting of intricate legislation has saved the Government, as well as litigants, countless millions of dollars and possibly billions. The exhaustless energy of this outstanding public servant has been something that could not be compensated for by any salary he has ever received. I doubt if there is a legal firm in the country which would not have welcomed Mr. Beaman to it as a member of the firm. Yet here we have a man who has dedicated his remarkable intellect to the service of his country at a nominal salary compared with what he might have earned outside of the Government. I have always looked up to Mr. Beaman as that type of citizen who stood for principles and yielded to no pressure or to no man who might seek to have him violate them. Those of us who have served with Mr. Beaman are well aware that he merits years of happiness, health, and prosperity, and that is what I am sure that all of us who know him wish for him.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the younger Members of the House I should like to say that the person about whom we are talking is a man who has for years been the chief of those who provide the language and knowledge required to write complicated legislation. I think Mr. Beaman is one of the half dozen smartest men intellectually that I have ever met. Mr. Beaman has an incisive mind, the like of which is possessed by few men. In addition to this incisive mind he has a character that has stood up on all occasions. In his work he did not flatter or fear anyone. I am glad to take this opportunity to give my testimony and show my thankfulness for having had the opportunity to work with this wonderful man.

Mr. McCORMACK. I appreciate the contribution made by the gentleman from Ohio, and I agree with him that Middleton Beaman is one of the half dozen ablest men I have ever met.

In conclusion I know that I speak the sentiments of all of the Members who knew him in the years that he was connected with the House organization by saying, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include as part of my remarks a letter sent to Middleton Beaman on February 1 by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. The letter referred to is as follows:

FEBRUARY 1, 1949.

Mr. MIDDLETON BEAMAN,

MY DEAR BEAMAN: I have your letter of January 5, 1949. I want to express to you my deep regret that you find it necessary to resign your office as chief legislative counsel of the House.

I look back upon our long association with great pleasure and pride in the fact that I have had your confidence and you have had mine. You can always look back upon your 30 years here on the Hill with the assurance that everyone who has come in contact with you is your friend and is deeply grateful to you for your fine work, and the help that you have given each and every one of us individually and collectively as Members of the House of Representatives. Your clear head and trained mind, combined with your love of the work you were doing, have made your service here outstanding.

For the years that are allotted to you I trust that you shall enjoy to the fullest measure the blessings of health and happiness.

With assurances of my high regard I am pleased to subscribe myself,

Your sincere friend.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I am sure we are all sorry to know that Middleton Beaman, the legislative counsel, is retiring from active duty. I have known Mr. Beaman personally and well for more than a quarter of a century. I never knew of an individual in public life who was more interested in his work and more determined to do that work well.

Mr. Beaman thought and worked objectively. He always determined where he was going, and had the ability and the foresight to select the words and the language best suited to the accomplishment of his purpose. I have often marveled at his capacity for work. I have sat in conference committee with him early and late, and there was never a word of complaint because the hour of meeting was too early or the hour of adjournment too late. Others with whom Mr. Beaman has been associated in the Congress have discussed at length his unusual qualities and qualifications for the responsible position in the House which he filled so efficiently and acceptably. A gentleman and a patriot always, he has set a good example for the rest of us to follow.

Here is hoping that he may live long and enjoy his well-earned retirement.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for one-half hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, I cannot refrain from taking this minute to pay my respects and appreciation to someone we still have with us, and to express the deep gratitude of the people of my district and the State of Utah to the President of the United States for his humanity and his ability to see and understand an emergency when it exists.

Long before the newspapers were full of the disaster that has stricken the West, the President of the United States had already taken action. He had directed every Federal agency available to lend every assistance possible to the stricken people of that area.

It is indeed gratifying for us as a people, and the people of the world, to know that we now have in the White House a man who understands humanity, a man of action, a man of courage, who will meet all the issues that arise in these troublous times.

AMENDMENT OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill to exempt from the provisions of the Selective Service Act of 1948 those merchant seamen who served in the United States merchant marine during World War II. My motive in presenting this bill is to eliminate a great inequity in the Selective Service Act under which merchant marine veterans are now being drafted after years of hazardous wartime shipping service all over the world—an inequity which does a grave injustice to these veterans by denying recognition to them for their great contributions to our victory over the Axis, and by requiring new sacrifices from those who have so willingly sacrificed before.

Our merchant marine veterans are the forgotten men of America's armed forces. These men chose this branch of the service in response to their Government's call for volunteers to carry the materials of war to the battlefields all over the world, yet they have been denied veterans' benefits, insurance and hospital services, and educational benefits under the GI bill of rights. The only gesture of recognition for their heroic services was given when the President issued merchant marine certificates of discharge.

The final unfair blow to our seamen veterans came during the last session when the Eightieth Congress refused to exempt from the draft seamen with wartime service—a repudiation of the provision of Public Law 87 of the Seventy-eighth Congress which relieved merchant seamen from further classification under the selective-service system. Now, our seamen veterans, who had their education and their life's work interrupted once by the call to service, find themselves drafted into the armed forces.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the Eighty-first Congress to amend the Selective Service Act to grant draft exemption to these forgotten men of World War II, and thus grant them some measure of recognition for their sacrifices in the last war—recognition which they so richly deserve.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LECOMPTE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Ottumwa (Iowa) Courier on Federal grants.

Mr. PATTERSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances; in one to include an editorial from the veterans' report.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of special orders heretofore granted, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

INCREASING TREND TOWARD ACQUISITION OF TAX-EXEMPT PROPERTY BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the membership to a table which I intend to place in the Appendix of the RECORD, with the permission of the House. That table shows the extent to which the Federal Government is increasing the trend toward ownership of tax-exempt property in various States of this country.

It emphasizes that this is an extremely serious situation for many States and municipalities and for the property owners in those localities who own real estate subject to taxation.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend these remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEONARD W. HALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE].

VETERANS OF WORLD WAR I

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, sometimes during peacetime a Member places himself in some jeopardy when he speaks in favor of the veterans of any war. I am at this time, however, calling attention to that magnificent group of soldiery which went forth in 1917 and 1918 to the fields of France, and who sacrificed themselves in the defense of their country, the men who fought in World War I.

I want to call the attention of the House to the words of Rudyard Kipling when we consider an attempt to malign the veteran. Those words are:

It's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Chuck 'im out, the brute!"
But it's "Savior of 'is country," when the guns begin to shoot.
An' it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' anything you please,
But Tommy ain't a bloomin' fool,
You can bet a dime he sees.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of special orders heretofore granted, I may address the House today for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MEYER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. SADOWSKI asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include some excerpts.

Mr. ADDONIZIO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

ACTION BY PRESIDENT TRUMAN IN STORM DISASTER

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleague from Utah [Mr. GRANGER] in the words he has spoken about the prompt action taken by the President of the United States in looking after the disaster area in the far West and Midwest. I think President Truman should be commended highly for his action in our behalf in helping to save our cattle and in placing at our disposal all Government agencies so that these conditions can be alleviated at the earliest possible moment. We in Montana are grateful to the Congress and the President for their understanding of these problems of ours and their speedy action in our behalf.

DE JURE RECOGNITION OF ISRAEL

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KLEIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to add my bit to the chorus of praise which is ringing out all over the world for our great President, Harry S. Truman, in recognition of his statesmanship in granting full de jure recognition to the new state of Israel, that glorious new democracy in the Middle East which we who have long championed the Zionist cause believe and prophesy will be a bright luminary in the family of nations and demonstrate true democracy in the Middle East.

President Truman should be and will be hailed and commended for this courageous act, and for his generous attitude in choosing a time when no political advantage can accrue to him personally, while he sets the United States in the forefront of the great powers in granting to Israel every privilege and right of established government in international comity.

President Truman has given to peace, to democracy, and to freedom a precious gift of great value. He has proved to the world that the United States keeps its promises. He has proved to the people of Israel that America is a friend. He has given us reason for pride in a great President and a great Nation.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEIN. I yield.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, President Truman rightly shall receive the plaudits of thousands of loyal Americans of Jewish extraction for his most recent evidence of interest in and good will toward the new state of Israel. Our de jure recognition of Israel will do much to stabilize that noble country; will enable it to the better take its rightful place among the nations of the world; and will assist materially in settling conditions in that most important part of the world. The state of Israel has received a tremendous expression of confidence from the United States. We are sure it will continue to merit it.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEIN. I yield.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, the last day of January 1949 marked the first day of de jure or full recognition by President Truman of the state of Israel. This fulfilled the President's pledge made last year at the time of his conditional or de facto recognition when the state of Israel was carved out. At that time he promised full recognition by the United States when a permanent government in Israel would be established.

These elections were held on January 25, 1949, and less than one full week later Israel has seen President Truman fulfill that promise—a truly great and momentous decision in these times.

We are reliably informed that the news of President Truman's fair-minded decision was most amiably received throughout all Israel as soon as it was made known there.

It is sincerely hoped that this step will go a long way in effecting a better understanding toward a solution of our problems of today.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEIN. I yield.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOLLINGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Speaker, at long last, the people of Israel have been accorded by the United States the recognition they so richly deserve. Perhaps no nation in history has suffered so much or fought so courageously for the right to take its proper place among the democracies of the world. By its steadfast belief in the principles of democracy, and by its willingness to sacrifice life and property for its ideals, it has earned the recognition of full statehood by the United States. Through the United Nations, it will lend its efforts toward world peace for which there is a prayer in the hearts of all of us. President Truman as the leader of our great Nation has helped pave the way for a new Israel, and the Israelis will, with pride in their country, maintain and uphold those democratic principles which we realize must be fought for with all our ability and strength, if they are to survive.

The enemies of democracy are many—that a new nation, Israel, joins with us in our efforts for peace and freedom, is cause for rejoicing.

THE DEMOCRATIC PATH OF PEACE

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great satisfaction that I add a word to the fulsome but deserving praise of our courageous President, Harry S. Truman.

I believe that I can claim the unique distinction of having predicted the election of heads of two great governments. When I was in the state of Israel in September 1948 I called on Prime Minister David Ben Gurion.

During the course of our discussion he asked when our Government would extend de jure recognition to his government. I told him that there was not a doubt in the world but that President Truman would keep his promise—just as he did—and would extend de jure recognition to the state of Israel immediately following the establishment of a permanent government by means of a democratic election. He then asked what would happen if it were necessary to postpone the Israeli election until after our own. I told him that there would be no change because I was certain that President Truman would be reelected.

Upon my return to this country I visited President Truman and told him, among other things, that, in my opinion, the provisional government of the state of Israel headed by Prime Minister Ben Gurion would be elected as the permanent government by the Israeli citizenry in a free and popular election.

I rejoice that all of these things are now realities.

We are grateful to the President for his extension of de jure recognition to this new democracy because it is symbolic of stretching out the hand of friendly fellowship in the true tradition of brotherhood. It is further evidence that this country, under the leadership of our great President, is ready to teach the world by precept and example how to tread the democratic path of peace under the guidance of God.

The following poem by Sir William Jones, entitled "A State," is apropos:

What constitutes a state?
Not high raised battlements or labored mound,
Thick walls or moated gate;
Not cities proud, with spires and turrets crowned,
Nor bays and broad arm ports,
Where, laughing at the storm, rich navies ride;
Nor starred and spangled courts.
Where low-browed baseness wafts perfume to pride—
No!—men, high-minded men,
With powers as far above dull brutes endued,
In forest, brake, or den,
As beasts excel cold rocks and brambles rude—
Men, who their duties know,
But know their rights; and, knowing, dare maintain,
Prevent the long-aimed blow,
And crush the tyrant, while they rend the chain,
These constitute a state.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to join with the gentleman from New York and other friends of Israel in commemorating this historic occasion in which our great President of the United States lends his high office to the official de jure recognition of the establishment of Israel as a nation.

At long last, from a tumultuous beginning, the heroic men and women of Palestine have forged for themselves and their children for generations to come a new nation, a new homeland for the Jewish people in the Middle East. For generations these people of biblical times have been persecuted in many lands, but with tenacity, fortitude, vision, and wisdom they have clung to the belief that some day, somewhere in the land of their forefathers, they would reestablish themselves again.

President Truman, true to his pledge and in the name of the Government of the United States of America, has led the way for legal recognition for these deserving people.

In the interest of democracy as we know it, I am confident that this historic occasion will create a new era in the Middle East, where a dynamic and positive democratic program is so sorely needed.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, President Truman deserves and is receiving the plaudits of the democratic world for the recognition of the new state of Israel, not only by the United States but by Great Britain as well, for the British recognition is generally regarded as a result of the diplomatic influence of the President of the United States.

Historically, the Jew is a democrat and he is preeminently an individualist. Indeed, the persecution of the Jewish people throughout the ages and, most conspicuously, in the recent past, has come from totalitarian dictators and their minions, in an effort to crush the individualism of the Jew, which did not submit to the tyranny of totalitarianism.

It is a foregone conclusion that the new state will take its place among the democratic nations of the world and will join in the fight for freedom, individual liberty and the dignity of man throughout the future.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, I too wish to join the chorus that has raised its voice in jubilation over the full de jure recognition of the new state of Israel by our courageous President, Harry S. Truman.

At long last, the dream of a homeless and oppressed people has become a reality. A promise has been fulfilled.

President Truman, by his immediate recognition of the state of Israel, has proved to the world that the United States keeps its promises. The President has proved that America can be a trusted friend, at a time when friendly relations through the world are so vitally needed to secure the peace for which we all yearn.

I feel confident that very shortly the state of Israel will be admitted as a member of the United Nations and will make a real contribution to the work of that great international body in bringing about a better understanding toward the solution of our present-day problems.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a memorandum concerning some important legislation under consideration by the Committee on the Judiciary at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]?

There was no objection.

STORM CONDITIONS IN THE WEST

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. O'SULLIVAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, as you all know, my State of Nebraska, together with the greater portion of the Western States, has been made practically helpless by a series of very bad blizzards. Through the cooperation of the Federal Government we were able only a few days ago to begin the movement by airplane of hay to several hundred thousand head of cattle which are starving in these beleagured areas.

This morning Mr. Bud Crawford, of Broken Bow, Nebr., who has maintained radio communications through his "ham" set with most of the ranchers in my State, telephoned me a serious complaint.

Mr. Crawford tells me that the price of hay has skyrocketed. Prairie hay that had been selling at from $12 to $15 a ton now is quoted at $30 and $40. And many of those owning the hay are holding it for still higher prices, according to Mr. Crawford's information. I have telegraphed Governor Peterson of Nebraska, demanding an investigation into this matter of profiteering on this animal misery. I may also ask prosecuting authorities to look into the situation with a view to prosecuting the offenders if this is possible.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I too wish to second the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. O'SULLIVAN] and the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER] who have spoken so well of the quick and effective work of the President on this relief program. I trust we will have quick action by the House on Senate Joint Resolution 38 which implements the work of relief. On Monday Secretary Krug told a committee what had already been done and yesterday Assistant Secretary Warne elaborated on it.

I find that the storms have extended farther south than most of us realized. They have touched northern Arizona and covered the Navajo Indian Reservation deep with snow. That reservation, including the Hopi Reservation, is as large as the entire State of West Virginia. I fear it is a great crisis for those Indians. It may be true of other Indians as well. Probably there will be loss of life as well as loss of livestock. Aviators flying over that region say they can detect Indian hogans at different places but they can find no tracks going out of them. Those Indians are snowbound and covered up. Undoubtedly there will be loss of life. I hope we will take quick action on Senate Joint Resolution 38. At this point I want to include a telegram just handed me.

FEBRUARY 2, 1949.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.:

Navy planes really did a job here today. With two Army ships, moved 35 tons of hay into reservation and to ranches along highway 66 Seligman area.

Fifty CAP planes in action out of Winslow, Prescott, made several flights over reservation, dropping food and spotting concentration of cattle, sheep, and Indians.

Red Cross dropped 10,000 pounds of food. Indian Bureau also flew into Bodaway Plateau 2,000 pounds firewood. Red Cross has ready for shipment Wednesday 50 pounds DDT for Navajo Mountain School. Increased food drop tomorrow.

Dr. Schulz, Fort Defiance, got into Navajo Mountain on Bureau chartered helicopter, plans to establish temporary hospital in school. Red Cross has 36 Army cots ready to be flown in Wednesday.

Fifteen planes standing by at Phoenix Skyharbor loading hay tonight, expect take off tomorrow first flight with 70 tons, hope to fly additional 100 tons tomorrow. Navy moving base to Litchfield Park Airbase to facilitate handling 150 men and officers, maintain air equipment. Winslow will be advance base. Hay train departed Phoenix 235 tons, arrives Winslow 11 a. m. tomorrow, where planes will pick up cargoes.

Bureau has arranged for handling cargoes there. Planes loaded here today by Indian students and 20 chain gang pupils from Phoenix Bastile. Drafting additional chain gangers for tomorrow.

Army has supplied four dozers from Yuma. Have secured 16 dozers from outside area altogether.

Established radio communication with Bennett Hyde at Cayenta through local HAM hook-up here, relayed through Marion, Ohio. Hyde reports food drop at Cayenta O. K. and asked for hay at Black Mesa.

Chartered helicopter returned Tuba City to pick up Bureau nurse who will be flown in there tomorrow at Schulz request. Food situation at Navajo Mountain school O. K., but fear measles, pneumonia, frostbite may be bad. Possibility of diphtheria unconfirmed at Tes Nos Pas, but likely.

John Osborne, Seligman, rancher, reported to Pierson that hay lift has saved most of his 1,200 head, only 8 dead so far.

New blizzard reported on way, but may miss reservation. Temperature in affected area predicted for tonight zero minimum. Snow still drifting on reservation.

Army surgeon attempted to fly into Gallup today in Army packet, but forced to return here tonight. Will fly into Shiprock tomorrow and will be transported by Bureau jeep to Tes Nos Pas tomorrow with Dr. Kassell.

DAUGHERTY.

Mr. CARROLL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert my remarks on this same subject at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join with other western colleagues in the House of Representatives in commending President Truman for his speedy action in calling upon the agencies of our Government to lend every aid and assistance to the great mountain and plains region of this Nation, which has been suffering as a result of unprecedented snowstorms.

President Truman is to be commended for his splendid action, without which the economic and agricultural life of the West may have suffered irreparable damage.

It is hoped that the legislative branch of the Government will give continuing and substantial aid to these stricken areas in view of the urgency of the situation.

Mr. PATTEN. Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate the privilege of elaborating on the situation in Arizona as it is at the present time. Not only is the condition serious from the standpoint of below zero weather, with more snow and cold predicted as of last night, but the latest reports verify the fact that cattle are starving. Even the antelope in the district north of Seligman where the wildlife range are subjected to weather so serious that they cannot survive. Certainly domestic animals, from which these people derive their livelihood, cannot be expected to survive without food and shelter.

To make the condition even worse—and something we have heard little about so far—we now find evidence of measles, pneumonia, and diphtheria on the Indian reservations. This necessitates medical supplies and doctors. We are not only concerned with their economy, but it is now a matter of life and death for the people living in those areas. It is imperative that additional aid be forthcoming immediately.

The people of Arizona extend their thanks to the Government and President Truman for the assistance that has already been given them and for the efforts being made here. But I would further like to state that the condition is such that it will continue to demand our close attention, since many areas will require assistance not merely for the time being. And it may be several weeks or even months before the people of Arizona in these areas are again placed on a stable economic basis where they can again resume their normal activities.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITAKER (at the request of Mr. CHELF) was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

REPEAL OF ANTIMARGARINE LAW

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, an attempt is being made to persuade Members of Congress and others that the administration will be breaking faith with midwestern dairy farmers if it goes ahead with its plans for repeal of the Federal antimargarine law.

This attempt does not take into account the very plain facts of the situation.

The Democratic platform, adopted in June, carried a plank proposing repeal of the Federal taxes on margarine.

This was unequivocal and meant what it said—complete repeal of the Federal antimargarine laws.

Everyone, including the butter interests, apparently so agreed at the time.

At the time, the butter groups had not come forward with their proposal for repeal of the taxes and the substitution of a ban on the manufacture and sale of yellow margarine.

This effort to further hamstring margarine was not made public until a few days before the November election. The statement explaining that the butter interests were willing to see the Federal taxes repealed in return for the ban on yellow margarine did not refer to the Democratic platform. Apparently the butter spokesmen felt that the Democratic plank on margarine meant outright repeal of the antimargarine laws—with no other crippling legislation to be substituted.

Obviously, the butter groups were counting on the election of Governor Dewey and there had been a good deal of quiet rejoicing in their ranks over antimargarine statements attributed to the Republican Presidential nominee.

But President Truman won the election. The farmers voted for Mr. Truman knowing that the Democratic platform carried the plank proposing repeal of the antimargarine laws and knowing that the President had been quoted at a press conference as saying that he would sign a repeal bill if one came to him from the Congress.

Furthermore, if any further proof is needed, the President in his economic message to the Eighty-first Congress, on January 7, 1949, again recommended repeal of the margarine taxes. Repeal of the taxes means that all restrictions on the sale of yellow margarine would be done away with.

In view of the circumstances related, I do not see how anyone can say that repeal of the antimargarine laws will be breaking faith with the midwestern farmers. I insist, that in view of their support of the President in the national election, complete repeal of the antimargarine laws will be keeping faith with them.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANE asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article which appeared in the Chelsea (Mass.) Record; also, to extend his remarks and include a statement he made before the Ways and Means Committee recently.

NON-COMMUNIST OATH FOR MANAGEMENT

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, the Taft-Hartley Act will be repealed.

Another labor-management-relations act will be passed to fill the vacuum.

We hope that it will strike a better balance in governing those conditions under which labor and management resolve their differences.

Taft-Hartley "put the finger" on labor by requiring union officials to swear under oath that they are not Communists.

By implication, this gives management a clean bill of health, while putting labor leaders under constant suspicion.

On a grave issue such as communism, which threatens our national well-being and the future of every man, woman, and child in the United States, we cannot afford to put any one group under the onus that it alone is subject to Communist infiltration.

To require one party to a controversy to take a loyalty oath while exempting the other party is weighing the scales in an un-American manner, which can only please the Kremlin.

Equal treatment before the law is the cornerstone of justice and security.

But this tenet is flagrantly violated by the terms of the Taft-Hartley Act.

We have been well warned concerning the Communist technique of infiltrating a labor union.

We have not been warned concerning the far more subtle technique of Communists in worming their way into management.

It would be far more effective for an agent to avoid all Communist affiliations, establish a thoroughly conservative viewpoint, and work himself into a responsible position all in readiness for the day when he could do the most harm without ever being suspected.

In fact, we must guard against both possibilities.

Therefore, in any labor-management-relations act that is passed by this Congress to replace the discredited Taft-Hartley Act, we must treat all alike when the question of our national security is involved.

As the Chelsea Record, of Chelsea, Mass., observes editorially in its issue of January 7, 1949:

> This is not a question of lining business up against labor or labor against business, in any sense of the word.
> It is a case of lining up American men and women, regardless of where they work, or what they work at, against a common enemy that is using every means, fair and foul, to break down our economy.

What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

If this House decides to retain that provision which requires union-labor officials to sign a non-Communist affidavit, the American people, actuated by a sense of fair play and the need for full security, will demand the same from the managers of industry.

ISRAEL RECOGNIZED

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, the de jure recognition of Israel is of course deeply gratifying to all who have fought for justice for the small state, and for a place of sanctuary for the unhappy Jews of Europe. I have joined in this fight believing first in our American principle that justice to minorities is the key to the success of democracy, and second that Israel will be a bridgehead of democracy in a Middle East ridden with chronic depression, illiteracy, bad health, and feudal social conditions. Israel now has a great part to play in the recovery and modernization of this whole area which has long been a tinder box for war. By contributing to the recovery of the Middle East with Israel as a focal point we shall be safeguarding peace and our national security, while at the same time serving best the cause of the triumph of democracy in the world.

RECOGNITION OF THE STATE OF ISRAEL

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to commend President Truman for his prompt action in the fulfillment of his promises to give to the new nation of Israel full and complete recognition. I have long subscribed to the principle that there should be a national home for the Jewish people in Palestine. Palestine is the home of two great religions, the Christian religion and the Jewish religion. The magnificent fight the people of Israel have put up for a national homeland certainly deserves the success they have now achieved.

We, who have fought so long for de jure recognition of Israel, are confident that this new nation will function on democratic principles. We are sure that the nations which are adjacent to Israel will profit through increased commerce and, most of all, by the example which the new nation of Israel will set in the practice of democracy.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MULTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in three instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article entitled "Third Commonwealth." I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $195.25, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. COLMER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a letter.

THE VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, many of us have noticed with a great deal of interest the action of Veterans' Administrator, Carl R. Gray, Jr., as announced yesterday, eliminating the 13 branches of the Veterans' Administration as supervisory units and limiting these offices to operational activities in handling national service life insurance and death claims.

Mr. Speaker, I think this action of the Veterans' Administrator deserves the highest commendation as it perhaps sets an example in the executive department of our Government that may be worthy of wide emulation.

There has been much criticism and some justified that the Veterans' Administration was so big and bunglesome that it became very difficult indeed to obtain the service in many instances the veteran is entitled to receive. This action of the Veterans' Administration will, he believes, increase efficiency in operations, avoid the overlapping of responsibilities and make it possible to utilize personnel more economically now that we have reached the leveling-off point in our operations.

I personally have never seen the advisability of having such a glorified organization with responsibility in so many places. While I strongly believe in decentralization of the governmental agencies insofar as possible, the experience of large intermediate branch offices apparently proves a more direct contact from the local and district level to the central office would produce better service and greater efficiency.

There is much consideration being given to reorganization in Government agencies, and I am sure much to be accomplished. I am sure General Gray in taking the initiative had in mind accomplishing the objectives to be sought in both economy and efficiency. As a result of this action, it is estimated the savings will mean approximately 2,500 people and $10,000,000, as well as better care for war veterans.

If after careful study and analysis the Veterans' Administrator can do what he says he can and I have every reason to believe he can, it should be a guiding star for others to follow and certainly is a fine display of administrative statesmanship.

EXTENDING THE AUTHORITY OF THE PRESIDENT UNDER SECTION 350 OF THE TARIFF ACT OF 1930

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means have until midnight Friday, February 4, 1949, to file a report on the bill (H. R. 1211) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I would like to also propound a unanimous-consent request that the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee may have until midnight Saturday to file their report.

The SPEAKER. The minority views?

Mr. REED of New York. The minority views, yes.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from North Carolina include that in his unanimous-consent request?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes, I shall be pleased to include the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order on Tuesday next to consider under the general rules of the House the bill (H. R. 1211) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes; that the time for general debate be not to exceed 1 day, and be equally divided and controlled by myself and the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much time is the gentleman going to allow for general debate?

Mr. DOUGHTON. One full day; not to exceed 1 day.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The bill will be read for amendment the next day?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The bill will be read for amendment the next day.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. We will have general debate on Monday?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The bill will be called up under the rules of the House on Tuesday morning.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And read on Wednesday?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Read under the 5-minute rule on Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

THE STATE OF ISRAEL

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my praise to that previously given today to President Truman for his recent de jure recognition of the state of Israel. I think those hardy pioneers in that country, who have literally turned a desert wilderness into a land of milk and honey, and who are basing their government upon the sound social justice preachings of the prophets of old, deserve the support of the people of the United States. I am hence happy that the President has taken this action.

The recent election in Israel is full proof that those people, many of whom have suffered under the evil practices of totalitarianism, have absolutely no use for totalitarianism in any form and indicates that they will establish an island of democracy in the Near East. Every American, every lover of democracy throughout the entire world, should hail the establishment of Israel as a landmark in the never-ending fight for human freedom.

RELIEF OF WESTERN STATES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order on tomorrow for the Speaker to recognize Members to suspend the rules in connection with an additional bill in relation to relief for the Western States that have been visited with a terrible disaster.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to inquire of the majority leader if he can tell us the program for the rest of this week; and if he can enlighten us any for next week, we will be happy to receive the information.

Mr. McCORMACK. I will be glad to. Tomorrow the bill on which unanimous consent has been given for the Speaker to recognize Members to suspend the rules will be brought up. On Friday we are hopeful that the first deficiency appropriation bill will be brought up. There has been a unanimous agreement made in relation to Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. If the Committee on Expenditures reports out the reorganization bill, and if a rule is obtained between now and Saturday, it is my intention to bring that bill up on Monday.

From Wednesday on there will be no further business for the remainder of the week, except such matters that can only go through by unanimous consent and which will require immediate consideration. By "unanimous consent" I mean only with the permission of the minority leadership, of course, as well as all other Members.

Under the agreement I have with the minority leader, I feel that we will have to continue the House in session on Wednesday until the reciprocal trade agreement bill is disposed of. I made a commitment to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] that from Wednesday of next week and the following Monday there will be no controversial legislation. There may be some the following Monday of a noncontroversial nature. Many of the Members on the minority side are going to make speeches a week from Saturday in connection with Lincoln Day dinners. That same courtesy is extended to us as regards Jackson-Jefferson Day dinners. I have made that agreement, and that agreement will be carried out.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, it is under that understanding that we will have Tuesday and Wednesday, if we need that much, for the Reciprocal Trade Act?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly. I am giving Tuesday and Wednesday for the Reciprocal Trade Act. As to the reorganization bill, I think we can dispose of that on Monday, because there will not be much opposition, as I see it, to that bill; there may be on one or two points, but as to the bill itself I do not think there will be much opposition to the purposes and objectives of such legislation.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. I want to say that if the deficiency appropriation bill comes up, that it will probably have controversial items in it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman for giving me that information, because that serves notice that the Members should be here. When the gentleman from New York makes that observation, I draw the inference that he is conveying to the House that there will probably be some roll calls.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GWINN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY] may have permission to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 2, 1949.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SABATH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Record and include an editorial from the Chicago Sun-Times.

EXTENSION OF VOLUNTARY AGREEMENTS AUTHORITY

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 73 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1660) to continue through September 30, 1949, certain authority conferred on the President by section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, regarding voluntary agreements and plans. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except 1 motion to recommit.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the bill H. R. 1660, which was unanimously reported out by the Committee on Banking and Currency and as I have been informed, has already been passed by the other body by a unanimous vote. This bill extends the act of December 1947 which provided for voluntary agreements up to March 1, 1949, to September 30, 1949.

The reason for this extension is that the committee has not had ample time to prepare legislation which they intend to recommend to the House which will broaden the act and also provide for and safeguard the interests of American business and the American people generally. I hope such a bill will be forthcoming in due time from that great committee and I hope that such legislation will be approved by the Congress.

The law that is being now extended contained the words "voluntary agreements." I feared when the legislation was enacted that American industrialists and big business would take advantage of that provision because they were not subject to the Antitrust Act or the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Of course, we were assured at that time that the intent of the legislation was to hold and reduce prices. But unfortunately, such was not the case, and the cost of living has gone up; that is, until the last election. Since that time, of course, the cost of living has gone down somewhat and I hope it will continue to go down, so that the American people will not be held up by high prices as they have been, especially during the last few years. There being no opposition to this legislation, I am not going to take up more time, and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as the distinguished gentleman from Illinois has explained to the House, this resolution, House Resolution 73, does make in order, under an open rule, the consideration of the bill, H. R. 1660, reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency by unanimous vote. This measure was introduced by the chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. SPENCE.

I believe H. R. 1660 will have the unanimous support of the House. I know of no reason why any Republican should oppose this bill, because it is a continuation of a measure enacted by that often-discussed Eightieth Congress, the Congress which was condemned throughout the length and breadth of the land by the President of the United States—not that I agreed with him—as the second worst Congress in history because it enacted legislation exactly like this. So I am indeed pleased to see that one of the first legislative bills brought in by the Democratic majority, by the administration now in power, is for the continuation of a law passed by the Republican Congress in December 1947, during the special session called by the President, to deal with the inflationary threat which either existed or was believed to exist at that time.

I understand fully that this measure extends the present law only for 7 months. If I understood my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] correctly, the 7-month period has been fixed in order to give the Eighty-first Congress time to bring in some sort of new legislative program, presumably to fix upon the American people a new system of controls. I am wondering whether 7 months will be a sufficient length of time for this Congress to pass legislation to control the economy of this Nation? While I would not for one moment question the sincerity or the honesty of the opinion expressed by my good friend and colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], I am of the conviction that perhaps he is in error. I feel rather certain in my own mind that when the 7 months have come and gone there will be no controls placed upon the economy of this country by legislation enacted by the Eighty-first Congress.

In fact, if I might be slightly facetious and yet deadly serious, I might add that if we can judge by that which has occurred thus far, there is grave question whether any legislation will be enacted in this Congress in the next 7 months. I am not unmindful of the fact that after the Eightieth Congress was in session for the first 30 days there were loud cries going up to high heaven that it was a "do-nothing" Congress; that it had not enacted any legislation; that it had failed to keep the promises and pledges which had been made to the people of the country in the campaign of 1946. Well, if the Eightieth Congress was a "do-nothing" Congress I am not at all sure what we can term the Eighty-first Congress.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. As I recall the debates which took place at the time this measure was before the Eightieth Congress, it was asserted by many on the other side of the aisle, who were complaining of the inadequacy of the measure, that it would not work. Since the enactment of this legislation, my understanding is that it has worked and it has worked well and successfully; that it met the problem insofar as allocation is concerned. Of course, I can conclude nothing other than that it must have been so, by the fact that now we are being asked to extend the very same measure for a period of 7 months.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the distinguished gentleman very much for his remarks. I think they are very apropos. I had intended to refer later to that very same situation. The workings of this law, as the gentleman from Indiana has well pointed out, is proof of the contention of the Republican majority in the Eightieth Congress, and very well demonstrates, that you do not need compulsion or force to get industry and business here in America to cooperate with the Government. I think we can look back over the last few months and be proud of the way we have gradually worked our way out of the many difficulties that resulted from the world's greatest armed conflict. We can look back with much satisfaction to the way in which the free-enterprise system here in America, under a plan set forth and provided by the Eightieth Congress, has met the needs of this Nation for production. In almost every instance distribution of scarce commodities has been made in a fair manner.

I feel that those on the other side of the aisle can strike this particular piece of legislation from the so-called scoreboard of bad legislation passed by "the second worst Congress in the history of the Nation," because, seemingly, they are now agreed that after all the judgment and the wisdom of the Eightieth Congress was excellent in connection with this particular problem. At least they are now ready and willing to keep this legislation on the statute books for 7 months more. I predict that this Congress will never enact compulsory control legislation to take its place.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I have been much interested in the gentleman's statement. In that regard, I would hazard the opinion that there will not even be any extension of voluntary controls at the expiration of the 7 months' period, assuming that the country remains at peace. There has been a lot of talk around here about the Government going into the steel business. I am not so sure but what by the time this 7 months' period expires we may be wondering what to do with the steel then being produced under this free-enterprise system in our country instead of worrying about having the Government go into the business of producing steel.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I find myself very much in agreement with what the gentleman from Indiana has said; and perhaps I might go just a little further to say that if the Truman depression, which now seems to be well under way, goes as far and as deep as many people feel it may, that we will not long be talking about how to control production or how to distribute scarce commodities and products. Instead, we will be, by the time 7 months rolls around, discussing here what we can do to spur on, to implement, and to expand both industrial production and employment in this country, what we can do to give some help and some relief to the hungry. It is a situation we do not talk about very often or very loudly—but we all know that the economic condition of this country, as a result of the mistakes of the administration in power, is not any too good or too healthful. I am glad, therefore, to see that it is the judgment of the majority, at the present moment at least, that it is not wise to introduce any of the so-called mandatory controls legislation, or to establish in this country a controlled economy, as was suggested in the campaign, by the President and others throughout recent months because, as I said in the beginning, the American free-enterprise system has met the situation. Our supply pipe lines, as the gentleman from Indiana has said, have been filled. We already have an overproduction in many lines. It will not be long until we may be worrying with the problem as to how we can get rid of our surpluses, and how we can continue to give employment to those who are now working.

I hope every Member of the House will vote for this legislation. I am very sure every Republican Member will.

In closing, may I say again to those on the majority side that we are grateful to you for your endorsement of your open admission that our legislation was wise and of real benefit to the people of America. By its continuation, as long as conditions remain unsettled, you are acting wisely, and in order to act wisely you have been forced to give your approval to all that has been done in connection with this particular problem by "the second worst Congress in American history."

Mr. Speaker, there are no other requests for time on the minority side.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I observe that the former majority leader [Mr. HALLECK] and the present minority leader [Mr. MARTIN] agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] that the Eightieth Congress was a great Congress; however, the vast majority of the American people disagreed with these gentlemen in the last election by the tremendous vote that they cast in reelecting our great President who has a great deal of power under this bill. Because of the power that he judiciously exercised the bill actually did work to some extent and some of the things that were feared were not permitted under his guidance and control.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1660) to continue through September 30, 1949, certain authority conferred on the President by section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, regarding voluntary agreements and plans.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1660, with Mr. MILLS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 7 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that the prolongation of any acrimonious political discussion will be helpful to the consideration of this bill. I accept the compliment of the gentleman from Ohio that I selected the best piece of legislation passed by the Eightieth Congress for the consideration of this Congress. I do not think anybody contends that there was no good legislation passed by the Eightieth Congress. Even a blind pig sometimes finds an acorn. But, the people by their votes said they condemned the record of the Eightieth Congress. I judge that was the issue in the last election, and I have aways thought the voice of the people was the voice of God. The people are the court of last resort. You have been tried and found wanting. We are at the bar of public opinion now, and I am confident we will make good.

I do not say that in any spirit of harshness to you gentlemen on the other side. Personally I feel kindly toward you, but the people have said you did not do a good job in the Eightieth Congress, and the people are the final arbiters. Now, I hope this controversy will not hurt this very meritorious bill which was passed by the Eightieth Congress and which will be continued, by the resolution offered, to September 30 this year, if passed.

This bill confers on the President the power to make voluntary agreements with industry, business, and agriculture, in the production, distribution, allocation, and transportation of strategic materials in short supply essential to our national economy. Its operation has been successful. Almost all of the voluntary agreements have been with reference to steel and steel products. It has not only helped industry in general but it has been very beneficial to the small businesses, because by the allocations they have obtained materials which they otherwise could not have obtained.

This is interim legislation. It only extends the operation of this act until the end of the first quarter of the next fiscal year. In the meantime I hope that we will have a bill that will meet, so far as legislation can, the conditions that now prevail, an over-all bill, incorporating the President's plans, in which there will be some controls.

I believe this is a democratic process. I believe we should always resort to voluntary actions if mandatory actions can be obviated by reason of that. Obedience is government, and lack of obedience is anarchy and chaos. Men will naturally obey the agreements they voluntarily make. I think this bill is based upon sound principles. It is good for industry and agriculture and business; good for both the producer and consumer if it is honestly and faithfully administered. It has been so administered by President Truman, to whom the authority is delegated.

The bill was reported out of the Committee on Banking and Currency unanimously, without going into executive session. I understand a similar bill has been passed by the Senate without objection. No witness appeared against the bill in committee and the opinion of the committee was very strongly in favor of the passage of this bill.

It continues the act in effect until the general program can be considered. To continue it to September 30 of this year will give us ample time for that consideration. Perhaps the provisions of this bill will again be considered and placed in that program. All phases of the grave conditions that confront us and the remedy for same must be considered, and it is just to give us time to give proper consideration to this bill that we take this action today.

I do not think it is necessary to go any further into the matter, and I hope the House will unanimously pass this bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, in committee there was no particular opposition to the continuance of this authority to enter into voluntary agreements.

I might explain that the only reason why any legislation is necessary is that the agreements entered into by industry and business might be in violation of the Clayton and the Sherman Acts if we did not pass legislation to provide that the participants in these agreements should not be subject to the penalties of those acts.

All of the testimony and all of the facts show that the program has been more than reasonably successful. They have been able in conferences and through these agreements to do what otherwise might have been done by mandatory controls. I think the Congress should be quite proud that we did not enact mandatory controls a year ago, that we preserved the free-enterprise system, and that we took one more step away from the socialization of any segment of our industry when we enacted this legislation.

We understand that an issue will be framed later, not only on whether mandatory controls shall be legislated in the field of allocations and priorities to which this particular bill applies, but also on whether price controls and wage controls shall be enacted. As I understand the situation, it is because they expect to introduce such mandatory legislation, which will incorporate the provisions of this bill to all intents and purposes, that this extension is necessary. We will meet the major problem, the basic, fundamental issue of whether we shall socialize American industry, the American economy, when that question is presented to us in the long-range bill. For that reason, and the fact that this program has worked so successfully, there was no opposition whatsoever to the bill on the Republican side of the committee, and I do not believe there should be any opposition to it here on the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Out in our area we have a great deal of trouble every fall in getting enough freight cars and refrigerated cars to carry off our grape crop. Under this act would it be possible, pursuant to section 2 (a), subdivision 1, for the growers to get relief in trying to get the necessary freight cars to haul away their crops?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; the necessity for allocating freight cars was before the committee when we considered this bill last year. That was one of the reasons we enacted the legislation so that they could agree to meet any seasonal emergencies that might exist.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time on our side.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, my father was a Baptist minister. You know we Baptists believe in complete immersion. I recall a day many years ago when I was about 10 or 12 years old, when my father baptized me. We lived next door to the church and on Sunday afternoon, prior to the baptism, I went over to the church all alone and took off my shoes and stockings to test the water to determine whether it was too cold.

When I heard that the Democratic side of this House had introduced this bill, a Republican bill, I wondered if perhaps they were getting some Republican religion. I was reminded of the declaration of principles which the Republican Party adopted at the National Convention. It states that the Republicans believe in a maximum voluntary cooperation between citizens and a minimum dependence upon law, never however declining courageous recourse to law if necessary.

Then as events developed, when I found that this bill was for 7 months' duration only, and as I listened to the gentleman from Ohio a short while ago say that he doubted if any control bills were adopted by this Congress, voluntary or mandatory, I came to the conclusion that after all we must not hope for conversion on the part of our good friends, the Democrats.

As evidence of the fact that we have heard a great deal of conversation and no action on controls I want to point out that the special session last fall was called by the President, at the Democratic National Convention because of the emergency which existed with reference to inflation. At the special session over 100 speeches were made, and articles included, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on price control and inflation.

The Congress has now been in session longer than the special session—not one speech about price control or rationing has been made on the floor of this House or on the floor of the other body. Not one bill has been introduced in this House asking for price control. I ask you gentlemen what has become of the issue of inflation and price control? Was it merely political expediency?

As a matter of fact, I have been waiting expectantly for the charming gentlewoman from California to bring forth her market basket and talk about it, but she has not discussed nor introduced measures concerning price control. So I think we will hear discussion about it but nothing else. This bill is evidence of that fact.

I introduced a similar measure to the bill now under consideration. I introduced it before the Democratic side of the House introduced a bill. I believed it to be a Republican measure and I believed it to be a program upon which we could go to the country and say, "Here is a plan for voluntary cooperation to assist producers to do the job."

I do not believe that this measure will do the job. Why? It cannot do it because of the termination date. Seven months will not give sufficient time for the producers of these scarce materials to plan and to know what is ahead for them. Therefore, it becomes necessary, in my judgment, to allow additional time in which to continue the voluntary agreements.

In my bill I provided for 2 years so business then might be able to plan their operations for the future.

Voluntary cooperation, therefore, as I see it, is a Republican measure, upon which the Republicans stood in the Eightieth Congress.

Mandatory provisions may be proposed, but in my judgment will not be supported by the Democratic side of the House. Mandatory allocations would further throw industry into greater turmoil, not knowing how to plan in advance, and causing a freezing of production to such an extent that the very aims and objects which we hope to gain will be defeated.

I will vote for this bill because of the voluntary provision. Even with the defect I pointed out, it is better than the incentive-stifling red tape proposed by the Democrats.

In closing I want to say this one thing: We might suggest to the Democratic side of the aisle that they test further the baptismal water; that it is not quite as cold as they think. It is only invigorating. While they have just touched it with this bill they are unwilling to be immersed. We suggest that you Democrats continue along the path of maximum cooperation between individuals and a minimum of reliance upon law, instead of, as you have in the past, a maximum reliance on the law and a minimum cooperation among individuals.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE] has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE].

Mr. TALLE. Mr. Chairman, as you know, there are no printed hearings on the pending bill available to the Members at this time. Therefore I should like to call attention to two or three points recorded in my personal copy of the typewritten hearings.

I interrogated Secretary of Commerce Sawyer on these points, and I call your particular attention to the replies that were given. I refreshed his memory on the fact that Members were called back in extraordinary session in the late fall of 1947 to consider controls, not of a voluntary sort but controls by force. At that time the then Secretary of Commerce spoke especially about steel, which my distinguished and amiable chairman referred to in his speech a moment ago. Secretary Harriman said at that time that the most difficult problem he had to struggle with was the gray market in steel. Therefore, I interrogated Mr. Sawyer on how the voluntary program which we set up in late 1947 has worked and is working now with reference to the gray market.

I asked him: "What is the situation insofar as the gray market is concerned at the present time?"

Secretary SAWYER. It exists but is disappearing; it is much less.

And he, speaking as a good American citizen, agreed that the only complete answer to a gray market or a black market is adequate production of the commodity involved.

That is the contention the Republican Party has always made.

Then I inquired further about steel production. I wanted to know if our production as of the present time would be sufficient to meet our needs, if we shipped nothing abroad. My question was: "If none at all were shipped abroad would our domestic needs be met?"

Secretary Sawyer replied:

All I can do is to give you mathematics. Our estimate is, as I said a while ago, that production will be 68,000,000 tons. The steel people say tentatively that they think production will be 70,000,000 tons. Our estimate of consumption or demand is 70,000,000 tons. If our estimate of demand and their estimate of production are correct and there is no shipment abroad, the answer to your question is, "Yes."

That reply raises the question: What shall we do about shipments abroad? Historically, the heart of the heavy capital goods industry in Europe has been Germany. I wanted to know whether the dismantling of plants had been stopped and whether progress had been made in steel production there.

Secretary Sawyer said:

Germany produced before the war, I think, 14,000,000 tons of steel a year. Their production is now back to 7,000,000 tons.

Then I wanted to know whether the production of steel is increasing, standing still, or declining, in Germany. Secretary Sawyer replied:

It has been increasing.

Now, then, should the Government of the United States enter into the business of making steel as proposed in the President's message last month at a time when the estimates of the Department of Commerce and the estimates of the steel-producing people show that our needs can be met, if we send nothing abroad? I am not arguing that we should not send any abroad, but steel production abroad is rising; and as my very able colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] said a moment ago, we may soon be worrying about what to do with surplus steel instead of worrying about shortages.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am very happy at this hour to be able to report that the voluntary program the Eightieth Congress set up in the fall of 1947 has worked so well—so well, in fact—that the majority party is now ready to embrace it without a single negative vote. It is further evidence that the American people can be led very successfully, but they cannot be driven.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I was a Member of the Eightieth Congress and I remember distinctly when that Congress had under consideration the very legislation which the present resolution proposes to extend for a period of 7 months. The Republicans were in the majority at that time as you gentlemen are in the majority now.

In order to be a guide for our conduct in this session of Congress, it might be well to just go back to that day December 19, 1947, when this very legislation was before the House for consideration. It was proposed by the Republican membership of the House Banking and Currency Committee. It was most violently opposed by the minority, led by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky who now chairmans that committee.

Listen to what the gentleman said. From the RECORD of December 19, 1947, I am quoting the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky with respect to the legislation that was then before the House, and which is the identical legislation before the House today:

Mark Twain said, "The weather is always discussed at length, but nothing is ever done about it." That is the attitude in which this Congress finds itself now. The discussion of this bill is mere conversation. It will have no effect. The die is cast.

The same gentleman is here today asking us to vote an extension of that very bill for a period of 7 months. He was ably supported in that attitude by some other Democratic Members. I remember especially the statement made by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] which appears on page 11733 of that same day's RECORD. This is what he said after a long discussion of the bill:

Mr. Chairman, this bill—Senate Joint Resolution 167—is a fraud and a hoax on the American people. It will no more stop the tides of inflation than Canute could have stopped the waves of the sea.

I wonder what the gentleman from Montana will say with respect to this legislation before the House today that he condemned in such violent language in the Eightieth Congress.

A gentleman who carried the laboring oar in that debate was my very distinguished friend from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY]. Listen to what the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] said about the legislation then pending and which you are now asked to extend for a period of 7 months without crossing a "t" or dotting an "i":

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, aside from the label on this bill, which for some strange reason is called an anti-inflation bill there is very little good in the bill. I agree with my colleagues who have said it will have absolutely no effect on the present skyrocketing cost of living. It is sold to the country on that basis; it is completely a misnomer.

This bill is a straw man.

Therefore, you are not putting anything genuinely effective in the bill that we could not do here in 5 minutes when the House is in regular session.

You are sending Caspar Milquetoast out to combat the giant of inflation. You might as well know that the bill was doomed to failure in controlling inflation so far as the public is concerned before it was ever brought out.

And so I could go through the record of debates from what gentlemen on the minority side, now the majority, thus described the bill that was presented to the Eightieth Congress, the identical bill which you are now asked to extend for a period of 7 months.

Is it not a very sad commentary upon the thinking of our people that in debates here on the floor of Congress we become so politically inspired in our thinking that we are sometimes unable to see the truth when it stands right up in front of us. If this bill was so bad on December 19, 1947, I wonder what has happened in the meantime to make it so good that the distinguished chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee comes in and asks for a unanimous vote on both sides in support of this legislation? Is it not a fact, my friends, that when you were damning that legislation presented by the Eightieth Congress you were simply building a foundation to which you could make reference in the oncoming campaign, and thus mislead the American people as to at least one thing that the Eightieth Congress did in its efforts to stop inflation? Now, if the fires of inflation are still burning as vigorously as was described by you gentlemen when that bill was under consideration in the Eightieth Congress, what are you doing about it? You have been here for a month. You brought nothing in here but to ask for the extension of the bill you so vigorously denounced when the Republican Eightieth Congress brought it to your attention.

Oh, it is a little different story today than it was when you were out in the hustings arguing and speaking and making political speeches telling the American people what you are going to do to stop the rise of prices. Now those prices are coming down just as we told you they would at that time when this legislation was under consideration. You now find that the things you then advocated are no longer necessary. You now find that the things you talked about in the campaign have not come to pass. The chickens are coming home to roost. Thank God they are resting on your doorstep today.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. The thought just suggested itself to me—I am a freshman Congressman—that perhaps because we do have a Democratic majority in both Houses that big, bad business has decided to be good and has begun to cut the prices down and that we have a sufficient club over their heads; that if they do not be good we can enact probably the very necessary legislation which will make bad business good.

Mr. KEEFE. Well, the club that you are raising over their heads is the old man Milquetoast that was so beautifully described by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY]. That is not very much of a club to hold over anybody's head, and you are not kidding anybody, and you are not ultimately going to kid the American people, and that sort of an argument will not have very much of an appeal, in my humble judgment, even in the minds of business or in the minds of the American people. They will get smart after awhile when they read the record of these proceedings and see that you are now again advocating the very remedy that the Republican Eightieth Congress wrote on the statute books over your violent protests.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST].

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to get into a political discussion on this issue.

I am for the resolution. I think it should be passed. I do not think that it has accomplished in every way all that was hoped for when the bill was passed. Certainly it has not accomplished all that its most ardent sponsors had hoped for. I rise at this time simply to say to the Committee on Banking and Currency that I hope in the 7 months ahead during which this act will be in operation, that this committee will give particular attention to the effect of this plan with reference to the small-business operator who desires and needs steel for his operations. I have had a great many complaints from small operators. I have not had the opportunity to investigate whether all these complaints are justified. I know in one case in my own State in which a manufacturer of milk cans, a very important item to the agricultural economy of that area, has been unable to get steel for the manufacture of his product. I know of several other instances that have come to my attention, and I have investigated sufficiently to be convinced, in a way, that this program, perhaps, has been too much dominated by the large operators.

I am aware of the fact that perhaps any voluntary plan eventually will run into that sort of difficulty but I do hope the committee will give some attention, as a follow-up to the passage of this bill today, to the effect that it may have on the small operator who has been unable in many instances to get a proper allocation of steel.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. I wonder if the gentleman could tell us just how soon the Committee on Banking and Currency is going to bring out a new OPA bill.

Mr. PRIEST. I will have to refer my distinguished friend to the members of the committee.

Mr. HALLECK. There were a lot of promises along that line made during the campaign, and recent messages have indicated quite a bit of favorable opinion, apparently, on the gentleman's side of the aisle for a revival of OPA. I know a lot of small-business men who would look upon that as the last straw. I hope the committee takes that into consideration, too.

Mr. PRIEST. I am sure this great committee will take that into consideration and will dispose of it in a way that will be in the public interest. I feel that we can place full confidence in the committee in that respect.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Did it not take the other side a very long time last year to get out even this "milquetoast" proposition?

Mr. PRIEST. I recall it was very near Christmas.

Another situation developed very recently in my own State in connection with an agreement entered into under the terms of this act for steel allocation that not only affects a vital industry in that State, but also affects the national security, because it is related to some developments at Oak Ridge, Tenn. Up to this time the allocation under the voluntary-agreement plan has not been carried out in this case. I do not care to go into details on the matter, because it is purely a local matter, but I simply take this time to urge the committee to look into this situation as we go into the months ahead to see if it might be possible for a little more attention to be given to the needs of small operators who need steel, and who are not worried at all about what we might do with the surplus, as was suggested by the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin.

They are worried about getting some plan that would give them steel to keep their plants operating today so that they can carry on their legitimate business, meet their pay rolls, and prosper to some degree.

Mr. HALLECK. If the gentleman will yield further, I wonder if the gentleman could enlighten us as to the present thinking of the committee, as to whether or not we need ceilings on prices more than we need floors under prices.

Mr. PRIEST. The gentleman knows, of course, that I am not a member of this great committee, and I would not presume to attempt to enlighten anybody about the thinking of this committee. I am sure members of that committee are doing some thinking.

Mr. Chairman, all of us, I am sure, desire voluntary allocations in preference to compulsory controls, so long as the public interest is protected and no segment of our economy is unduly burdened. I do not question the good faith generally of the industry in carrying out the voluntary allocations program. But I repeat that the Congress must be diligent and vigilant in guarding against domination of such a program by the larger operators at the expense of small business.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (b) of section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress (61 Stat. 945), is hereby amended by striking out "March 1, 1949" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1949."

Subsection (f) of said section 2 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(f) This section shall expire on September 30, 1949, and any requests made and voluntary plans adopted under this section shall have no force or effect thereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments?

There being no amendments, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MILLS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1660) to continue through September 30, 1949, certain authority conferred on the President by section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, regarding voluntary agreements and plans, pursuant to House Resolution 73, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 547) to continue through September 30, 1949, certain authority conferred on the President by section 2, of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, regarding voluntary agreements and plans, and that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill just passed.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE]?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I assume the Senate bill is identical to the House bill?

Mr. SPENCE. It is identical.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (b) of section 2 of Puolic Law 395, Eightieth Congress (61 Stat. 945), is hereby amended by striking out "March 1, 1949" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1949."

Subsection (f) of said section 2 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(f) This section shall expire on September 30, 1949, and any requests made and voluntary plans adopted under this section shall have no force or effect thereafter."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The proceedings by which the bill, H. R. 1660, was passed were vacated and that bill was laid on the table.

COTTON ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 74 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 128) to provide that acreage planted to cotton in 1949 shall not be used in computing cotton acreage allotments for any subsequent year. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 74 makes in order the consideration of the bill H. R. 128 which was reported out of the Committee on Agriculture. In brief, it would make it possible in the allocation of cotton acreage in 1950, if the Secretary of Agriculture saw fit, to exercise his authority to require cotton quotas so that whatever cotton was planted in 1949 would not be considered in the historical background upon which quotas are based.

In other words, the purpose of this bill is simply to say that if it becomes necessary to impose quotas in the future, as the Secretary of Agriculture has the power to do, that the cotton planted and produced in 1949 will not be considered in that allocation. The question of the merits of the allocation program is not involved. The purpose of this bill is to discourage, as I understand it, the production of cotton in 1949. I am informed by those who have the statistics at hand that there will be an approximate carry-over of 6,000,000 bales of cotton this year. Those who make a study of this problem and whose responsibility it is are apprehensive that if this bill is not enacted into law there will be a great rush on the part of the cotton farmers throughout this country to plant cotton this year in order to secure their proper quota when and if quotas are invoked by the Secretary of Agriculture.

So it merely has as its purpose a deterrent to increased production of cotton in 1949.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McSWEENEY. When is cotton planted? I am sorry to say I do not know.

Mr. COLMER. Cotton planting, of course, varies in the various sections of the country. Ordinarily, in a few weeks in the South the farmers will begin to prepare to plant their cotton.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield to the great authority on cotton, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. From the lower Rio Grande, reports are that they are planting now.

Mr. COLMER. Of course, the gentleman is very familiar with the facts. Cotton is produced on the west coast also, in California, and down in the Rio Grande, as was pointed out by the gentleman, and they are now beginning to plant there.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Would this be a deterrent to increased planting if it is passed immediately?

Mr. COLMER. That is the purpose of the legislation, as I understand it. In other words, it is to prevent increased production of cotton and an additional carry-over, with the possible resultant necessity for the Government, under the support-price program, to purchase this additional cotton.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is necessarily detained and has asked me to handle the time on this side in his absence, there being no other member of the Rules Committee present at the moment. I may say there are no requests for time on this side, and if the gentleman is prepared to move the previous question, we can proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYLE], member of the Rules Committee.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I speak at this time with the hope that I may clarify in my own mind, and in the minds of many of my colleagues, the issue or issues involved in passage of H. R. 128. This measure had the unanimous consent of the Committee on Agriculture after hearings and consideration. That alone, of course, is persuasive of favorable consideration.

Its introduction by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY] resulted in much confusion, uneasiness, and uncertainty upon the part of many farmers throughout the Nation. They were not able to anticipate its effect upon them and their plans for the future. I can well understand this confusion and uncertainty. The most casual investigation will convince anyone that few people of the United States, including the trained experts of the Department of Agriculture and the able and qualified members of the Committee on Agriculture, are able to predict and anticipate with any degree of certainty, the effect this legislation will have upon the cotton industry.

In order to cast an intelligent vote upon it, and to be able to explain its effect to the farmers of my district, I have spent these past several days in a sincere effort to analyze it. One thing, and one thing only, can be said with any degree of certainty about this measure; that acreage planted to cotton in 1949 will not be considered in the future for marketing and quota provisions in the event of the invocation of restrictions by the Secretary of Agriculture. Outside of that, no one can say what this legislation means.

I am sure that all of you will agree that the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 and subsequent amendments, and particularly the marketing quota provisions of such act, are difficult for the average one of us to understand.

The passage of H. R. 128 and its subsequent interpretation, based upon the present Agricultural Adjustment Act, will, unquestionably, work hardship upon many famers in south and west Texas, in California and New Mexico and Arizona.

During the past years and presently, thousands of acres of land that have heretofore not been subject to cultivation have been cleared, broken, and put into farm lands. It is my judgment that such farms and farmers by this act will be placed out of competition with farmers and farms which grew cotton prior to and since 1942. However, to add confusion to an already confused situation, I am reliably informed that this measure, H. R. 128, cannot be interpreted in relation to the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 and amendments, for the reason that this basic act will be changed before 1950, and that a new system for acreage allotment and marketing and quota provisions will be enacted.

I cannot question the necessity for a national plan for the influencing of, if not the control of production and marketing of a product such as cotton, which so vitally affects our entire economy. The large surpluses now on hand and those which may reasonably be anticipated as a result of the 1949 harvest, are dangerously large and will inevitably affect the future price of cotton. The costs of producing cotton per acre have increased out of proportion to its basic price and a material drop in the basic price of cotton would be a great shock to the industry and to our economy. There must be, of course, some intelligent manner of keeping a reasonable balance of production and use. None of us would care to go back to the memorable days when the price of cotton put many of us on starvation incomes. I can personally remember the days when cotton sack was difficult to sell for 5 or 6 cents a yard and farmers had difficulty in buying overalls at 98 cents a pair.

Nevertheless, I would caution against hasty consideration of any legislation so vitally affecting so many of our people. Particularly would I be hesitant to enact any legislation which would discourage young farmers and new farmers from entering into the great field of agriculture. The future, not only of our own country, but that of the world, may well depend upon a vital, progressive, and prosperous agricultural economy in America. Millions of acres of new land must be considered in any long-range agricultural program. It would not be wise, in my judgment, to enact legislation which would freeze out new farmers for the protection of the old, and which would make it impossible for young farmers to compete with those who have been in business longer. Nor would it be wise, in my judgment, to penalize progress.

During the past 18 or 20 years, cotton has materially declined in the economy of Texas. This resulted from many factors. From 1930 to 1940 in Texas, harvested acreage of cotton dropped to approximately 50 percent, from approximately 17,000,000 acres to 8,500,000 acres. In 1946 we harvested approximately 6,000,000 acres of cotton. It is interesting to note, however, that the value of the cotton crop harvested on the 6,000,000 acres in 1946 was considerably higher, by $100,000,000, than that crop harvested off of 16,000,000 acres in 1930. The production of cotton in Texas has been discouraged. The cost became high, the labor scarce, and it was thought in the interest of our economy, State and national, to divert our land to other uses. During the war, and subsequently, we have attempted to produce on our farms a great diversity of crops more vital and necessary to the Nation generally than cotton. We do not anticipate a return to the kingship of cotton, for it would not be good business. We do not feel, however, that we should be placed out of competition by legislation.

There were many farms in south Texas, comprising thousands of acres, that produced cotton prior to the war but which have been better utilized for other crops. Many of them have valuable equipment, suitable for cotton farming. The passage of this act will say to them, "You will be relegated to not more than 2 percent of the State acreage allotment in the event restrictions are put into effect by the Secretary of Agriculture in 1950 under provisions of the present Agriculture Adjustment Act." It will say to the farmers who have put in new land, subsequent to the war, and many of them are veterans, "If you have not planted cotton, you cannot compete with those who have."

The committee amendment has some saving grace. The amendment which reads, "Provided, That any farm on which cotton was not planted in 1947 or 1948—or regarded as planted in 1947 under Public Law 12, Seventy-ninth Congress, because of the production of war crops or of serving in the armed forces of the United States—shall be regarded as having a 1948 planted acreage equal to the 1942 farm acreage allotment" will make it possible for farms which were alloted cotton acreage in 1942 to be considered old growers if they have grown war crops.

At this point I wish to quote the regulations promulgated in March 1945, by the Department of Agriculture pursuant to Public Law 12:

War crop determination for the protection of cotton allotments: That in establishing cotton-acreage allotments under title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, or under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, for any farm for which a cotton-acreage allotment was established for the 1942 crop, if the total acreage of war crops grown on the farm during 1945 or any subsequent year during the present emergency is in excess of the total acreage of war crops grown on the farm in 1941, the cotton production history for the farm for any such year will not be considered as representative of the normal history of the farm and the farm will be considered as one on which cotton was planted in such year. For the purpose of this determination, the following are designated as war crops: Soybeans for beans, peanuts picked and threshed, flax for seed, Irish potatoes, sweetpotatoes, dry edible beans, grain sorghums, sugar beets, sugarcane, rice, tomatoes for processing, peas for processing, snap beans for processing, sweet corn for processing, oats, barley, sweet sorghums, Sudan grass, biennial and perennial legumes, and mixtures containing biennial and perennial legumes.

In connection with this the Department of Agriculture tells me that it will be a man-sized job to determine war crops in relation to cotton and acreage allotment under provisions of the old act, and this amendment we are considering today, for they have little or no history of the war crops. They had not anticipated the problem of considering war crops in cotton acreage allotment under restrictions.

I call these matters to your attention that you may know how difficult it is for you to make an intelligent decision on this present measure. I am sure the Committee on Agriculture had in mind that the immediate passage of H. R. 128, as amended, would discourage the planting of cotton in 1949 and would, therefore, lower the surplus that is accumulating. Notwithstanding the great respect I have for their judgment, I question this conclusion. Acreage will be planted in cotton in 1949, in my judgment, in the relation to the prospects for a profit. The price of cotton will, in large measure, control the amount of acreage planted. Because of the lack of storage for grain last year, many farmers became disgusted with the program of loans and support prices on grain, which were not available without adequate storage, and are turning again to cotton.

Planting is beginning in south Texas. The Department of Agriculture has not announced a support price program for grain. No adequate provisions have been made for storage. We do not know what to anticipate. Many are returning to the basic crop of cotton.

This legislation will not discourage their planting cotton. It will penalize them if they had no farm history as of 1942, or have not subsequently planted cotton.

I have no more intelligent solution to the problem, and consequently I cannot ask you to follow my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] and me in voting against the passage of the bill, but I did feel that I should, as intelligibly as I could, call your attention to the difficulty of reaching an intelligent decision upon this important measure.

It is quite possible that a completely new basic law will erase much of the hardship, or, perhaps I should say, much of the apparent restriction that this measure will place upon growing and expanding communities and upon farms and farmers who have diverted their acreage to crops more needed than cotton.

I shall not oppose the rule, but I do find it necessary to vote against the passage of the measure because of the uncertainty of its effect and because of its seeming discrimination against a large part of south Texas.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 128 to provide that acreage planted to cotton in 1949 shall not be used in computing cotton acreage allotments for any subsequent year.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 128, with Mr. MONRONEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY]

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, the issue involved in this bill is one that requires hasty action, which, in part, accounts for your Committee on Agriculture, reporting the same as its first bill in this Congress. It is supported by a unanimous vote of the Committee. I think it well to bring to your attention certain facts which make it imperative that the bill pass.

During 1948 there were 23,300,000 acres of land in the United States planted to cotton. This acreage produced one of the largest crops in history. The crop was so large that by August 1 this year it is estimated that the carry-over will approach 6,000,000 bales. You might say that we will have a 6,000,000-bale surplus. Controls and quotas were barely averted for 1949. It is the opinion of almost every one connected with the cotton industry that quotas will be invoked next year.

If quotas are invoked next year the allotment of acreage will, under the present law, be based upon the acreage which the individual cotton farmers put to cotton during the preceding years, that is, 1947, 1948, and 1949. It is only natural that every farmer desires to have the largest allotment possible. In order to secure the largest allotment possible he would be inclined to plant cotton this year, as the saying goes, "up to the doorsteps." If that should happen, then the 1949 crop would undoubtedly add several million bales to the present surplus, and that would leave cotton under a burden similar to that which existed before the war. The effect of overplanting this year would be disastrous.

So, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is simply to discourage overplanting in 1949. Even though the bill becomes law, it is the opinion of the cotton experts around the country that cotton acreage this year will show some increase over 1948. This of itself could and might add to the surplus. If the bill should not become law the acreage will be further increased. So, it is our responsibility to discourage, as much as possible, overplanting in 1949, and this bill will do just that.

We realize that the bill on its face appears to work a hardship against the man in the new brushland areas of my distinguished colleague from Texas, Mr. LYLE. His problem is with regard to land upon which a single stalk of cotton has never been planted. It is new land. But already we have too much cotton land. That is the very thing we have tried so hard to get away from throughout the last 15 years. More and more cotton land does not solve cotton's problem of surplus production. It only aggravates the situation. On the other hand, the present law provides that 2 percent must be set aside for allotments to new land. I am sure that this or a similar provision will be retained in the new quota law, if one is written. Furthermore, under any program which might be hereafter adopted the great State of Texas will receive approximately 7,500,000 acres of cotton land, which is a third or more than will be allotted to all remaining cotton States. Based on a 7,500,000-acre allotment, 150,000 acres will be set aside in Texas for new land. I sincerely believe this will care for the new-land problem out there. I have a very high regard for my distinguished and able colleague from Texas. So do the other members of my committee. None of us would want to do him or his constituents the slightest injustice. We respect his opinions and views and I personally wish to give assurance that I will work with him on this problem, which I know is an important one to him.

Cotton faces a very sick economy. We are trying to do something about the situation before it is too late. We are compelled to view the situation in the light of what is best for all cotton growers, not just a few but all of them—whether they be old, new or would-be growers. Cotton's present position approaches that of 1937 when almost every grower in the belt planted cotton "up to his doorsteps" and produced a surplus which would never have been disposed of had the war not come on. We learned our lesson in 1937. At least, I thought we did. With the unexpected and most undesirable help of a war, cotton's economy has improved. But God forbid that we should ever again be forced to endure similar experiences.

This bill has the support of the Department of Agriculture, the American Farm Bureau, the National Grange, the Farmers Union, the cotton industry in general and cotton farmers in general. It is further supported by a unanimous vote of the Agriculture Committee. It is in the interest of the cotton farmer in general. If it were not, certainly someone on our committee would have dissented.

The cotton farmer is again at the cross roads. It will not profit him anything to repeat what happened in 1937. He can very easily produce another very large crop in 1949 but what will it profit him without a price? You can help him by passing this bill. By the bill, we simply ask you to eliminate 1949 acreage planted to cotton in determining allotments in future years should quotas be invoked. By so doing you will remove the incentive and the desire which now prevail to overplant in 1949 in order to have a larger historical base for determining future acreage allotments. The bill is short, simple, and treats all growers alike. You will be doing them a favor by voting "aye."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, this bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Agriculture. I think it is a bill which serves a useful purpose at this time. It is thought, and I think with good reason, that because of the possibility of cotton quotas and acreage allotments within another year or two, a great many farmers might be tempted to expand their acreage this year beyond what they otherwise would contemplate planting. It is a very natural thing to do. The purpose, of course, would be to insure that they have a base for future allotments and quotas which would be in line with that secured by their neighbors. The committee felt that in view of these considerations and the fact that it is not desirable to increase cotton acreage this year, that the bill should be passed. I do not see a need for any prolonged discussion of it, because it is a rather simple bill, easily explained, and easily understood. I shall, therefore, not take any further time.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GATHINGS].

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Chairman, I trust that this bill will be enacted into law. In the year 1948, cotton planting amounted to 23,000,000 acres of land. The testimony before our committee has been to the effect that there would be some 12 to 15 percent or more increase in planted acreage to cotton in the crop year 1949. That being the case, there would be an estimated 15,100,000 bales of cotton produced in 1949.

If this bill is enacted into law, it is believed by many that a large number of farmers who anticipate planting in 1949 would not do so because they would feel that it would not in any way give them a high base for their 1950 crop year and for the years ahead. To say the least, cotton farmers throughout the belt would probably reduce their cotton acreage in 1949 if this legislation is enacted.

In 1937 the cotton farmer was cut loose, free to plant as much as he saw fit to plant in acreage to cotton. As a result of that, there were produced in America in that year 19,000,000 bales of cotton. It took the cotton farmer almost 10 years and a world war to get rid of the surplus that accumulated as a result of such excessive planting.

This is a great psychological move, but speed is essential because of the fact that, as has been stated here in debate on the rule, they have already started planting cotton this year in the Rio Grande Valley. I hope and trust the bill will pass without a single vote against it.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GATHINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TACKETT. Should it become necessary to place a quota on cotton in 1950, what years would be used upon which to base the quota?

Mr. GATHINGS. That matter is now under most serious consideration. The Subcommittee on Cotton of the Committee on Agriculture is holding hearings at this time. It will be another few days before those hearings will be concluded. Then the committee will go into executive session and consider the years that will be placed in the base period for the 1950 crop year and the years ahead of 1950.

Mr. TACKETT. Is there a law in existence at this time which would govern such controls, should it become necessary to have controls? That is, would the 3 years prior to 1950, excluding 1949, be considered under the present law?

Mr. GATHINGS. It is going to be necessary to revamp that law, because under the law now on the statute books, the 1938 Triple A Act and the amendments thereto, the farmers could not plant less than 27,000,000 acres to cotton. If that were to happen, of course, the surplus would just be insurmountable. We would not know now just exactly how to answer the gentleman's question until the committee has concluded the hearings and has gone into executive session to determine the years that should be used.

Mr. TACKETT. Is it possible that the larger cotton farmers within the States of Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, and the other States that raise a considerable amount of cotton, could have foreseen the possibility of the enactment of this bill so as to give them a break under the controls by virtue of knowing that 1948 cotton-crop acreage would be used as a basis?

Mr. GATHINGS. I do not believe the gentleman should be disturbed. Nineteen hundred and forty-eight is a very good year to consider, because then it was wide open. The farmer could do what he wanted to do. He could plant or he could not plant. The man who is already established in the cotton business, who has his implements, his labor for cotton-production purposes, his seed, and is ready to go, of course, should be continued in the business of planting cotton.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, I merely wanted to state that the pending proposal to exclude the 1949 cotton acreage from future calculations comes to the House with the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, the recommendation of the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, and the National Farmers' Union. It was unanimously reported out by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN].

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Chairman, H. R. 128, as now presented to the House, has asked that the 1949 cotton crop not be used in computing cotton acreage allotments for any subsequent year. It is realized that one of the reasons for the initiation of this bill is that the growers will not feel obliged to plant all their land in cotton this year in order to assure themselves of a good cotton allotment on their land in future years, as the allotment would be based perhaps on several years' average. I think the purpose of the bill is a most commendable one, but I believe that the manner in which it tries to achieve its objective can result in serious inequities unless, in the final agricultural bill which is presented to Congress, allowances are made to provide fair allotments to these men who have not planted cotton before. If this bill becomes the law without this session of Congress and the final agricultural bill making allowances for these new cotton farmers, then these men who have recently cleared and put into use for production lands of Texas would be seriously penalized in future years. It is difficult to evaluate the full significance of this bill at this time without knowing on what basis future quotas will be based. I have been told by members of the Agriculture Committee that efforts will be made to see that these new cotton farms receive equitable allotments, and if such is done, then the present bill would be beneficial in discouraging a large crop this year. We already have almost a 6,000,000,000-bale surplus carry-over from last year.

At the encouragement and recommendation of the United States Government many returning war veterans of south Texas have taken lands of very low economic value and at a high cost have cleared the brush and put them into cultivation to grow cotton and feed crops. On return from the service, it took some time for these young men to become adjusted, to establish themselves, and then, after they had purchased this land, it was a long and arduous process clearing off mesquite and ebony trees to put it into shape where it was suitable for cotton growing. Many of them have just accomplished this in the past year, and 1949 will be the first cotton crop they have planted on this land. Their improvement of this land has taken property that was on the tax rolls at values of $2 and $3 and increased their valuations tremendously, resulting in immense benefit to the counties and the State of Texas. Many of these young men have incurred heavy debts and mortgages so they were able to purchase this land. Much of this land has been cleared by their own labor in order that they might provide themselves with an agricultural livelihood and help produce materials and food for a hungry world. Thousands of tenants and small farmers have also made this move, now to see this dry land with its limited uses further restricted by law which would seriously curtail any cotton quota that they might obtain, say in the year 1950.

Probably an attempt will be made to, in part, take care of these new farms by setting aside for example a 2 percent of the Nation's quota for such new lands, and this 2 percent to be allocated by the county bureaus, but because of the large number of acres that have been cleared in south Texas, west Texas, and many of the Western States, I believe that this 2 percent will be inadequate.

It is my hope that this percentage will be increased to 3 or 4 percent, which would take relatively little away from the quotas of the old cotton growers but would greatly increase the quotas for new cotton farmers. If the Agriculture Committee is determined to keep this at a figure of 2 percent, then I think that this percentage, and its allocation, should be administered from Washington, and that those States in the Southeast who do not use their full part of the 2 percent, having insufficient new lands, that the balance of their 2 percent will be applied to States such as Texas and other Western States where they will probably have more than 2 percent set aside for new lands. Unless this is done, new farms could easily obtain quotas far below the county average.

As further assistance in making a fair distribution of the cotton quota, I believe a 10 percent of the State quota should be set aside in each State to be administered by a State agency as a bank to be given to those counties which have increased their production and taking it from those counties which have decreased their production, thereby giving consideration to trends in cotton planting. Many counties of central and east Texas have decreased their cotton planting and would perhaps receive higher quotas than the land that they were actually planting to cotton and this quota could be distributed to counties such as we have in the fifteenth district who have materially increased their planting to cotton.

I believe consideration should be given to States which find that they can more efficiently and economically produce cotton and who have been increasing their acreage. Otherwise, you will find that anything similar to our old system of quotas will perpetuate inefficient and uneconomical growth of cotton in some States in the Union at the expense of those areas which can produce it at less cost and more efficiently. The objective of the Government should be to encourage these people who cannot efficiently and economically produce cotton to gradually turn to other crops to which they are more adapted.

It is not my purpose to see these people economically dislocated and their quotas drastically slashed, but I definitely believe that the eventual net decrease in cotton quotas, as set by the Government to maintain an economical price support, should be the same for all areas, regardless of whether they are old or new cotton-producing areas.

If 1949 is not allowed in future cotton quotas and the cotton-quota law, as yet to be drafted, does not provide a means of giving them quotas substantially up to the county average, it will bankrupt a number of men, including many World War II veterans who are planting new lands to cotton this year for the first time, since they would have their cotton allotment appreciably decreased in 1950. Much of this new land cannot be profitably farmed unless a large percentage of it is planted to cotton. Passage of the bill in its present form could result in favoritism for the benefit of cotton-growing States at the expense of those veterans who were fighting overseas and have only recently returned to enter farming.

I make this statement as a word of caution and a request that if the bill is adopted in its present form that then, certainly, some means should be set up along the lines I have suggested to protect those States and veterans who have materially increased their cotton acreage.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, there are no further requests for time.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of title III of the Agriculture Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, or of any other law, State, county, and farm acreage allotments for cotton for any year after 1949 shall be computed without regard to acreage planted to cotton in 1949.

With the following committee amendment:

That, notwithstanding the provisions of title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, or of any other law, State, county, and farm acreage allotments and yields for cotton for any year after 1949 shall be computed without regard to yields or to the acreage planted to cotton in 1949: Provided, That any farm on which cotton was not planted in 1947 or 1948 (or regarded as planted in 1947 under Public Law 12, 79th Cong., because of the production of war crops or of serving in the armed forces of the United States) shall be regarded as having a 1948 planted acreage equal to the 1942 farm acreage allotment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MONRONEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 128) to provide that acreage planted to cotton in 1949 shall not be used in computing cotton-acreage allotments for any subsequent year, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 22 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of 10 Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a study and investigation of the problems of small business, existing, arising, or that may arise, with particular reference to (1) whether the potentialities of small business are being adequately developed and, if not, what factors have hindered and are hindering the normal operation of established small business and/or its development and enterprise; (2) whether agencies, departments of the Government or Government owned or controlled corporations are properly, adequately, or equitably serving the needs of small business; (3) whether small business is being treated fairly and the public welfare properly and justly served through the allotments of valuable materials in which there are shortages, in the granting of priorities or preferences in the use, sales, or purchase of said materials; and (4) the need for a sound program for the solution of the postwar problems of small business.

The committee may from time to time submit to the House such preliminary reports as it deems advisable; and prior to the close of the present Congress shall submit to the House its final report on the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable. Any report submitted when the House is not in session may be filed with the Clerk of the House.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to borrow from Government departments and agencies such special assistants, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any properly designated chairman of a subcommittee thereof, or any member designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 6, insert the words "The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is recognized.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I shall yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. Speaker, this resolution reestablishes a select committee that has rendered valuable services in the past to the country and to the House. In view of the service rendered and the need for legislation to protect, safeguard, and aid small business, the Speaker and the minority leader entered into an agreement which is in conformity with the amended resolution and provides for a select committee of nine members.

The Small Business Committee has been in existence since 1941 or 1942. During these years they have penetrated many, many matters which tend to protect small business from being completely eliminated and absorbed by the various large industrial organizations. I was pleased with the work which that committee rendered 4 or 5 years ago, which, due to its splendid investigation, resulted in action by the Department of Justice against one of those large chain stores, the Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., which was found guilty of violating the law to the disadvantage of the small-business men by receiving rebates and discounts that were not forthcoming to the small-business men and which inured to the benefit of them. What applies to that concern applies to many of the other chain stores and the mail-order houses. Between those two groups the small-business man is gradually being forced out of existence.

This committee has been endeavoring to the best of its ability to bring about the elimination of the special favors that are granted to and are taken advantage of by these large corporations and industrialists, of course mainly controlled from Wall Street, to the disadvantage of local people and the small-business men. I am therefore in favor of this resolution to create this committee. I am in favor of having it continue the splendid work it started years ago. It should not hesitate for one moment to investigate the biggest and most powerful violators of decency and justice; and I hope it will do so. As you have observed and are aware, this committee threw the light of publicity on the gray market in steel. I do not know why they call it gray because it has been and is the blackest of all black markets that I know of. The steel trust for nearly 2 years, notwithstanding the efforts of the committee and Congress to insure fair distribution of raw materials, allocated steel only to their favored few, to the disadvantage of the small manufacturer, thereby forcing many of them out of business. Not only that, but where a small manufacturer had contracts to fulfill and was obliged to obtain steel, he was held up by the black marketeers controlled by the steel trust to such extent that he was obliged to pay from $250 to $275 a ton for steel that originally sold for only $60 or $75 a ton. I have heard of cases where they were obliged to pay $300 a ton. Outrageous. And what applies to the steel trust and steel companies has been practiced by many other manufacturers. I hope that such practices will be prevented in the future and that this committee, though it has no legislative power, will shortly recommend legislation that will stop these abuses that are destroying the independent and small merchant and businessmen in our Nation.

I am of the opinion that notwithstanding the terrific load of these mail-order houses and the chain stores that control nearly 80 percent of the business, whose profits have been tremendous, and who have accumulated great surpluses in their Wall Street vaults and banks, that this committee will not hesitate to continue to ferret out abuses on the part of these men and corporations; that it will recommend legislation and that the Congress will pass such legislation as will safeguard the interests of the little fellow, the small country merchant. Just look at it. These big houses have hundreds, yes, thousands of stores. They spend millions of dollars a year for advertising in all the magazines and newspapers. A small business having one store or two stores cannot compete with them. We have aided and still are aiding these mail-order houses to the tune of nearly $200,000,000 a year by absorbing the actual cost of mail transportation on their catalogs and the cost of mail transportation of newspapers and magazines in which they advertise.

I have urged legislation which would force these people to pay the fair mailing cost of their catalogs and other advertising in these magazines. So far I have not succeeded in my efforts, but I shall not give up. I shall continue. I am going to ask the committee, in which I have confidence, to see to it that the contribution on the part of the Government to these corporations, an avaricious group, ceases immediately and that we make them pay for the transportation of their catalogs, magazines, and newspapers, and thereby, to some extent at least, protect the little fellows all over the Nation. This should be done without undue delay because, as it is, every year thousands of these small and independent businessmen are being driven out of business because of these concerns and because the big Steel Trust and other raw-material dealers or producers play favorites and refuse to furnish the little manufacturer raw materials, allocating them to a favored few to the disadvantage of the many little fellows.

Mr. Speaker, I favor the pending resolution. It has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Members of the House who have been here some time know, as an individual, I have long had a great and active interest in the problems of small business. It is an interest that arises very naturally, I think, from the desire of all right-thinking people in the country to preserve and protect the interests of small business—recognizing, as we do, the importance of small business in the economic and industrial structure of our country.

I hope my friends on the other side of the aisle will indulge me when I say that my personal interest and the interest of those on our side of the aisle were expressed in the early fall of 1941 when, under the leadership of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], who is now our minority leader, we created a small-business committee made up of members on our side of the aisle. This committee of 20 was charged with the responsibility of doing what it could to protect and promote the interests of small business. I was very proud to be named chairman of that committee.

I well recall some of the meetings we had in Indianapolis, Ind., Columbus, Ohio, New York State, and various other places, where we heard from the small-business people themselves something of their problems and their recommendations as to what they thought the Government might do. At that time the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], who has himself had a long-time interest in the problems of small business, and being then in the majority party, as he is today, introduced a resolution for the creation of a small-business committee. I joined with him in bringing about the adoption of that resolution. I argued for it on the floor. I was happy at its adoption. I was happy that thereupon the leadership on my side of the aisle appointed me to serve on that committee as the ranking Republican member.

I well recall those very difficult days when we were getting into the war effort and those of us who were familiar with the situation saw that the interests of small business were not being properly protected and promoted, and that for the maximum war effort the capacities of small business needed to be utilized. We saw the effect of the war effort on small business all across the land and we worked diligently and energetically, and I think with wisdom, to help solve those problems. I think the committee did contribute much to their solution.

In my experience on the committee—and I shall not take any issue with any of the things that have been said by my dear friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] who expressed here quite forcibly some contentions that he has about certain types of business organizations in the country—I have never prejudged any of them and I do not intend to prejudge them now. I do not think that it is necessary in order to protect and promote the interest of small business that anyone in a somewhat larger business needs to be destroyed just because he is big. Certainly it is well within the province of the Congress of the United States, charged, as we are, with promoting the best interests of the Nation as a whole, that we work along as best we can in the determination of all these problems and not engage in witch hunts, or in the promotion of any particular prejudice against any activity that any one of us might have, but rather as in a forum in which the small-business men of the country may make their voices heard and their influence felt. And then, of course, we should follow up that action with any sort of legislative action or advice to administrative agencies that might seem to be proper under the circumstances.

So, I am glad to add my voice today to those who urge favorable action on this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana has correctly stated the history of the Small Business Committee. The Small Business Committee was organized in the House about a week before Pearl Harbor in 1941. Very soon thereafter we realized the plight of small businesses in trying to get war contracts. A very few concerns were getting the contracts. At this time we have a huge national defense program going on. It is necessary that some agency of our Government be charged with the duty and the responsibility of seeing that small concerns are given a fair opportunity to obtain the contracts that they are capable of filling. That will be one of the objects of this committee, as I understand it.

Next, the sources of credit in this country are drying up. Small business cannot borrow money like it could have in the past to go into business initially or to extend or operate after going into business. Something should be done about that. Recommendations should be made and possibly laws should be passed.

Another reason this committee is needed is on account of scarce materials. When materials are scarce, the first concerns that are hurt are the small-business concerns. The big fellows can look after themselves, but the little fellows are the first to be hurt when materials are scarce.

The Small Business Committee during the war served a very good purpose in helping people a distance away from the Nation's Capital. The big people had their lobbyists here and their public-relations people to help them. They did not need any Small Business Committee, but the small-business man far removed from the Nation's Capital needed someone to appeal to to help him. He had that help in this committee during the past 8 years.

I believe the committee that is to be set up under this resolution, if it is adopted by the House of Representatives, and I hope it is, should, as one of the first things it does, try to coordinate the different agencies of our Government having to do with small business, for instance, the Department of Justice, the Federal Trade Commission, the Department of Commerce, the Small Business Division of the National Security Resources Board, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and other agencies. There is a lot of valuable information in these different agencies, and we can get valuable suggestions from them if we will only coordinate our efforts and work together; and I believe this committee should do that.

We should also make sure that the smaller concerns are protected against monopoly and unfair competition. If the laws are not sufficiently strong to safeguard small business in that respect, this committee should recommend the kind of legislation that this Congress should pass in order to give them the protection from monopoly and unfair practices to which they are entitled in a free country like ours under the private-enterprise system. We cannot have private enterprise and monopoly, too, so we must protect small business from monopoly.

Next, we must provide equality of opportunity for small-business men, independent merchants, and give them a fair chance to live and let live, not to get any unfair advantage over any others but to have a fair opportunity or equality of opportunity themselves.

REGULATION W

When I appeared before the Committee on Rules in support of this resolution the members of that committee asked me what I thought about regulation W. I told the committee very frankly that I felt that the matter should be gone into carefully to make sure that small businesses are not discriminated against and that the small man is not discriminated against by regulation W.

I presume you know what regulation W is. Congress passed a law to permit consumer-credit regulation to be administered by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. We did not contemplate that a harsh and rigid rule would be placed in effect immediately similar to what we had during the war. For that reason, no one seriously objected to that power being given, and I think power should be given that way, but I think it should be used discreetly and not abused.

Very much to my surprise and disappointment, very soon after the Board of Governors was given this power it imposed not exactly the same restrictions concerning automobiles, for instance, that we had during the war, but almost the same restrictions. During the war the purchaser of an automobile was required to pay one-third down in cash and the remainder over a period of 15 months. The regulation the Board of Governors put into effect just last fall, after getting this authority again in peacetime, was one-third down and the remainder over a period of 18 months—very little difference.

In the first place, I do not think much of regulation W. I think it is undemocratic.

I do not think we need it in a country such as ours right now, although I am willing for someone like the President—or some board—to have the power, say in an extreme case, or an emergency. But generally I am not in favor of it. It certainly is undemocratic according to the way I look at things. We have been trying to get the Board of Governors to change that regulation to at least give 24 months' time to the purchaser of an automobile. A young man now with a family wanting to get settled in a home is compelled to go out in the suburbs of a city or out in the country to obtain a home at a fair price. In that case an automobile is a must. After he buys a home, if he is required to pay for that automobile within 18 months, unless he makes $5,000 or more a year, it is just impossible for him to buy that automobile.

I do not feel as if that is exactly right. Furthermore, I think that character is the poor man's capital, and we should encourage that kind of capital. Character, if you please. When people have character, their credit is good and they are going to pay these bills and debts.

Why should some arbitrary rule or restriction prevent that man from purchasing an automobile which he needs in his business and must have in order to make a living for himself and family?

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. LYLE. One of the difficulties confronting small business as it appears to me is this matter of short-term capital. They want to go into business, they want to borrow money for a very short time. Under the tax structure on a short-term loan, they are not permitted to pay back the loan and pay their taxes and accumulate anything for operating expenses. Are you considering problems of that nature?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LYLE. They need to have made available to them longer term capital perhaps and larger basis over which they could pay their taxes so that they could accumulate some development capital.

Mr. PATMAN. I agree with the gentleman.

May I state that in compliance with the suggestion of the Committee on Rules I believe it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that we should go into regulation W. If I am a member of the committee and if I have any influence with the committee, I think it should be of the first order of business to try to get regulation W changed.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, I realize that with the approval of the Speaker of the House, and the approval of the majority and minority leaders, and the powerful Committee on Rules together with a large number here on the floor, that this resolution setting up a Committee on Small Business will undoubtedly pass.

I am a small-business man myself, and I recognize and realize the problems that small-business men have. I realize and recognize the splendid work that has been done by the distinguished gentleman from Texas, and the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, and others who have served on the Small Business Committee for a number of years.

The point I would like to make today is that in passing any special committee resolution, we are deviating from the proper, effective, and efficient organization of the committee structure of the House of Representatives.

I sincerely hope that with the passage of this resolution establishing one special committee that the Committee on Rules then will stand firm against this special committee process which saps, confuses, and confounds the carefully worked out jurisdiction of the regular standing committees of the House.

It is always easy to make a case for almost any kind of special committee, and particularly one where so many thousands of people are extremely interested in setting up a committee to deal with their particular problems. I am frank to admit that little business has many, many of these problems. But if we establish a small-business committee now, and next week we establish a newsprint committee, then the week following that the committee to investigate Federal communications, and so on, we then sap and tear down the jurisdiction of the standing committees of the House.

How much better would the organization of Congress be if we were to establish these matters as specialized jobs for subcommittees of the standing committees of the House. They have the power under the standing committees, not only to investigate and study the specialized problems, but they have the jurisdictional right to bring in corrective legislation and to do something about it. I sincerely hope that with the improved staffing of the standing committees and perhaps lessening the burden on the standing committees, that these specialized problems, such as small business and other requests that will be brought to us in the future, can be handled within the framework of our regular standing committee structure.

I wish to serve notice on the House that I will fight every single item for the establishment of special committees from this one on. I regret very much that the leadership has found it necessary to solve this problem by the establishment of a special committee here today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EBERHARTER). The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH].

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to urge the adoption of this resolution. Having had the privilege for a number of years of serving as a member of the select committees on small business which preceded this one, I think I can assure the membership of the House that those committees, as will this one, if created, have sought, in a completely nonpartisan, constructive way, to direct their attentions and energies and ability to the vast and numerous problems of small business.

I feel that in the adoption of this resolution we have an opportunity to effectuate the planks of both major political parties with respect to small business. It is with trepidation that I take issue with our distinguished Member the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY]. His monument that will live for generations after him, in the form of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, is assured. However, I cannot subscribe to his thinking that, having set up within that act the organization of the Congress, thereafter there should not be any select or special committees created. I submit that the Congress should organize itself to accommodate the public and its needs. A select committee on small business has been the only forum before which the small-business men, singly and organized, have been able to come and to receive a sympathetic and attentive hearing. This is not a legislative committee. It is, however, a funnel through which the problems facing small business may logically and concisely be presented to the proper standing committees.

Mr. Speaker, small business in this country needs such a committee, and so does this Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH] has expired.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, all over the United States small units of industry are folding up because they are running out of orders. The first thing this committee should do, and this committee is certainly in a position to do it, is to see that small-business units in this country which have plants ready to operate, staffs ready to work, employees—now being thrown off the pay roll—buildings, machinery, and machine tools tuned up, should be given a portion of these Government orders for the production of war goods. That is the first job this committee should do. I am going to support this resolution on the assumption that this committee will lose no time in approaching the proper officials to allocate these contracts to small industry, and see that the intent of Congress as set forth in the appropriation bills to finance this rearmament program are carried out, namely, that these orders shall be given to small industry, a part of them, and that the material be provided so that the orders may be filled after they are placed with small industries.

The charge is being made almost every day by the administration, from the President down, to the effect that private industry is not willing or cannot provide the production of the goods that this country needs. I challenge that statement and call upon the administration to use all of its powers to utilize those buildings, the machines, and the machine tools, and the workers who now stand ready but who are being thrown out of employment. All over the State of Michigan these small industries are closing up and there is no excuse for it, because the Government is going to have these goods produced anyway. Little business is entitled to a substantial amount of those contracts.

In my extension of remarks I shall set forth, in detail and specifically, how the operation of letting contracts is handled in Michigan and show how utterly impossible it is for the small companies to get a proper cut of this business.

We are moving into this rearmament program and the thing for us to do is to utilize, first, the machinery and the tools that we have before we further authorize the Government to go into a great governmental financing and construction program with funds provided by the taxpayers and bond buyers. Let private industry have a chance at this instead of permitting the machinery of Government, along with the cooperation of big industry, crowd out small business and get all of the contracts. The little man is entitled to a share. There is a job for this committee to do now and with its proper staff it can do this work and begin its work within 10 days after the passage of this resolution. I hope the chairman of the committee will look after that.

THE SITUATION IN MICHIGAN

We are now reentering military production. This production will have to be produced by facilities now existent and those to be placed in operating condition by (a) private industry or (b) the Federal Government.

There are those, from the President himself down, who argue that the Federal Government must provide funds for the building and erection of productive facilities and they use, in support of this must, that private industry cannot or will not do it.

What percentage of the total war goods for which orders are now being placed will be produced by private facilities, (a) so-called big industry, (b) so-called little industry?

The answer to the above question can be found in the almost impossibility of little industry obtaining a cut on this Federal Government business and here are the basic reasons why little industry which now stands ready with substantial capital, organizations, machinery in good repair, and an absence of business at this particular moment on their books, cannot fairly participate in the war orders. I shall give an illustration applicable to Michigan.

Company A, or a consolidated group of companies, A, B, C, D, and E, wish to acquire a Government contract. Insofar as they know, they must proceed along the following lines: Have prepared their calling card. This calling card is presented to the chief of the Detroit ordnance district, Colonel Cone, and in reply they are told, "They are not a registered company," due to the fact they are not in Dun & Bradstreet or Thomas' Register, but Detroit ordnance district will process their brochure putting them on the register as a subsidiary to some large manufacturer who is registered. In addition to above statement, the general procedures of the Detroit ordnance district to obtain competitive bids from manufacturing facilities is to examine Dun & Bradstreet or Thomas' Register and mail inquiry sheets to firms listed therein. Should any one of these manufacturers appear as 3A or 4A–1—by this, a company with financial capital running anywhere from $1,500,000 up to $3,000,000—they are eligible for receiving these bids. Consequently anyone having a net worth of $200,000 to $1,500,000 has not been contacted to send any competitive bids.

In connection with the National Emergency Act I think the RECORD will show there was a statement made by the President, and is believed by this speaker to be in writing: that there shall be no plant too small and none too large for the Department of Industrial Mobilization Plan to talk to. But specifically, in the case of the State of Michigan, industrial mobilization planners were only called upon to visit and survey 86 different manufacturing facilities. Initially, Detroit Ordnance District, Detroit, Mich., in helping the Munitions Board, so-called, prepared a manufacturers' facility register and only sent in 125 Form 59's—this form is used for the purpose of getting the name and address of the manufacturing facility on the alphabetical register which is in turn used by the Industrial Mobilization Planning Board in locating various manufacturing facilities so as to be able to talk to management and make a preliminary survey of the facilities—out of a potential estimated number of probably three to five thousand manufacturing firms in the State of Michigan. Not more than 86 manufacturing facilities were visited. A conference was held in Colonel Cone's office, Detroit, as to why more manufacturers were not on the facilities register and the question was raised as to the procedures used in getting these manufacturers on this particular alphabetical register. Did Lieutenant Colonel Cone and Mr. Deloria use or have for their use any World War II information as to who manufactured what and how much of, so as to arrive at a decent decision?

Lieutenant Colonel Cone stated there was no particular procedure used in deciding what manufacturers to turn in to the Munitions Board for them to register them as a manufacturing facility. The question was raised "what should be done with the uses of manufacturers outstanding in the State, perfectly competent of manufacturing various war items"? Lieutenant Colonel Cone replied in substance that at some later date, we would unofficially visit these manufacturing facilities and try tying them in somewhere as a possible facility for manufacturing. Later it was decided by the military department that in the case a manufacturer could not manufacture an end item—completed article—this particular manufacturer would not be contacted as a possible manufacturer.

It is thought a much better procedure would be to have the properly qualified personnel group the manufacturers in such a manner as to be able to comply with the requisite of the various military departments. To date no one has given such a procedure any consideration so far as practical results are concerned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

THE ARKANSAS PLAN FOR CIVIL-RIGHTS LEGISLATION

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein copies of bills which I have introduced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, today marks the passing of a full year since the President sent to the Congress a message on civil rights. I wish to discuss the significance of events related to this controversy beginning with the most noteworthy fact of all, namely, that not a one of the President's major recommendations has been approved. It seems to me that it is appropriate to take a second look both at the President's message and the report of the Commission on Civil Rights upon which the message was based. The proponents of the civil rights program would surely concede that failure to win congressional approval of a single item signifies that there are valid and substantial objections to that program. At the same time, as one who has joined generally in the resistance, I am prepared to concede that there are some meritorious features in the report. Furthermore, I concede that the continued agitation for these proposals should be convincing on one point, namely, that the problems do exist, but it should be just as clear that they do not yield to categorical solutions.

The Commission's report itself carries a misleading label. It deals not primarily with civil rights, although the proposals dealing with antilynching legislation are directed to the basic and fundamental right of every man to a trial according to the great traditions of our judicial system. This is a civil right, but the others deal with social aspirations, some of which are entirely proper, and are receiving consideration by the leadership of the respective States and communities.

Today I want to propose to the House that we consider compromises based upon those maximum concessions which each side is willing to make. I do not expect any Member to abandon principles, but I would be less than frank with you if I did not urge in specific terms that this is a compromise, that it springs from a conviction entertained by many of us that the controversy is divisive, that it tends to weaken the Nation in an hour when the need for cooperation and unity is great.

Southern representatives have been the most prominent ones in opposing this proposed legislation. Perhaps our reaction has been too emotional. Perhaps we have been inaccurate in some of our judgments. I note, for example, that on the question of segregation views sometimes attributed to the President are not contained in his message at all and we may not have been meticulous in distinguishing his message from contents of the Commission report. I am not pleading that our case as presented to this date has been a perfect one and I assume my own share of the responsibility for these deficiencies. I would be glad to recall some of my own inaccurate statements but I can assure the House now that having read and studied not only the message but the report itself I am prepared to apply a more rigid standard to my presentation. I am aware of the occasional misunderstanding of an approach of this kind. That is, the presentation of a southern point of view. I do not mean to offend but because the South lives in such proximity to the problem of our largest and most important racial minority—certainly the most important when civil rights issues of this type are considered—I believe it is entirely fair and proper to present as a background of my own thinking the traditional Southern viewpoint. Yet I am just as sure that the answer we should seek is not the conventional Southern answer nor, indeed, the non-Southern answer. We seek and must find the right answer.

If an answer to the difficult problem involved in the proposals is found we must study the problem in sections. It is regrettable that the recommendations have been submitted as one proposal—impinging as they do upon an infinite variety of human relations and involving widely different legal questions.

The South does not ask any exemptions from a statute soundly conceived and based upon judicial principles applying to our national community of 145,000,000 people. Furthermore, we have no intention of disregarding the legitimate rights of our minority citizens, and we deny that our opposition to some of the proposals contained in the civil rights report is due to an uncharitable attitude toward the Negro race or any other race. This is not the time nor place to speak as we of the majority group often like to speak; namely, of the happy relationship that exists generally in the South between colored and white groups. But one reason for our warnings is the obvious deterioration of the condition of mutual respect and cooperation which has resulted from political agitation.

The civil rights report, stripped of features not related to sectional and intergroup differences, contains four controversial matters: Segregation, poll-tax repeal, antilynching legislation, and the FEPC. Let me speak of these in order.

It is my opinion that congressional action is not necessary in order to achieve the President's objective as to nonsegregation in interstate travel as outlined in his message, although he probably had in mind some clarification and minor extensions of Federal policy based upon the Supreme Court decision invalidating a Virginia statute requiring segregation of passengers. The Supreme Court in effect sustained a nonsegregation policy for common carriers in all interstate travel. The nonsegregation aspects of civil rights discussions have doubtless grown out of language in the report of the President's Commission, intimating that steps should be taken to outlaw segregation policies as now generally enforced in many States. Certain statements in the report justify the fears of those who are concerned with avoiding friction and upheavals in thousands of communities where the races are accustomed to existing patterns of life.

It would help a lot for proponents of civil rights legislation to renounce any purpose of projecting Federal authority into purely local situations, particularly where such authority might be exercised to discard the existing relationships to which we are conditioned. On these issues, there is not an open mind. Everyone who knows anything at all about group relations knows that to invoke the power of law for social intermingling would meet the stiffest resistance and the only result of an attempt by Federal action to change the thinking of our people on this score—and I include Negroes as well as white persons—would be to destroy the dignity and prestige of Federal law. Surely, we learned from our experience with Federal prohibition that some social and individual habits and attitudes defy Federal regimentation. It is well to be frank on this score. Not even the most liberal of Southerners has any other thought, if wisdom and experience direct his thinking at all. I use the words "social intermingling" rather than "social equality" because this phrase more accurately expresses the basis for the customs of our region. Present patterns are maintained with personal good will and without preventing the necessary and desirable relations which interracial groups must maintain for the progress of both races.

If we could agree, Mr. Speaker, that no legislation should be adopted on the subject of segregation, it would be the first step in a proper compromise.

Now let us look at the poll tax. Here, I think, we of the poll tax States should give ground. We will not withdraw our objections to a statutory repeal by Congress, but I do concede that the rest of the country has concluded that as a matter of policy, the payment of a poll tax should not be required for voting in our elections. I do not agree with this judgment. I mean by that that while I do not like the tax, I think it is a reasonable exercise of States' rights and I do not think that there is any substantial impairment of citizen rights to vote. It is a policy that might well be left to the determination of the respective States. This is my own judgment—I am not arguing it. I have heretofore presented it in the debates in the House, but I realize that we have not won many adherents and that the rest of the country wants the seven States retaining the tax to get rid of it.

But repeal should be by constitutional methods. The payment of a poll tax as a voting qualification is permitted under the provisions of section 2, article 1, of the Federal Constitution, and is a matter solely for the States to determine. It is asserted, however, that it is an impairment—not a qualification—but it is clear from more than one decision that the Supreme Court of the United States does not consider the poll tax as constituting an impairment. Nothing less than a constitutional amendment can accomplish in a legal and proper way what the adherents of poll-tax repeal have in mind, but if the constitutional amendment is offered—if statutory repeal is abandoned—I think there will be no trouble at all in inducing the people of the poll-tax States to accept defeat gracefully.

The two most difficult aspects of the civil-rights controversy are the antilynching proposal and the so-called fair-employment practices plan.

The lynching evil has been virtually extinguished. It is not a national problem. We agree, of course, with the authors of the Commission report that one lynching is too many, but lynchings are so rare and the other problems of criminal law enforcement so tremendous that the agitation over this particular question hardly seems fitted to the conditions of 1949.

To advance their cause, the proponents of civil rights have invoked words that have a rich meaning in American life—justice, democracy, equality, opportunity—and yet the proposed application of these concepts is not only vague and unconvincing but, if implemented by Federal law, would actually obstruct the realization of many of these great principles. In grounding their appeal for antilynch legislation upon the guaranties of our judicial system, however, the proponents have some good arguments. In the realm of economics, the references to equality seem out of place since individuals are not equal in productiveness, but in the realm of law and in the quest for justice there is an authentic ring about the claim of equality. One would have to know something of the abuses of Federal intervention in State and local affairs wherever race relations have been involved to understand fully why the invasion of judicial functions reserved to the States and communities is resented. This is not legalistic and it is not due to any indifference to the terrible evil of mob violence. I know from actual experience. I have lived in communities where lynchings have occured, first as a boy 40 years ago and as a young man in another community about 25 years ago. I have had an opportunity to observe the aftermath of mob violence. Every sensitive person could feel the pall of anxiety and fears. Residents of States that have experienced lynchings know enough about this to verify our principal point that lynchings are committed by lawless people and are in such violent conflict with our ideals that gradually the processes of law have been fortified and violence put down. The passage of a Federal law would have little if any effect, in my opinion, on the continuing struggle to eliminate the evil altogether. The final crushing out of mob violence, the depriving of persons suspected of crimes of the precious right of a trial will not be accelerated by a Federal statute. Nevertheless, I can see the basis for arguments that have been advanced by the President's Commission. There are many people in Southern States who recognize the soundness of some of these arguments.

I have written to a number of newspaper editors in the South who, as a group, are generally alert to social problems and free from prejudice and political considerations. I have been impressed by what some of these editors have said about working out, if possible, a Federal statute that would strengthen the laws against this evil without creating counter-influences that would retard the movement to eliminate it altogether. I refer, for example, to the distinguished editor of the Louisville Courier Journal, Mark Ethridge, formerly of Georgia, widely known and widely respected. Mark Ethridge writes me as follows:

Our failure to have a national policy on lynching affects us most adversely all over the world. The Russians use it with great effect. I personally can't see any excuse we can make to ourselves for not having a national policy on it and for not making prosecution the business of the Federal Government where State law enforcement breaks down. Don't you think it's anachronistic that we are willing to legislate about motor-vehicle stealing, about kidnaping, and about crossing State lines with a woman for immoral purposes, and yet as a Nation we cannot bring ourselves to say that the right to life is sacred enough that it ought to be protected by the Federal Government? I think a declaration by the National Government in the form of effective legislation would have tremendous effect on people all over the world. It's something we owe ourselves in good conscience, but beyond that we do owe it to the world as its leader.

One does not have to agree with this point of view to recognize the fairness and the social vision of the author and the relevancy of his comment. The question of lynching laws tends to become altogether a moot question, but since the whole question enters so substantially into the civil rights controversy I recognize reasons quite outside the practical considerations of law enforcement for a declaration by the Congress. The absence of such a declaration may be misunderstood abroad. If by yielding on this point for the purpose of presenting a solid front to the nondemocratic world we can symbolize our devotion to the ideal of "equality under law," I, for one, would be glad to attempt to work out such a declaration.

I do not like to begin with the proposition that racial groups in other parts of the world feeling a kinship with certain minority groups in America are imposing unfavorable judgments upon us or that because the Communists abroad are exploiting imperfections in our American social structure, we must legislate. It is true, of course, that the Communists are exploiting isolated incidents, but our emphasis should be on the fact that the harmony which prevails among the races here is much greater than that in any country with a comparable situation. The rights and privileges accorded the racial minorities are so much greater here than in any other part of the world that I regard the argument as to anti-Communist strategy as secondary. I do, however, see value in assurances to members of minority groups in the United States that every available power will be extended to protect all civil rights. Consequently, if it can be done constitutionally, and I am convinced that it can, and if a proposed statute carrying the declaration I speak of can be so phrased as to leave unimpaired the primary responsibility of the States themselves to deal with the evil complained of, I see no reason why we should not grant to the racial minority in this instance the Federal buttress they regard as essential.

Here is how I think it can be done. Add to chapter 13, relating to crimes involving civil rights, of title 18 of the United States Code, a simple statute making lynching a Federal crime, but avoid vagueness in defining the crime so that only a person who knowingly participates in a lynch mob shall be subject to the penalty. Leave out all references to property, limit the jurisdiction to offenses involving violence upon an individual either in the custody of a peace officer or suspected of a criminal offense, and require the Government to show that such violence was for the purpose or consequence of taking the life of such individual. If such violence results in the person's death, then the motive is immaterial. Otherwise, violence to become a Federal offense must be committed for the purpose of taking the person's life. This will avoid bringing gang fights and rioting under Federal jurisdiction. The extensive hearings by the Judiciary Committee of previous Congresses should be convincing on the point that the Federal Government should not be involved in minor disturbances associated with race antagonism. Leave out of the Federal statute all penalties upon the innocent people living in the locality where the crime occurs. Stripped of these extraneous matters, a statute would provide assurances that the Federal Government will be concerned with the essential guaranties of organic law.

And finally, Mr. Speaker, in order to project Federal authority into only those situations where State instrumentalities are not functioning, I would add to the statute a limitation that the Government shall not have jurisdiction of an offense in States authorizing the attorney general or the governor or an attorney acting under the direction of the governor to direct prosecutions for lynching and authorizing the State authorities to conduct such prosecutions in a local government subdivision other than that in which the offense was committed. If any State agrees to exercise its sovereignty to this extent by moving into a vacuum that has been permitted to exist in areas where pressures and fears in a decentralized judicial system have prevented effective prosecution, then that State will be free from any interference by the United States authorities. In States having this kind of statute the Federal courts should not be given authority to institute proceedings unless the Government could show that the prosecution has been impaired by willful failure of the attorney general of the State or the governor to exercise authority with respect thereto, and, if sufficient time has elapsed since the offense was committed, to enable the State law-enforcement officer to begin the prosecution. Thus, we would be able to say to any State complaining of Federal intervention in this type of offense that if intervention shall become intolerable, all that the people of that State would have to do would be to adopt the statute as described.

Mr. Speaker, this represents some research and I have consulted with many students of the problem in an effort to work out a sound approach, one that can be defended. In previous debates on the subject we have had presented only the question of a simple Federal declaration. Under such statutes, it would be possible for the Attorney General of the United States to become involved in local situations no matter how bona fide the local prosecution. That should not be permitted by the Congress. Its political implications are apparent, and I will not dwell upon them. On the other hand, my suggestion does not impair our time-honored provisions for State responsibility in criminal prosecution. It simply provides for a criterion in determining whether or not Federal action is justified by reason of failure of the States to act. This could in all probability be administratively achieved anyway but there is every reason in this instance for Congress laying down the limitations upon action by the Federal Department of Justice.

Finally, there is the recommendation of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission, embodying penalty provisions and giving Federal authorities power to enforce regulations, invading as no statute in our history has attempted to do, the intimate relations that are inherent in our free society. There are basic and fundamental objections to this type of legislation and the objections transcend all racial or sectional considerations. The Congress cannot afford to take this step toward statism, regardless of the purposes back of the proposal. The good faith of the proponents is not questioned. But this is a principle in government which cannot be compromised.

Considering, however, the problem of discrimination, to the extent that it exists, there is a basis for action that does not involve compromise of principle—action that involves no legal sanctions, but a legitimate exercise of governmental powers in the field of education and human relations. Patterns are already established in the Department of Labor. We may perhaps do as much for members of a minority suffering from discrimination in employment as we have done for physically handicapped workers, whose condition has been greatly improved without breaching the principles of our economic system. I see no objection to the creation of a division within the Department of Labor, operating under congressional mandate, to counsel with management and labor for the elimination of discrimination and to work toward wider employment opportunities for all groups. In previous discussions of the problem, I have commended the wartime FEPC for its handling of the Sun Oil Co. case, in which a satisfactory adjustment of grievance of Negro workers was reached without imposing penalties or threatening prosecution.

Some of the complaints are understandable. I think I can illustrate by referring to a situation that probably has been corrected. It involves a Negro mechanic—a skilled instructor of apprentices in a certain plant, the location of which is not important to this discussion. It was the mechanic's duty to train young white workers who came into the plant. He must have done a good job, because having completed their instruction, the trainees moved immediately into assembly line jobs and began to receive more than the instructor, although everything they knew about their job had been acquired from him. We do not have to have a coercive law to become sensitive to an injustice of that kind. But I submit to the Congress that it would be quite in order for a Federal division to counsel for the correction of such a grievance and this without retreating from our insistence that nongovernmental procedures are far more effective in the long run in working out such maladjustments.

There is nothing wrong with the contention often advanced by proponents that there should be equal pay for equal performance. It is hard enough, however, to achieve this ideal, for example, for certain feminine workers and handicapped workers, and if we should invoke the great instrumentalities of the Federal Government for situations involving indefinable elements such as race prejudice and religious preferences, the powers of the Federal Government will have been prostituted. Equality of opportunity is an ideal to be cherished and the pursuit of the ideal should continually engage us, but it is better to leave every man free to think himself and his group superior and be wrong than as a matter of law proclaim him or his group to be the equal of others in economic activities.

In a few days we will celebrate the birthday of the Great Emancipator. Surely Abraham Lincoln would not be accused of race prejudice, yet in his Peoria speech on October 16, 1854, he said in discussing the slavery question and proposals based upon certain equality concepts:

> My own feelings will not admit of this and if mine would, we well know that a great mass of the whites will not. Whether this feeling accords with justice and sound judgment is not the sole question, if indeed it is any part of it. A universal feeling, whether well or ill-founded, cannot be safely disregarded.

In my opinion, no utterance of Lincoln's is more timely in its application to the disregard of the thinking of the people.

In closing let me quote Mark Ethridge again, having indicated from his statement on antilynching that he does not discard the civil rights program in its entirety. On the FEPC case, however, he is emphatic, and Mark Ethridge knows this subject, for he was one of the policy makers of the wartime fair-employment program.

> If anything at all is to be done about FEPC, it ought to be put as a minor section in the Labor Department. It ought not, however, to have any coercive powers. It would be, therefore, very largely an information section which might provide manufacturers and others with information, and this information as to the experiences of States in handling the problem will be valuable all over the country.

It appears, Mr. Speaker, that a majority of the people who are familiar with this problem are opposed to a permanent FEPC.

In the interest of harmony and economic justice to all, the civil rights controversy should be settled and I believe this can be achieved without sacrifice of principle by either side by, first, limiting Federal nonsegregation policies to interstate movements; second, repeal by constitutional amendment of poll tax requirements for voting; third, a modified antilynching bill leaving primary responsibility with the States; and, fourth, abandoning all proposals for coercion in employment but establishing a counseling service to work for nondiscrimination in industry.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. DEANE. As a southerner I certainly appreciate the attitude expressed by the gentleman from Arkansas.

May I make this observation. Perhaps undue criticism has been lodged against one member of the President's Commission from North Carolina. He does not need any defense by me. I refer to President Frank Porter Graham, of the University of North Carolina. I do not need to speak for Dr. Graham and neither do I know what may have been in his mind as a member of the President's Commission. The chances are that he did not agree with the entire report, but from time to time I have heard statements made on the House floor which perhaps have been most unfair to this great southerner, this great liberal.

I believe that in the not distant future the liberal movement in this country is going to stem from the southern part of our great country.

Going back to Dr. Graham, I am sure we noticed in the press of Saturday night, I believe it was, the award to him of the Sidney Hillman trophy for outstanding meritorious service. One speaker in referring to Dr. Graham, stated:

> He has never asked, "Is it safe?" His only concern has been, "Is it right?"

I believe that is the key thought that we as southerners must face as we come to grips with this serious legislation.

Upon the scroll awarded to Dr. Graham I note these lines so characteristic of this distinguished gentleman:

> Frank Porter Graham has earned the affection and regard of all those who love freedom and justice. Where racial differences have been used as an excuse for discrimination and oppression, he has exemplified a brotherly understanding. Where economic greed has enriched the few while impoverishing the many, he has championed the cause of the people. Where temporary expediency and social responsibility have made conflicting demands upon him, he has dared to serve the common good.
> To him the test of a community is the condition of the citizens who compose it and the test of a citizen lies in his capacity to quicken the conscience of his community.

On Monday, January 31, I inserted in the RECORD an outstanding editorial, The Task of the South, from the pen of Jonathan Daniels, the brilliant editor of the Raleigh News and Observer. The Members are invited to read this editorial, which in a most forceful way comes to grips with this subject of civil rights.

Of further interest is the fact that this editorial received first-place award in the best editorial division, as voted by the North Carolina Newspaper Institute, during the past week.

As indicated by the gentleman from Arkansas, it is to be hoped that we can honestly come to grips with this perplexing subject. We cannot evade the issue.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I appreciate the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina, whom I admire very much.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I would like to compliment the gentleman from Arkansas for his very illuminating discussion of a very difficult and perplexing problem. In my own district I may say that perhaps we are not confronted with the difficulties which exist in some other parts of the country. Recognizing, however, that this is an acute and difficult situation which must be met, I appreciate all the more the proposals made by the gentleman from Arkansas.

I would like to ask the gentleman if he will elucidate a little further upon this advisory proposal which he suggests in connection with the fair employment practices matter. I am not clear what he has in mind.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I may say in answer to the question in reference to the nonpenalty FEPC that in certain measure it follows a suggestion of Senator TAFT, of Ohio, who said in the early days of the discussion that the only proper way to approach the problem would be through a nonpenalty provision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, if it is not inconvenient to those having special orders following, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 10 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have the next 10 minutes and I will be very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I appreciate that very much.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I think the gentleman is entitled to the attention of every Member of the House for the statement he has made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I appreciate the comment of the gentleman from Michigan very much.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I would like to ask the gentleman one question, speaking of FEPC, which would bar discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color, or state of origin. I recall that several years ago when the bill was up I offered a similar bill but added to it that there should be no discrimination in one bill because of sex and in another bill, which was more important, because of membership or nonmembership in any union, but I could not find any vociferous advocate of FEPC who was willing to accept that amendment. Has the gentleman any explanation of why, as long as they wanted to do away with discrimination, they would not let the fellow who wanted to work go to work, in other words provide that there should be no discrimination against him?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I would like to say in that connection I think that it is a good illustration of the difficulty of invoking law in these matters of employment. It touches many of the fields which the gentleman from Michigan has mentioned. I think one of the best illustrations of the efficacy of the counseling service is what we have done with the handicapped workers. We have not said that any plant must employ a person who is handicapped. We have not said it must employ him, but we have demonstrated to a lot of employers that certain handicapped groups are exceptionally productive and efficient. It is quite impressive to study the statistics of productiveness of the handicapped workers. It is remarkable what they have done, often excelling people who are not handicapped. That is not done by forcing a nondiscrimination policy, but counseling by skilled Government employees who know how to bring people together and induce management to do things which, when convinced, they are glad to do.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PRIEST. Because of my personal association and very close friendship with the gentleman from Arkansas, I have been aware for quite some time of the very studious and serious effort he has been making in a study of this proposal. I think we can all appreciate the contribution the gentleman has made in attempting to approach this subject from a broad, unbiased, unprejudiced viewpoint, recognizing the fact that it does present a great many very serious problems; recognizing the fact, as he stated a few moments ago, that in this report there may be some proposals that were objectionable to various sections of the country, but in it also there is the problem, or series of problems, that we must face. The gentleman, I think, in his study and in his proposal has compromised and has made a very valuable contribution to our consideration of this problem. I compliment him on his very calm and unimpassioned presentation of the situation. In considering the problems presented in the President's message and in the so-called civil-rights program, if we can approach them and consider them in that same unimpassioned, calm, deliberate spirit in an effort to arrive at what is best for the country, I think we can make some very good progress.

I commend the gentleman from Arkansas for his presentation today.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I appreciate the gentleman's statement very much.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the gentleman's address today and I believe that it is a new approach to a very old problem. I remind him, however, that it is much older than a lot of people think. My father told me—and he lived in Newport, R. I.—that in various places in the East, when he was a young man, particularly in Massachusetts, they had signs posted which read, "Men wanted. No Irish need apply." But as time went on it seems the Irish have solved their own problem, and they are sending them now to legislative halls and putting them in high positions, because they sought to benefit themselves and work out their own salvation instead of looking for helpful legislation.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Well, they are doing the hiring themselves now, are they not?

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Knowing the gentleman from Arkansas as I do, I know of his deep sincerity in what he has had to say. I gather that his approach is on the theory that you can get the most good out of the civil rights proposal with the least emotional strain. Is that what the gentleman advocates?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I am very grateful to the gentleman for stating it just that way.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MONRONEY. I, too, would like to compliment the gentleman from Arkansas for the dispassionate way in which this issue has been discussed here today. If we can only go through this session with an open-minded attitude or willingness to try and resolve the differences, I think we will get a lot closer to solving this problem than we will by the heat of debate or incriminations that have often taken place on this floor in the past.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I am very grateful to the gentleman for that comment.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Speaker, I too wish the opportunity of congratulating my colleague from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS] upon his attitude in his efforts to compromise the serious and complex civil rights issues, even though he is willing to go much farther than I could either commit or permit myself.

The arguments usually advanced by the proponents and opponents of such legislation are comparable with the often expressed view that "to prominently promulgate the congregated diversions of an abstainer of intoxicants is to dissimilate his true character." For the northern and eastern proponents of such proposed legislation to pick out only the adverse racial relations and occurrences within the South, and for the opponents to, in turn, counteract with like charges against and within the North and East—each such group failing to give a true picture of the racial problem as it actually exists and its effects in each locality of our Nation, offers no solution.

However, I want to state that because of my inherent and fundamental belief in States' rights, I could not and would not go along with my colleague in his compromise efforts with such proposed Federal legislation.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I appreciate that very much.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BIEMILLER. I have always had a very high regard for the ability and the temperate approach of the gentleman from Arkansas. Today my regard goes even higher. I agree with those who have spoken ahead of me and said that if we can approach this civil rights question in a temperate and easy-mannered way we may reach a solution for it. The only point I should like to add at this moment is that I do not think any of us should assume that the civil rights question is peculiarly a problem of the South. I think it is a question that exists throughout the entire 48 States. That should never be lost sight of.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I am glad to have that comment. I appreciate the statement of the gentleman very much.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I realize that this country does need unity. I appreciate the fact that the gentleman from Arkansas has approached this matter not only from the attitude of a Congressman but as a Christian.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I am very grateful to all the Members for what they have said.

In yielding the floor I should like to say that my primary purpose was to undertake to state, in a dispassionate way, a position which I believe is typical of a vast number of our people, and, secondly, to give the House the benefit of the study I have made of the technical side. It will all be in the RECORD.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. Unfortunately I did not hear all the gentleman's discussion. I yield to no one in my very high appraisal of the gentleman from Arkansas. I know that whatever he said was said with the great sincerity that symbolizes his usual conduct upon the floor of this House. Since I did not have the benefit of hearing all the gentleman's address, may I ask if I am correct in assuming from what I have heard here on the floor that the gentleman thinks this is a matter that cannot well be solved by legislative edict, that it is a matter that will have to be worked out?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I think that reflects a portion of my comment. The problem will continue; no matter how skillful our craftsmanship, no matter how good our performance, there will be a continuing problem in the realm of human relations; but we can, however, since the Nation has focused attention upon the problem, find a degree of legislative authority that might be required. That is the thing I have pointed to in the desire to find the basis for a compromise. I think it is possible for us to find it. But I agree with the implication of the gentleman that it is not primarily a legislative problem.

I am very grateful to the House.

Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend, I include the following bill to permit the prosecution of lynching in Federal courts when the governor or attorney general of the State concerned lacks authority to direct the prosecution in State courts, or such prosecution is impaired by his refusal to do so:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 13 (relating to crimes involving civil rights) of title 18 of the United States Code is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"245. Lynching.

"Whoever willfully instigates, incites, organizes, aids, abets, or commits a lynching by any means whatsoever, or is knowingly a member of a lynch mob, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 20 years, or both.

"As used in this section:

"The term 'lynch mob' means any assemblage of ____ or more persons which, without authority of law, commits or attempts to commit violence upon the person of any individual in the custody of a peace officer or suspected of, charged with, or convicted of the commission of any criminal offense, with the purpose or consequence of taking the life of such individual.

"The term 'lynching' means any violence by a lynch mob upon the person of any such individual, with the purpose or consequence of taking the life of such individual."

SEC. 2. The table of contents of chapter 13 of title 18 of the United States Code is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof

"245. Lynching."

SEC. 3. Section 3231 (relating to jurisdiction of district courts) of title 18 of the United States Code is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, a district court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of an offense against section 245 of this title only if the court finds, with respect to each State in which the offense was committed, that—

"(1) the act or acts constituting the offense do not also constitute, under the laws of the State, an offense which may be prosecuted (A) by the attorney general of the State or an attorney acting under his direction or the direction of the governor of the State, and (B) in a local governmental subdivision other than that or those, as the case may be, in which it was committed; or

"(2) the prosecution of the offense against State law has been impaired by the willful failure or refusal of the attorney general of the State or the governor of the State to exercise his authority with respect to such prosecution; and a sufficient time has elapsed since the offense against section 245 was committed to enable State law-enforcement officers to begin the prosecution of the offense against State law."

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect on January 1, 1950.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. McCARTHY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LYLE). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

(Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include two newspaper articles.)

POLL TAX LEGISLATION

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, permit me to call your attention to two articles which show that it does not make very much difference what the Congress or any committee of the Congress may do. Neither the Congress nor its committees will ever get full public approval from a certain section of the press.

There will always be the knock, "Why did you do it? Why didn't you do it? You are a publicity seeker. You are a witch hunter. You are covering up for your political friends." For years the Dies committee and its successor have been pilloried by the Communists and their friends and, worse yet, by its friends because forsooth its hearings were unduly spectacular. Comes the new committee and announces that newsreel cameramen, photographers, radio, and television technicians are to be barred and all heck is to pay—read the news story from last night's Times-Herald—then get the editorial from this morning's issue. Here they are:

RED PROBE BANS PHOTOGRAPHERS—RADIO, TELEVISION ALSO BARRED AT HEARINGS

(By Ed Nellor)

Members of the House Un-American Activities Committee last night banned newsreel cameramen, photographers, and radio and television technicians from all future hearings—but reaction was loud, strong, and immediate.

In the unprecedented move, designed to add decorum to spy-hunting probes, only newspapermen were left untroubled—for the time being.

Representative WOOD, Democrat, of Georgia, new chairman of the committee, casually made the announcement following the organization session. He acted like a man whose scalp already was tingling.

The first response came from the House radio gallery, whose chairman, Albert L. Warner, quickly declared, "Radio has a fight on its hands."

His rallying cry was echoed by George M. Dorsey, head of the White House News Photographers Association, who represents both still and motion picture cameramen.

A visit to Attorney General Clark also was decided upon by the House Communist hunters and a three-man subcommittee was appointed to confer on mutual problems today.

Naming Representatives WALTER, Democrat, of Pennsylvania, HARRISON, Democrat, of Virginia, and NIXON, Republican, of California, for this chore presages another new approach—cooperation with the Justice Department. During the Eightieth Congress the committee and Clark swapped insults at regular intervals.

STAND UP OR FOLD UP

The newly organized House Committee on Un-American Activities took its first step toward oblivion Monday in barring radio recorders, newsreels, television and news photographers from future hearings.

Its members have clearly shown they do not have the guts to carry on the program that has grown to be the most important phase of congressional effort in these times, namely to put the finger on communism.

By cutting down on their own publicity weapons, the committee has left the field wide open for the Communists to go ahead spreading hate and poison with little if any fear of rebuttal from Congress.

SCARED OF THEIR JOB

What is the committee afraid of? Of course, congressional investigating committees are created to find out whether new legislation is needed. But every investigating committee learns, sooner or later, that recommendations of law are not worth a hoot unless the people understand the basis for the committee's proposals.

Hence, publicity is a vital weapon in lawmaking.

A classic example was the Senate Banking Committee's investigation of 1933. It was interesting and exciting stuff from the start, but rather complicated and tough to understand. The public was not getting it at all. But a circus press agent walked into the dignified realms of the Senate caucus room one day and planked a midget down on the knees of none other than J. P. Morgan.

HEADLINES BY EXPERTS

Did the committee pale and fold up and run for cover? It did not. Instead, it played for the headlines with every art and trick while it had the public's attention and the public in turn soon grabbed at every piece of information they could get concerning the committee's basic program.

For another example of how tough a congressional committee can get, we refer you to the case of Howard C. Hopson, another top financier.

It was 1935 and both Senate and House committees were investigating lobbies. Both wanted Hopson.

Hopson hid out. The Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, employees of the House, and the District police chased him all through this city, with newsreels and all the attendant agents of publicity invited along. The whole country was fascinated by the man hunt and learned much about lobbies, in consequence. Hopson got 5 years in the "jug" before it was all over.

The men who operated congressional committees in those days were ruthless, tough, and smart. They knew they had to be, to get anywhere.

And if the present members of the House Committee on Un-American Activities are scared before they start by the mere accusation that they're publicity seekers, they aren't tough or smart enough to ever do anything effective with such 10-minute eggs as the Reds.

The press has just been yelling—not the reporters so much as the caption writers and the editors, the columnists, and radio commentators—that the House Committee on Un-American Activities was all the time looking for publicity, using circus methods, and the moment the committee takes effective action to do away with what the critics said was an evil or a bad practice, they jump on the committee.

Permit me to comment on the subject which was discussed so ably and so fairly by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS] who just left the well of the House.

He is absolutely right about this poll-tax matter. I think I am the only Republican who since 1935 has consistently voted against that poll-tax legislation every time there has been a roll call.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I would like to advise the gentleman that others have voted against it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. All right; thanks. I stand corrected. Perhaps there are others.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that I have consistently voted against it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Thanks again. I find myself in better and better company all the time.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Minnesota both stated on the floor that they voted against the bill. Now the gentleman says that he is going to check. Does he mean that he is going to check whether they are making a true statement or not?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Oh, no. I am just going to check my own records and make the correction. Having been corrected by my distinguished colleagues I thank them and hasten to apologize and extend my congratulations to the gentlemen. Perhaps there are other Republicans present who wish to repeat their statements of adherence to the good old Constitution.

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. FELLOWS. I have spoken against that three times.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, here on the floor at this time are at least four of us who have not followed this political football on its unconstitutional meandering.

Mr. FELLOWS. After hearing the speeches today, I wonder if I am going to be left as the only Republican from Maine, and the only man against that proposition.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Against what?

Mr FELLOWS. I wonder after hearing these speeches if I am going to be left.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The citizens of Maine are sound-thinking individuals. In the past, they have recognized merit when it came their way, and I have not the slightest doubt that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FELLOWS] will be here as a plain-spoken, effective guardian of the Constitution long after some of those who think it is outmoded have left the national scene. That is my hope and the hope of the gentleman's colleagues.

If the advocates of this repeal of the poll-tax legislation really want to get that repealed, all they have to do is to submit the issue to the States as a constitutional amendment. Unless I am mistaken, when the women wanted to vote it took them something less than 2 years to have the States approve a constitutional amendment giving them what they demanded. The States could, and would, approve the amendment within a year. That is the way it should be done. Again, I may be mistaken, but in my opinion that is the only fair, legal way to do it.

Let us go next to the antilynching bill. Am I wrong? Did you gentlemen vote against the antilynching bill, or was I one of the few Republicans on that? How about it?

Mr. SHORT. I voted against the poll tax, against the antilynching bill, and FEPC, and I will vote that way again.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. As a primary opponent once said, "HOFFMAN is only 100-percent right. I am 300-percent right."

I said, "Yes; but we are figuring on a thousand-percent basis, so you are not so good, after all."

But my beloved colleague the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], to my sorrow the only Republican from that State—we have one too many Democrats in the White House—is, as usual, 100-percent right—perhaps his foresight and wisdom are the reason he is here.

Now, to get down to this antilynching bill, the purpose of that is good. I will vote for an antilynching bill, if in defending lynching they will include mob violence in labor disputes and strikes. For every case that they can point to where someone has been lynched in the South during the last year, I can cite two cases where someone has died from violence in a labor dispute in the North. For every case where someone was beaten in the South because of race or some crime committed there, other than in a labor dispute, I can cite 10, from sworn testimony, where someone was beaten in a labor dispute or strike in the North. For every home wrecked in the South by a mob I can cite a half-dozen instances where, during strikes, the homes of men, whose only offense was that they wanted to work for a livelihood and not join a union or pay union dues, were maliciously damaged by missiles being thrown in the windows or paint being thrown on porches or against the siding.

These advocates of the antilynch bill I do not believe can match this one, which happened on the 1st day of December in the adjoining county of Kalamazoo, in the Third Congressional District of Michigan, Mr. PAUL SHAFER'S district, where goon squads went in, two or three hundred of them, with CIO buttons on them, and some in the mob grabbed a young lady by the hair of her head this way and shoved her head that way, slapped her in the face, first on one side, then on the other, knocking her this way, then that way, or where they chased a fellow up to the second floor and three of them beat him until the bones on the left side of his face were broken, knocked him down and kicked him. I have a picture of a pool of blood two and one-half feet across on the floor, where they left him after they got through with him. Do these hot advocates of the antilynching bill want to include a provision against that kind of activity in the antilynching bill? Oh, no. The President is as silent as the grave on that one. Oh, no. If the CIO, his political ally—not the ally of you gentlemen but of the New Deal Party—wants to carry on with goon squads, that seems to be all right, we hear no demand that rioting-mob violence by labor goons be barred either by labor legislation or by an antilynching bill, but give the South a dose of Federal law, let the CIO, the Communists and the racketeers, by force and violence, make the nonunion stand and deliver. If we are to have an antilynch bill, let us have it cover mob violence of all kinds, even when it comes from a labor union in the North. Let us have it the country over.

Do you know in the packing house strike involving 20 States, mobs burned freight cars; obstructed railroad tracks? There is no Federal law against it, as far as Federal statutes go, unless it is a mail train. They can do all they want to along that line without violating a Federal law. Now, let us be fair about this. You can talk calmly about it, but I have to shout about it, because it really makes me out of patience when people who want to work cannot go to work and are discriminated against because they do not belong to a union and helpless are beaten, kicked, assailed in their homes—their property destroyed or damaged. Our hearings disclose that the rank and file of the unions do not approve of that—the paid professional goons do that.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Yes. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I hope the gentleman is not displeased with some of his colleagues on this side because we agree with him 100 percent on both the civil-rights program and on this mob violence.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, I am like a gentleman I admire very much, a great eradicator of gangsters, a most efficient administrator, Tom Dewey, who I hope some day will be the Senator from New York. Like Mr. Dewey I am getting now, as an aristocratic lady said, the approval of the better people, only there are not enough of them.

Now, so much for the antilynching bill.

What about FEPC? Into my office there came a gentleman from my district, a colored gentleman, Mr. Ampey. In fact, his brother or his cousin, I do not remember which, campaigned with me in my first primary campaign. I get along with the colored folks all right. The other day he came in and he said, "CLARE, we don't like your view on this FEPC bill." I said, "I know you do not, but that is the way I feel, because no one has ever yet been able to tell me when or where preference ended and discrimination began." So I said, "You do not have any trouble in Paw Paw"—that is where he lives—"do you?" "No," he said, "only with one barber." The farmer, the businessman, they treat me all right." "But," he said, "one place they did not."

I said, "When you ride on the train that runs from Chicago to Detroit, the New York Central, you do not have any trouble, you can go in any car you wish?"

"Yes, sir."

I said, "Lige, why would you not go along with this proposition: That is a big road, they have plenty of money, they can afford it; why can we not have one car for colored folks, one car for white folks, and one car for mixed folks? I do not mean mixed folks, I mean a car where everybody can go and sit or eat or sleep, whether he be black or white or brown or yellow?"

"Oh," he said, "that would not be right, that would not be fair."

I cannot see why it is not fair. That arrangement ought to please everyone. Why is that not all right? Why would it not be all right? Then people could go where they wanted, associate with the people of their choice. A few of the colored folks in my district do not like me, those who come from Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, and Pittsburgh, but the home folks do; they are all right and they think I am all right; we treat each other as equals. As a matter of choice, we do not discriminate; we put into practice the Golden Rule; and we do not need any professional agitator to force on us a law to make us do something we are now doing. Why not fix it so everybody can choose his associates? Do you see the point? Extend equal facilities; yes. But do not discriminate against the majority by imposing upon them obligations granting special privileges to minorities.

I would go one step further. The mayor of one of the cities in my district talked to me one time and said, "What do you think about this; you have been in Washington a long time and you ought to know everything; just tell us what to do."

I said, "All right, I have been in Washington and I should know everything. What do you wish to ask me about?"

"Well," he said, "we are having some trouble with the bathing beach; trouble between the colored folks and the whites, they get mixed up sometimes," he said. "What can we do?"

I said, "Why do not you divide that beach, not according to population,"—the colored folks there were only 10 to 15 percent of the population, maybe not that much. I said, "Do not divide it on that basis; split it even, 50-50. Then call the leaders of the colored organization in and say, 'All right now, here, Mr. Jones, Mr. White, Mr. Smith, you just take your half; choose the half of the bathing beach you want, north or south half.' Give them equal facilities, better even; give them more because they have not had as many years of opportunity as the whites have had; give them the long end of the lever. Why not? It is all right. Let them have it. And then when they have taken that let them stay over on that side and let the white people stay over on their side, and if you want to give them another beach where they can mix up if they want to, give them that, divide the beach into three equal sections if they wish and make everyone happy by letting everyone into the third division."

But why force business by an FEPC to employ this one, that one, or the other one? Where will we get? Suppose you have a Catholic hospital, a Catholic publishing house; under this law if along comes an atheist who wants a job or a Communist who says there is no God, still if he or she is qualified under the proposed bill you have got to take him or her as an employee.

Would you not have to take in an atheist, would you not have to take a Lutheran, as I am, into a Jewish religious establishment, a publishing house? Of course you do not want that. Suppose you are a Christian and along comes an atheist Communist, you have got to take her in under the FEPC and teach your children in a public or parochial school.

Let me give you a hint of what may be behind this. Massachusetts, I think, has an FEPC, New York has it; I think New Jersey has it. They are losing a lot of industry up in the Northeast because of some of these restrictive laws. They have no great supply of gas, oil, coal or ore, hence, are dependent upon industry. Having swallowed this trouble-making FEPC which may force some of their industries south they would like to fix you folks in the South so you will not offer quite so much competition. Do you get it? That is what they may be up to. They swallowed something that has given them industrial indigestion and they do not want it, they cannot get rid of it so they want you to have a dose of the same so they can compete on more equal terms. That may be what they are after—why they are so insistent that it become a national policy.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVENPORT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

CARDINAL JOSEPH MINDSZENTY

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, no incident of recent months has stirred up such world-wide reactions as the arrest of the primate of Hungary, Cardinal Joseph Mindszenty.

The flood of official and private protests from all parts of the world are ample evidence of that.

The imprisoned cardinal is generally regarded as the champion of basic human rights and religious liberty. He is regarded as the Hungarian champion of those rights which are guaranteed to every American citizen by the Constitution of the United States.

The Hungarian Government prepared a yellow book against the cardinal in which he is accused of high treason and espionage.

The Hungarian Government also announced the full confession of the cardinal to above charges.

His trial is to start tomorrow.

But public opinion refuses to recognize the validity of the charges and refuses to believe that the trial will serve the cause of justice.

In the name of the American Catholic hierarchy, Archbishop John T. McNicholas, of Cincinnati, called upon the Catholics of the United States to observe next Sunday, February 6, as a day of prayer and protest over the arrest, imprisonment, and trial of Cardinal Mindszenty. In his letter the Archbishop of Cincinnati made this poignant statement:

> The public opinion of our country and the whole noncommunistic world may not influence the despotic rulers of Hungary. The trial of the cardinal will be a travesty of justice. The political court will do the bidding of the tyrannous rulers. We must be prepared to have the torturers and jailers of the cardinal employ every inhuman means to break down the physical and mental powers of his eminence before he appears in the trial. In vain will the Hungarian Government set up false fronts to deceive the world regarding the fantastic charges made against the cardinal primate of Hungary. The Hungarian people will not be deceived.
> They know the despotic treatment to which they are subjected. They are conscious of their utter inability at present to resist the brutal and degrading power of those who have seized the control of government under the aegis of the Soviets.
> Hungary is an occupied country. The right of occupation is vested in the Soviet Union.

But according to newspaper reports the head of the Soviet State is willing to come to an agreement with the United States on the great issue of peace.

If the Soviet leader, Mr. Stalin, really means what he reportedly said, then here is the opportunity. He, as chief of the occupational forces in Hungary, should prevail on the Hungarian Government and secure the release of Cardinal Mindszenty and of all those who together with him were imprisoned.

Such an act would prove to an anxious world that the Soviet Union is ready and willing to fulfill her obligation as a member of the United Nations, and guarantee the freedom of thought, speech, and religion everywhere in the world.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I commend the gentleman for the remarks he has just made on this distressing incident. It is too bad that in these days of enlightened civilization such incidents occur which shock the conscience of all the rest of the civilized world. May we hope that the reign of terror which exists in many of these countries behind the iron curtain may soon come to an end and that democracy may again raise its head so that people everywhere in the world will have at least freedom of religion and freedom of speech.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I thank the gentleman.

SENATE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1949

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful and gracious God, we are again approaching Thy throne through the old and familiar way of prayer which is never closed to those who come with a humble spirit and a contrite heart.

May this be a moment of insight and of inspiration. Grant that the whole day may be glorious in the realization of Thy presence, Thy peace, and Thy power.

We pray that Thou wilt transform our lives from what they are to what they ought to be. Establish within us those loyalties and those integrities which cannot be shaken.

Guide us by Thy spirit as we seek to minister to the needs of all the members of the human family who are finding the struggle of life so difficult. Show us how we may release the hidden splendor of humanity and bring to fulfillment those ideals and capacities which Thou hast planted in the soul of man.

To Thy name we ascribe the praise. Amen.

PETER MARSHALL

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a certified copy of prefatory remarks made by the chaplain of the Ohio State Senate regarding the death of Rev. Peter Marshall, late the Chaplain of the United States Senate, which, without objection, will be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The United States Senate is without a Chaplain. A brilliant life came suddenly to an end yesterday in Washington. The Reverend Peter Marshall has had a distinguished career as Chaplain of the Senate, if my information is correct, following that of the late Dr. ZeBarney T. Phillips, of Springfield, Ohio. He was popular with the Senators, being as he was an outspokenly honest man who challenged them constantly to be outstanding leaders in the high office to which the American people had elected them. He was pastor of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, where Abraham Lincoln worshiped while President of this great Nation. We shall remember him and his loved ones in their bereavement today in our prayer:

"In the midst of life we are in death: of whom may we seek for succor, but of Thee, O Lord, who for our sins art justly displeased?"

Let us pray:

"O God whose days are without end and whose mercies cannot be numbered, accept our prayers on behalf of the soul of Thy servant departed and grant him an entrance into the love of life and joy, in the fellowship of Thy saints. Defend the members of his bereaved family with Thy heavenly grace that they may continue Thine forever and daily increase in Thy Holy Spirit more and more until they too come into Thine everlasting Kingdom.

"May the souls of the faithful by the mercies of God rest in peace.

"May he rest in peace." Amen.

This is to certify that this is a true and correct copy of prefatory remarks made by the Rev. John I. Byron, chaplain, Ohio State Senate, Columbus, Ohio, January 26, 1949, regarding the death of Rev. Peter Marshall, Chaplain of the United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DWIGHT L. MATCHETTE,
Clerk of the Senate.

(See resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. BUTLER on January 31, 1949 (p. 667), CONGRESSIONAL RECORD).

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Utah; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"Senate Concurrent Memorial 1

"Concurrent memorial urging the congressional delegation from the State of Utah to introduce a resolution in the Congress of the United States requesting President Truman to use his good office in securing the appointment of a fact-finding board to investigate and recommend a basis for settlement of the existing labor-management dispute between the Kennecott Copper Corp., Utah copper division, and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, such as was recommended by the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and the Industrial Commission of the State of Utah on November 6, 1948; copy attached

"Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Utah (the Governor concurring therein):

"Whereas the economy of Utah is substantially stifled due to a prolonged industrial dispute at the Kennecott Copper Corp., Utah copper division; and

"Whereas the national security of the United States requires a stock pile of 90,000 tons of copper by June 30, 1949; and

"Whereas the open-pit mine at Bingham Canyon, Utah, of the Kennecott Copper Corp., produces approximately 30 percent of the national output of newly mined copper; and

"Whereas the Kennecott Copper Corp. and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen have been unable to settle the current dispute through direct negotiations: Be it therefore

"Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Utah approve the adoption of this concurrent memorial urging the congressional delegation from the State of Utah to introduce a resolution in the Congress of the United States requesting President Truman to use his good offices in securing the appointment of a fact-finding board to investigate and recommend a basis for settlement of the existing labor-management dispute between the Kennecott Copper Corp., Utah copper division, and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, such as was recommended by the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and the Industrial Commission of the State of Utah on November 6, 1948; copy attached; be it further

"Resolved, That copy of this concurrent memorial be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each member of the Utah delegation of the Congress of the United States, the Secretary of Labor, and the Director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service."

Three joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"Senate Joint Resolution 8

"Joint resolution to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States in relation to the effect of the recent freezing weather conditions on the agricultural industry of California

"Whereas recent and unprecedented freezing weather has occurred in the State of California and, particularly in the southern portions thereof, has caused the outright destruction of a large part of the crop of citrus fruits and avocados and has caused damage to the trees bearing such crops to an extent the magnitude of which cannot at this time be definitely ascertained but which well may reach calamitous proportions; and

"Whereas the practical destruction of the citrus fruit and avocado industry of California, coupled with the impairment of production of other types of agricultural products not so severely affected, bids fair to result in a serious impairment of the economic structure of the State of California, affecting not only the individual ranchers but successively affecting the communities in which they live, the State of California, and the United States as a whole; and

"Whereas it is probable that when the full extent of this disaster becomes known its scope will be so great that it will be beyond the power of the State of California to take the remedial steps necessary to alleviate the conditions caused thereby; and

"Whereas the Legislature of the State of California deems it appropriate officially to advise the United States Government of the situation that now exists and probably will exist in this State: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California hereby respectfully requests the President and the Congress of the United States to make a thorough investigation of the conditions resulting from the recent freezing weather in California and the results thereof on the agriculture of the State and to take such steps as may be necessary, by providing subsidies or otherwise, to alleviate the situation and to ameliorate the condition of the persons who have suffered because of the destruction resulting from such freezing weather; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States."

"Senate Joint Resolution 9

"Joint resolution relative to funds for the Joint Commission for the Eradication of Foot-and-Mouth Disease in the Republic of Mexico

"Whereas foot-and-mouth disease, a major and devastating disease of livestock, is present in the Republic of Mexico; and

"Whereas the Republic of Mexico and the United States of America have joined forces to control and eradicate the disease in Mexico; and

"Whereas the chief instrument for the control of the disease is the joint commission established for that purpose and supported by the two nations with financial, scientific and general ways and means; and

"Whereas great strides are being made in the Republic of Mexico by the efforts of the joint commission toward the control and eradication of this disease, which is not known to exist elsewhere in North America; and

"Whereas it is in the general welfare of the two contracting nations to continue the work of the joint commission without any slackening of effort or loss of research, program or planning: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to approve an appropriation of funds, and such other enactments as are necessary, to continue without interruption the work of the Joint Commission for the Eradication of Foot-and-Mouth Disease in the Republic of Mexico, and commends the commission for its excellent work; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to every Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

"Senate Joint Resolution 10

"Relative to the Federal livestock-disease research laboratory

"Whereas the Congress of the United States has enacted legislation providing for the livestock-disease research laboratory, with particular reference to foot-and-mouth disease; and

"Whereas neither a site for such laboratory has as yet been selected nor have funds been appropriated for it; and

"Whereas the need for such a laboratory is very great in view of the outbreak of the foot-and-mouth pestilence in the Republic of Mexico; and

"Whereas, because of the large movement of livestock east from the Pacific coast, the establishment of the laboratory on the Pacific slope would be least desirable because of the greater possibility of wide dissemination of the foot-and-mouth disease in the event of its escape from the laboratory; and

"Whereas several years will be consumed before it will be possible to construct and equip a laboratory during such time research could be greatly furthered by sending young men abroad to work with foreign research laboratories: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States immediately to make provision for the construction of a livestock-disease research laboratory, with particular reference to foot-and-mouth disease, other than on the Pacific slope, and during the interim prior to the completion of such laboratory, to make provision for sending young men abroad to work with foreign research laboratories in the accomplishment of scientific research with respect to the control of foot-and-mouth disease; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to every Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

A resolution of the Assembly of the State of California; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

"House Resolution 46

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to effect legislation which will enable the Civil Aeronautics Administration to prohibit the taking off of aircraft from airports during periods of poor visibility

"Whereas there have recently occurred several serious aircraft accidents in Seattle, Wash., Portland, and other areas during periods of poor visibility; and

"Whereas these accidents have resulted in the deaths and injuries of many persons, thereby causing tremendous losses to the air transportation industry due to lack of public confidence in air transportation because of such accidents; and

"Whereas it is believed these accidents were caused by take-offs from airports during weather conditions of poor visibility; and

"Whereas the Civil Aeronautics Administration does not have authority under the presently existing laws to prevent aircraft from taking off during periods when visibility is below the legal minimum; and

"Whereas, if granted such authority it is believed that many of the recent tragic aircraft accidents could have been prevented: Therefore be it

"Resolved, by the Assembly of the State of California, That the President and the Congress of the United States be memorialized to effect and enact legislation authorizing the Civil Aeronautics Administration to prohibit the taking off of aircraft from airports during periods when visibility is less than the legal minimum; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative from the State of California."

By Mr. LUCAS:

A resolution of the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"House Resolution 17

"Whereas no segment of the American people has made a greater contribution, in peace and in war, to the welfare of our Nation than have the working men and women of America; and

"Whereas this magnificent contribution was made possible through the long struggle of organized labor to secure for the workingman recognition of certain fundamental rights; and

"Whereas Public Law 101 of the Eightieth Congress, otherwise known as the Taft-Hartley Act, attempts to abridge labor's fundamental rights and to set the cause of the workingman back a generation; and

"Whereas the Taft-Hartley Act not only adversely affects organized labor but jeopardizes the peace and prosperity of the entire country, because whatever hurts labor hurts the Nation: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Sixty-sixth General Assembly of the State of Illinois, That the Congress of the United States now assembled be urged to take immediate steps to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and to restore to the working men and women of America the rights to which they are entitled and the respect they so richly deserve; and be it further

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

"Senate Joint Memorial 1

"Joint memorial memorializing the President and Congress of the United States through appropriate budgetary and legislative action to continue a plan of expansion of local service air transportation facilities as recommended by the President's Air Policy Commission and the Congressional Air Policy Board, by extending to 5 years the term of experimental or temporary certificates of convenience and necessity for such air transportation now in effect, including that of Empire Air Lines, Inc., now serving Idaho

"Your memorialist, the Thirtieth Legislature of the State of Idaho, now convened in regular session, respectfully represents to the President and Congress of the United States:

"That the air mail, passenger, and express service rendered by said Empire Air Lines, Inc., is a valuable asset to the State of Idaho in that such service overcomes the existent geographic barriers against convenient and speedy surface transportation, which have heretofore resulted in dividing our State politically, socially, and economically;

"That the continuation of such air service is vitally needed in the promotion of the unity and welfare of Idaho and its people;

"That the President's Air Policy (Finletter) Commission and the Congressional Air Policy Board have concurred in recommending that the present experimental 3-year certificates of convenience and necessity issued to and held by local or feeder air lines be extended to 5 years;

"That the present and planned development of the Snake River area and its water resources for power, irrigation, and other beneficial uses will substantially increase the population, commerce, and trade within the area now served by Empire Air Lines, Inc.;

"That your memorialist, being deeply concerned with the future growth of Idaho, believes that it is in the public interest for the United States to foster and further develop feeder and local air service, particularly in the Western States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the senate of the thirtieth legislature (the house of representatives concurring), That the President and Congress of the United States be, and they hereby are urged and requested, through appropriate budgetary action and financial support, to provide for the extension of the term of experimental or temporary certificates of convenience and necessity of local or feeder air lines, including that of Empire Air Lines, Inc., from 3 to 5 years; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho be and is hereby ordered to send copies of this memorial to the President of the United States of America and the Members of the Idaho delegation and the Congress of the United States of America.

AMERICAN MILITARY TRIALS IN GERMANY—TELEGRAM FROM PAUL H. MUELLER

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a telegram received by me from Paul H. Mueller, publisher of the Abendpost, Chicago, Ill., dealing with United States military trials in Germany.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., February 2, 1949.

Hon. WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

In view gravity of charges against prosecuting staff, investigators, and United States military officials participating military trials at Dachau, Germany, I urgently suggest that you try to get subcommittee with fullest investigating powers to its work on spot, i. e., Dachau und Landsberg, Germany. Catholic bishops in western zones of Germany, also Protestant Bishop Dr. Worm, Wuerttemberg, condemned trials repeatedly and demanded investigation of methods American military justice, particularly in connection with so-called Malmedy massacre. Highly probable that third degree, even outright torture, used to obtain confessions to acts, crimes never committed. Death sentences pronounced on basis of such confessions. Believe depositions should be obtained from Germans subjected to these methods, and American investigators, etc., participating in these cases should be sharply questioned by Senators.

PAUL H. MUELLER,
Publisher, Abendpost.

I want to ask, either now or at the conclusion of the morning hour, unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the bill by reason of the urgency of the situation covered by it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and the bill will lie on the table.

IDA RAFFEL KLAFF

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 46, submitted by Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma on January 31, 1949, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. This is the usual resolution adopted in similar cases.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and agreed to, as follows:

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—CIVILIAN EMPLOYMENT IN EXECUTIVE BRANCH

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, conforming with the practice followed over the past 6 years, as chairman of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, I submit the report on civilian employment in the executive branch of the Federal Government for the month of December 1948, with the request that it be printed in the body of the RECORD.

In view of the fact that this report is for the last month of the calendar year 1948 and the sixth month of the fiscal year 1949 the following observations will be of interest to Members of Congress in connection with the facts which the report develops.

The number of Federal employees in the executive branch increased 108,987 during the calendar year 1948—the net increase averaging 297 for every day in the year.

This was revealed today by the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures on the basis of its compilation of personnel reports certified to the committee by each of the Federal agencies.

The new report covers civilian employment by all Federal agencies for December 1948, and it shows the total for the month—both inside and outside continental United States—was 2,104,456 as compared with 1,995,469 a year ago.

INSIDE CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES

Inside continental United States total employment increased 137,407, a daily average increase of 375 for the year. In December 1948 the total was 1,910,589. A year ago the total was 1,773,182.

OUTSIDE CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES

Federal agency personnel employed outside continental United States in December 1948 totaled 193,767, as compared with 222,337 a year ago. The decrease during the year totaled 28,570, or a daily average decrease of 78.

CIVILIAN AGENCIES

Exclusive of the Military Establishment, Federal civilian agencies at home and abroad increased their personnel during the year by 47,992, rising from 1,166,236 a year ago to 1,214,228 in December 1948. The daily average increase for these agencies was 131. There was a net increase both inside and outside the country.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT

The number of civilian employees in the Military Establishment increased during the year at an average of 166 per day. The number in December 1948 was 890,228, or 60,995 more than it was a year ago.

The military agencies employed additional civilian personnel at the rate of 246 a day during the year inside continental United States, but showed a decrease averaging about 80 a day abroad.

The total employed inside the country in December 1948 was 750,734, as compared with 660,745 a year ago. Civilians employed by the military agencies outside the country in December 1948 totaled 139,494, as compared with 168,488 a year ago. Much of the decrease abroad was among the so-called industrial employees.

NOVEMBER–DECEMBER

There was a net decrease of 141 in all Federal civilian employment during December, as compared with the previous month, due largely to heavy reductions in Army civilian employment overseas, to reductions by the War Assets Administration which is in liquidation, and to reductions in the Agriculture Department, where employment is seasonal. There were heavy increases in the Military Establishment employment inside the continental United States and the Post Office Department, which had the Christmas rush.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL PERSONNEL IN EXECUTIVE BRANCH, NOVEMBER–DECEMBER 1948, AND PAY OCTOBER–NOVEMBER 1948

NOTE WITH REFERENCE TO PERSONAL SERVICE EXPENDITURE FIGURES

It should be noted that the latest expenditure figures for personal service shown in table I of this report are for the month of November, and that they are compared with personal service expenditure figures for the month of October, whereas the latest employment figures covered in this report are for the month of December and are compared with employment figures for the month of November. This lag in personal service expenditure figures is necessary in order that actual expenditures may be reported.

(Figures in the following report are compiled from signed official personnel reports by the various agencies and departments of the Federal Government. Table I shows total personnel employed inside and outside continental United States, and pay, by agency. Table II shows personnel employed inside continental United States, by agency. Table III shows personnel employed outside continental United States, by agency. Table IV gives by agency the industrial workers employed by the Federal Government. For purposes of comparison, figures for the previous month are shown in adjoining columns.)

This further break-down in tables II, III, and IV does not include pay figures because pay-roll reports submitted to the committee by some agencies are inadequate for this purpose.

COMPILATION OF CIVILIAN EMPLOYMENT RECORD OF AGENCIES IN EXECUTIVE BRANCH

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, among the services rendered the Congress and the public by the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures is the compilation of the civilian employment record of the agencies in the executive branch of the Federal Government.

Due to the recess 6 months have elapsed since the last monthly report of the committee on this subject was published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I submit two tables which set forth the changes in the personnel situation since that time.

The first table sets forth the changes in the number of employees in the various agencies of the executive branch. The second table sets forth the changes in the costs of personal service in these agencies.

It may be noted also that the first table is broken down to show total employment, employment inside continental United States, employment outside continental United States, and industrial employment.

I request publication of this material in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOVERNMENT LOANS ON WHEAT

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, and ask that it be printed in the body of the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 49) was received, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the President has made the following statement:

"Our national farm program should be improved—not only in the interest of the farmers, but for the lasting prosperity of the whole Nation. Our goals should be abundant farm production and parity of income for agriculture. Standards of living on the farm should be just as good as anywhere else.

"Farm price supports are an essential part of our program to achieve these ends. Price supports should be used to prevent farm price declines which are out of line with general price levels, to facilitate adjustments in production to consumer demands, and to promote good land use. Our price-support legislation must be adapted to these objectives. The authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation to provide adequate storage space for crops should be restored"; and

Whereas the Economic Cooperation Administration and the Army Quartermaster Corps are using United States dollars to buy foreign agricultural commodities which are in excess supply in the United States; and

Whereas export restrictions are being maintained which prevent the exportation of agricultural commodities including corn and wheat other than through the Department of Agriculture at the same time that the Department of Agriculture is offering to purchase corn and wheat at prices far below the support prices therefor; and

Whereas such activities of the Economic Cooperation Administration and the Army Quartermaster Corps and such export restrictions tend to undermine price-support programs for agricultural commodities: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete investigation of any and all actions of Government agencies which tend to undermine price-support programs for agricultural commodities.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report its findings, together with its recommendations for such legislation as it may deem desirable, to the Senate at the earliest practicable date.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, inasmuch as the resolution calls attention to something which is very questionable, I ask unanimous consent to be recognized for approximately a minute to make a statement with reference to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Oklahoma is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Information has come to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that certain agents of the Government, especially ECA, are using funds appropriated for the cooperative movement in making purchases abroad. For example, they are now purchasing 120,000,000 bushels of wheat from Canada, at $2 a bushel. That means an expenditure of $240,000,000. That is not all. Because of such purchases, farmers owning wheat will have to put their wheat in the loan, and that will require approximately another $240,000,000. So this one illustration is costing the taxpayers approximately half a billion dollars.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks a brief statement and copies of three letters which give information with respect to the resolution.

There being no objection, the statement and letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Since the last date the farmers could obtain Government loans on wheat (December 31) basic commodity prices have been declining at an alarming rate, much more rapidly than the cost of what the farmers buy. Wheat and corn are both well below 90 percent of parity, the Government loan or support price. This sharp drop has caused widespread alarm in agriculture which could well plunge this Nation into a depression. Freedom from fear of a depression is absolutely necessary to keep the farmer buying the goods he needs that in turn keeps full employment in the factories and with labor.

Senator YOUNG, of North Dakota, has made charges against the ECA who administers the Marshall plan which are in effect an indictment. He has asked the Senate Agriculture Committee to immediately investigate ECA's plan to allocate some quarter billion dollars to England for the purchase of 120,000,000 bushels or more of Canadian wheat at a base price of $2 per bushel, free on board Fort Williams, Canada. This plan, he claims, winks at the law which requires the dollars we grant under the Marshall plan be spent in the United States when they go for commodities of which we have a surplus.

Upon a brief investigation of these charges it appears that ECA dollars are being used to buy Canadian wheat at prices equal to or higher than United States wheat now being grown. Also, I am informed that Burmese and Indochina rice is being shipped to China in preference to United States rice of which we have a surplus. During my cursory examination I am informed that the Army Quartermaster Corps is buying linseed oil from Canada while at the same time flaxseed is being placed under Government loan because the price of linseed oil is too low to allow processing the seed that is now flowing into Government loan.

If these practices are in effect, as indicated, and continue, they will destroy not only our agriculture-support program but our entire economy. Yesterday, the price of wheat was $1.93 at Wichita, Kans., which is 11 cents below the Government-support price. Wheat at Kansas City, Mo., for immediate delivery is 14 cents below the loan and for September delivery was quoted at $1.91 per bushel, which is 29 cents below the existing loan. If this ECA plan goes through, it will probably cost the United States Government a half billion dollars as we will be required to not only grant a quarter billion to England to buy the wheat but another quarter billion advanced under the loan.

I am also informed that the CCC's offer to buy wheat is based on the Chicago May futures price which yesterday was some 13 cents per bushel below the loan. At the same time the CCC prohibits all exports by producers and the private grain trade, requiring all buyers to buy from the CCC. Some commercial buyers, like the Belgian grain trade, object to buying from the CCC because no one ever knows what wheat costs until after shipment is made. I understand the same restrictions on exports also apply to corn of which we have a huge surplus and the price is far below the loan level.

I have been in hopes that the ECA, Department of Agriculture, and the Army Quartermaster Corps were coordinating their efforts to a common goal. If, as reported, the ECA is granting United States dollars to buy foreign commodities instead of our basic commodities in surplus supply, it should be investigated and stopped.

If the Army Quartermaster Corps has a policy to buy foreign commodities to the detriment of our agriculture producers and processors, that should be stopped. If one branch of the Department of Agriculture is restricting exports of wheat and corn while the other branch is accumulating surpluses, that should be coordinated. If these evils are not corrected immediately, it may require legislation.

The problem is so serious and the charges are so grave I have presented a resolution to the Senate which will authorize an investigation and hearings will be held by the Senate Agriculture Committee, at which time the ECA, Department of Agriculture, and the Army Quartermaster Corps, and other interested parties will be heard.

JANUARY 25, 1949.

Mr. PAUL G. HOFFMAN,
Administrator, Economic Cooperation Administration,

DEAR MR. HOFFMAN: I have been reliably informed that ECA has advanced $55,000,000 to the United Kingdom for the purchase of wheat in Canada.

Such an agreement, in my opinion, is entirely contrary to the purpose of the ECA program. I voted for the program and for the appropriations which were requested, but it was my belief that this appropriation contained every necessary safeguard to assure the purchase of food supplies in the United States. While Canada may be deserving of assistance, I did not understand that this country was considered eligible under the Marshall plan for assistance.

There are other reasons why I would question the advisability of such an agreement. When $7,000,000,000 is given as grants and loans for European aid and the purchases are largely made in the United States, a tremendous benefit accrues to the people of the United States through increased production and through the employment of labor in that production. On the other hand, when United States dollars in grants or loans are used for purchases in foreign countries the final and real cost to our over-all economy is far greater.

To purchase wheat in another country at the same time that we are accumulating vast surpluses of farm commodities, and particularly wheat, in the United States, all eligible for price support, just does not make sense to me. I understand that the Commodity Credit Corporation has under loan or purchase agreement approximately 300,000,000 bushels of wheat and that, in all probability, the Federal Government will suffer at least some loss in the operation of this price-support program. It is entirely possible also that within the next year or two many farm commodities, because of accumulated surpluses, will have to go under quotas and acreage control. The result would be a vast decrease in the United States farmers' income which would also greatly reduce their purchasing power.

With respect to accumulated farm surpluses in the United States and the resultant cost of this program, I was informed yesterday by Secretary Brannan that it is entirely possible by next year that all of the $4,750,000,000 borrowing authority given to the CCC to support farm commodities will be committed. In view of all this, I hope that no further agreements similar to this one with the United Kingdom and Canada will be entered into.

May I also request that you prepare for the Appropriations Committee, of which I am a member, figures showing the amount of ECA purchases of food within the United States and purchases in offshore countries.

With kindest personal regards,

Sincerely yours,

MILTON R. YOUNG,
United States Senator.

---

ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., February 1, 1949.

HON. MILTON R. YOUNG,
United States Senate,

DEAR SENATOR YOUNG: This is in reply to your letter of January 25, expressing concern about the purchase by the United Kingdom of $55,000,000 worth of Canadian wheat with funds made available to the United Kingdom by ECA.

From April 3 through December 31, 1948, ECA has authorized the purchase of food and agricultural commodities valued at $1,799,000,000. Of this total, $1,184,400,000 have been authorized for purchases in the United States, $354,200,000 for purchases in Canada and Newfoundland, $164,800,000 for purchases in Latin America, and $95,700,000 for purchases in other parts of the world. Total authorizations for this period amounted to $4,044,800,000, including $336,700,000 for ocean freight. Of the authorizations for purchase of food and agriculture products in Canada and Newfoundland, $256,400,000 have been purchased of bread grains.

During the earlier part of the 9 months ending December 31, 1948, purchases of bread grains in Canada were necessitated by the lack of availabilities from the United States. More recently, authorizations for purchase in Canada have been limited to purchases by the United Kingdom where, because of the existence of an agreement between these two countries, prices paid have been $2 a bushel, in store, Fort William. Currently, participating countries are paying about $2.43 a bushel for hard red winter wheat at the Gulf and higher prices for spring wheat at Atlantic ports. Prior to August 1, 1948, the price United Kingdom had been paying for Canadian wheat was $1.55 a bushel, in store, Fort William, whereas hard wheat at the Gulf was costing from $2.50 to $2.75 a bushel. During the 9 months ending December 31, the wheat purchased by United Kingdom from Canada and paid for with ECA funds, has cost at least $50,000,000 less than it would have cost if purchased in the United States.

However, this saving has not been the sole or even the main reason for authorizing the use of ECA funds for these purchases; nor have these purchases been made in disregard of the provisions of the Economic Cooperation Act. The Act provides that the Administrator shall not authorize the use of ECA funds for offshore procurement for commodities for which supplies available in the United States are sufficient to meet the requirements of the participating countries. To date, we have not felt that the supplies of wheat available in the United States were sufficient to meet the requirements of the participating countries as well as all of the requirements of nonparticipating countries. As a consequence, it appeared to us to be most desirable to authorize the use of ECA funds for the purchase of low-priced wheat under the Canadian-United Kingdom wheat agreement, thus saving the American taxpayers money, rather than to require all purchases of wheat for the participating countries to be made from the United States when prices are uniformly substantially above $2 a bushel and thus forcing the nonparticipating countries to shift at least a major portion of their purchases to Canada.

The assistance which Canada has obtained under the Marshall plan is, as I am sure you realize, wholly indirect. This indirect assistance has been, I believe, considered to be a major incidental advantage of the entire program. ECA's responsibility is to furnish recovery assistance to the United Kingdom. This assistance is given when it allots funds for the purchase of the wheat needed to maintain bread distribution in that country. When these funds are spent in a country other than the United States, as for example Canada, that country is thereby benefited. It should be pointed out, however, that the American dollars which the United Kingdom pays to Canada are in turn spent by Canada in the United States so that the United States ultimately gets the benefit of the increased production and employment of labor that grows out of the expenditure of funds authorized by Congress for European recovery even though some of the dollars thus expended return to the United States via a third country. Incidentally, the expenditure by the participating countries with ECA funds in Canada has sufficiently improved the dollar position of that country to permit it to relax many of its restrictions on imports from the United States. These restrictions formerly applied to a long list of agricultural commodities.

I am enclosing a copy of a letter that the Director of our Food and Agriculture Division recently wrote to Mr. Charles Dewey on this same subject which contains additional information thereon. We recognize that a potential development of agricultural surpluses in the United States may create many problems for all of us and we shall, of course, want to do everything possible to contribute to a solution of these problems, consistent with the specific responsibilities assigned to us by Congress of encouraging and assisting European economic recovery. Perhaps you would like to discuss this matter, particularly as it affects wheat, with Dr. FitzGerald. If so, he will be delighted to make himself available at your convenience.

Sincerely yours,

PAUL HOFFMAN, Administrator.

JANUARY 28, 1949.

Mr. CHARLES S. DEWEY,
Agent General, Joint Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation, Congress of the United States, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DEWEY: This is in reply to your letter of January 26, regarding the sale to Great Britain by Canada of some 702,000 tons of wheat valued at about $55,000,000 for which ECA funds were being provided.

The answers to your specific questions with respect to the matter, insofar as it is possible to answer them, are as follows:

1. The term "carry-over" when used with reference to wheat usually refers to the stocks of this grain which are carried over from the end of one season to the beginning of the next. It includes, of course, as an irreducible minimum, the necessary working stocks in the distribution system. Since it is now the middle of the season, rather than the end, there is no current carry-over of wheat in the usual use of the term.

According to the Department of Agriculture, stocks of wheat in all positions as of January 1, 1949, amounted to 857,000,000 bushels. This stock is available to meet domestic requirements for food, feed, and seed, for export and for meeting minimum end-of-season carry-over requirements. Of these January 1 stocks, 381,700,000 bushels were held by farmers and would not, of course, be immediately available for export. Ignoring this fact for the moment, it may be assumed that a very large proportion of the January 1 stocks, perhaps 90 percent or more, would be suitable for export. It would, of course, be most unwise to attempt to export such a quantity of wheat since it would leave no supplies for any domestic uses.

2. The export allocations for the first quarter 1949 announced by the Department of Agriculture, together with all supplemental export allotments to date and expected exports in the same period to the Western Hemisphere and Philippines, amount to 126,000,000 bushels. This total covers both participating and nonparticipating countries. About 12,000,000 bushels allocated during October–December 1948 had not been exported on January 1, 1949, and were included in January 1 stocks. These also will be exported in the first quarter of 1949.

The volume of exports to participating countries, including overseas territories, in the April–June quarter of this year may be estimated at 68,000,000 bushels, and those to nonparticipating countries at 25,000,000 bushels. In both instances, these estimates include the wheat equivalent of anticipated flour exports.

3. In addition to these exports, domestic requirements for wheat which will need to be met from January 1 stocks are estimated to be as follows:

Food 240,000,000 bushels, feed 60,000,000 bushels, seed 26,000,000 bushels, or a total of 326,000,000 bushels. Thus, the June 30, 1949, carry-over of wheat is expected to be about 300,000,000 bushels.

4. The exportable surplus of Canadian wheat for the 1948–49 crop season is estimated to be about 300,000,000 bushels, of which 60,000,000 bushels may be considered as a necessary year-end carry-over. Of this quantity, 140,000,000 bushels have been sold to the United Kingdom at a price of $2 per bushel for No. 1 hard northern wheat, in store, Fort William.

5. Three years ago the United Kingdom and Canada entered into a 4-year wheat agreement which provide that Canada would sell and the United Kingdom would buy 160,000,000 bushels of wheat a year during the first 2 years of the agreement and 140,000,000 bushels a year during the next 2 years of the agreement. This agreement is now in its third year. During its first 2 years the price at which Canada sold wheat was $1.55 per bushel for No. 1 hard northern, in store, Fort William. During the current year, as previously stated, it is $2 per bushel, and a recent announcement indicates that this will also be the price for the last year of the agreement, that is, 1949–50 crop year. Over the 4 years of the agreement provision was made for exporting 600,000,000 bushels of wheat. As of this date, approximately 370,000,000 bushels have been exported.

6. The recently announced authorization for the purchase of $55,000,000 of Canadian wheat covers payment for about 26,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat, which is roughly 20 percent of the total quantity covered by the United Kingdom-Canadian wheat agreement for the current crop season. ECA is paying for this wheat on the basis of $2 per bushel, in store, Fort William. The current price of United States wheat at Gulf ports is about $2.43 per bushel. The use of ECA funds to purchase Canadian wheat for the United Kingdom, in addition to helping meet the essential United Kingdom requirements for its bread ration, also helps the Canadian dollar position. It might be noted in passing that as a result of the improvement of the Canadian dollar position growing out of this ECA programing, Canada has been able to relax materially its previously existing restrictions against United States imports.

Sincerely yours,

D. A. FITZGERALD,
Director, Food and Agriculture Division.

INVESTIGATION OF FINANCIAL CONDITION OF THE AIR-LINE INDUSTRY

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 50), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

Whereas commercial air-line operations have a direct bearing upon the national defense of the United States; and

Whereas the maintenance of the domestic and international air-lines operations of the United States in healthy financial condition is indispensable to the national security; and

Whereas financial distress has been experienced by many such air lines during a period of general business prosperity, and reasonably may be expected to be further aggravated in the event that general levels of business activity should decline in the future; and

Whereas the Congress, the Government agencies concerned, and the air-line industry have not agreed upon a long-range solution which would effectively insure the continued operation of such domestic and international air lines upon a sound financial basis; and

Whereas there is urgent need for a comprehensive study of this and related problems by the Congress to the end that sound policies for their solution may be evolved and embodied in such legislation as may be found to be necessary: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to make a full and complete study and investigation of such problems relating to the financial stability and operational efficiency of the air-lines industry as it may deem proper.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report its findings, and recommend such legislation as it may deem advisable, to the Senate at the earliest practicable date.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-first Congress, (1) to employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable, (2) to perform such travel, and to authorize such travel by such assistants, as it deems advisable, and (3) with the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned, to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of any of the departments or agencies of the Government. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

PRINTING OF FIFTH SEMIANNUAL REPORT OF ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

Mr. McMAHON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 53), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That there be printed as a Senate document the fifth semiannual report of the Atomic Energy Commission and that 500 additional copies be printed for the use of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

SERVICE ON JOINT COMMITTEE ON LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, as I am no longer a member of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, I ask to be relieved from further service on the Joint Committee on Labor-Management Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

With the resignation from the joint committee of the Senator from Louisiana there are now two vacancies, the other being caused by the retirement from the Senate of Senator Ball, of Minnesota. Under the law, the requirement is that members of the Joint Committee on Labor-Management Relations shall be members of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare of the Senate or of the similar committee in the House. Therefore the Chair appoints, in pursuance of that law, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] to fill the two vacancies on the joint committee.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

Mr. BALDWIN asked and obtained consent to be absent from the Senate after 1 o'clock today.

Mr. MILLIKIN asked and obtained consent to be absent from the Senate until February 16.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions, morning business is concluded.

THE MISSOURI VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the conclusion of my remarks an article entitled "MVA Plans Redrafted," which appeared on the front page of the Bismarck Tribune of Saturday, January 15, 1949.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, it is somewhat strange to see this naive attempt on the part of three Democratic Senators to help their party to get the credit for the establishment of the Missouri Valley Authority, or, as they now call it, the Missouri Valley Administration, or Missouri River Basin. Everyone knows that it was a Republican, the late Senator George Norris, who was responsible for the first of the great so-called authorities—the Tennessee Valley Authority. It was the Republican administration of Theodore Roosevelt that led the first big fight for the conservation of the natural resources of our country. Naturally I want to congratulate the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] and the distinguished junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], who has just been reelected after serving one term in the Senate, for going with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] to the White House and getting the President once again to restate and reiterate the views with which all of us have long since been familiar. But I want these three distinguished Senators to know that for over 20 years at different times in North Dakota, under the Republican administration, the fight has been going on for the development of the Missouri River Basin and for the St. Lawrence waterway, and many legislatures of North Dakota have for over 20 years appropriated money for preliminary surveys of these projects. As the head of the farmer-labor branch of the Republican Party, I wish to assure these three Democratic Senators that when they finally get their bill drafted they can count upon my full support of the measure and, I believe, of many Republican Senators, and that as a Republican I shall be delighted to join in the sponsorship of the Missouri Valley Administration bill, and if the measure does not meet my views entirely, I shall endeavor to get it amended on the floor, because I have not been consulted in the drafting of it, and only know in general terms what it contains.

EXHIBIT 1

MVA PLANS REDRAFTED—DEMOCRATIC SOLONS REVEAL PLAN AFTER WHITE HOUSE VISIT

WASHINGTON.—Three Democratic Senators said after a White House call Friday that President Truman voiced his support again for unified development of the Missouri River Basin.

The Senators said they were redrafting the old Missouri Valley Authority bill so as to leave construction of dams and other facilities under the Army engineers and other existing Federal agencies rather than give it to a new authority. The measure would give the name "Missouri Valley Administration" to the general directing agency instead of calling it the Missouri Valley Authority.

Senators MURRAY (Democrat, Montana), GILLETTE (Democrat, Iowa), and HUMPHREY (Democrat, Minnesota), called on the President.

"We want to get away from the use of the word 'authority' because of the kind of odium which has been attached to that name in connection with this proposed development," MURRAY told reporters. "Opponents pretend to see spies, socialism, and other evils attaching to that name."

The Senators said the President, long an advocate of unified development of the Missouri and its tributary system, is as strong for it as ever.

They said he told them he was having studies made and getting reports from Government agencies.

A reporter told MURRAY that the President had observed at his recent budget seminar that 9 out of 10 States in the Missouri Basin were against a Missouri Valley Authority.

MURRAY said that probably the President meant that a number of governors of States were opposed to the separate authority since the people in all the States are for it.

He said that the people demonstrated they were for the measure when they reelected him in Montana after he was denounced by some of the newspapers for his support of it.

"The President said he feels that the operation of the MVA should be coordinated by a single authority."

MURRAY said that a decision would be made later on whether to propose three or five directors for a Missouri Valley Administration.

In a joint statement, the three Senators asserted:

"The inadequacy and infeasibility of present plans for development of the Missouri River Basin are today widely recognized. It has become apparent here in Washington, as it is to the people of the valley, that there is not sufficient water in the basin for both the Pick flowing channel navigation scheme and irrigation projects already authorized.

"It also has become apparent that there has been inadequate consideration of hydroelectric power production to stimulate industry and development of resources now urgently needed by the Nation."

They added:

"As quickly as our bill can be completed, we, together with other Members of the Senate, will offer a measure to create a Missouri Valley Administration. The first work of such an administration will be engineering examination of present programs. It will serve the interests of the prompt action called for by the President, and now urgently needed, by providing immediate continuity between the examination of present programs by the MVA engineers and the execution of revised plans as rapidly as they are approved by the Congress."

They said there is need for immediate study of the feasibility of using low-grade manganese ores of South Dakota and expanding manganese production elsewhere to help meet shortages.

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I should like to refer to the resolution submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] to discharge the Committee on Rules and Administration from further consideration of a resolution relating to cloture which has been referred to it by the Senate. The clear implication is that the Committee on Rules and Administration has not been diligent in performing its duties as a servant of the Senate. As chairman of that committee, I think it would therefore be appropriate for me to address the Senate briefly and to state just what is the situation.

The resolution relates to an amendment to rule XXII of the Senate, which makes it possible for two-thirds of the Senate to close debate on any pending measure. Rule XXII was adopted not quite 32 years ago, on March 8, 1917, as the result of the work of a committee of five appointed from the Republican side of the Senate and the Democratic side. It was then realized that there should be some limitation on debate in the Senate. A resolution agreed to by both the Republican and Democratic conferences was brought up by unanimous consent by the Democratic leader, Senator Martin, of Virginia, and was debated all during the day of March 8, 1917, and adopted about midnight by a vote of 76 to 3.

The rule was found to be defective, first, on November 22, 1922, when repeated amendments were offered to the Journal of the previous day and were decided to be in order. At a later date a second equally serious fault was developed when it was determined that a cloture petition could not be filed until after a bill had become the unfinished business of the Senate. The result is that a motion to proceed to the consideration of a measure may be debated indefinitely.

In the last Congress there were submitted four resolutions to amend rule XXII, all of them being introduced on January 6, 1947. The Committee on Rules and Administration held hearings beginning on January 28 and ending on February 18, 1947, a period of nearly 3 weeks. A proposed amendment to rule XXII by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] provided that a mere majority of the Senate might impose cloture. The committee, after careful consideration, changed the amendment to rule XXII so that the two-thirds limitation would remain, just as it is, but provided that debate upon any measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, could be closed by the adoption of a cloture petition.

The Saltonstall amendment to the rules was reported to the Senate on April 3, 1947, 43 days after the hearings had closed. It was placed upon the Senate Calendar, and absolutely nothing was done with it during the entire session of the Eightieth Congress. It died on the calendar at the close of the Congress last December.

This year similar resolutions were submitted and referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration on January 6. On January 24 the committee opened hearings on the five resolutions then pending. In order to save time, it was agreed that only the testimony of Senators would be taken, because it was felt that they knew better than anyone on the outside what changes should be made in the rules of the Senate.

Hearings began on January 24 and were concluded last Monday, the hearings extending over a period of approximately 8 days.

Yesterday the committee met to determine what to do about the several cloture resolutions, and, after discussion among the members, it was evident that a number of the Senators had not yet made up their minds as to exactly what procedure they wanted to follow, and a reasonable time was asked in which they might give further consideration to the subject.

The Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] embarrassed me somewhat by moving on yesterday that the committee favorably report a resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and myself which proposed that cloture may be applied in all instances by a two-thirds majority; but I felt justified in voting for a motion to adjourn the committee for 1 week in order that members of the committee, particularly the new Senators, might have an opportunity to determine what they should do.

I will say frankly to the Senate that I am well satisfied that of the committee of 13, at least 7 are opposed to any change in the rule which would permit a mere majority of the Senate to impose cloture.

There are two resolutions pending before the committee—one by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] and another by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] providing that a mere majority may bring debate to a close. Another resolution, submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], is in identical language with the resolution as finally reported from the committe to the Senate last year. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], and I in a resolution submitted by us also proposed that the Senate shall consider the text of the resolution which was favorably reported to the Senate last year, making possible cloture by a two-thirds vote.

Not only does the committee have the problem of considering what it shall do, but it also has the problem, as I pointed out in a statement made to the committee at the opening of the hearing, of giving consideration to what the Senate will do after an amendment to rule XXII is reported to the Senate. There is a great divergence of opinion as to just what should be done.

Let us first consider the procedure in the Senate when a motion is made to proceed to the consideration of an amendment to the rules. That motion is debatable indefinitely under the present rules. So it is quite certain that there will be discussion for some time as to whether the Senate should consider the proposal at all.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Does the Senator from Arizona agree with me when I say that if there is to be a change in the rule, it is proper that the question should be brought up early in the session, in order that the Senate may take advantage of the change of the rule, if a change is to be made, and in order, if there is to be no amendment of the rule, that we may know it and go ahead with the ordinary business of the Senate? In other words, should not we act on the matter as speedily as possible, one way or the other?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator from Massachusetts will agree with me, I am sure, that up to now the Committee on Rules and Administration has acted as speedily as possible. My protest is that we have been accused of a lack of diligence, an accusation not justified by the facts.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I am sure the Senator from Arizona will agree with me that it has been the custom in committees, in the case of absent Senators or new Senators, to give them 2 or 3 weeks' additional time for the study of important matters before the committee; in other words, when requests for additional time are made under those circumstances such requests have been granted.

Mr. HAYDEN. Of course, we were faced with that situation in the committee. But I wish to state that the Senators who are members of the committee gave up their other business, held consecutive hearings which were concluded within 8 days, and no other Senator who desired to testify failed to have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. LANGER. But has it not been the rule, during the last 8 years, at least, in connection with committee consideration and proceedings, that if a new member of the committee or a member who had been absent wished to familiarize himself with the testimony in regard to a particular measure, as a matter of courtesy he has been allowed 1 or 2 weeks within which to do so?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator is correct as to that. Usually such courtesy is extended.

I have described the way our committee has proceeded. Now, to get back to the situation in the Senate when the question of whether the amendment to the cloture rule is to be considered at all, that question, as I have said, is debatable; and we do not know how long the debate on it will last. It has been suggested that if the occupant of the chair at the time were to reverse the established precedents of the Senate, and were to decide that a cloture petition could be filed on a motion to proceed to the consideration of a measure, then some time might be saved.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I wonder whether the very simple solution the Senator suggests would be an appropriate subject of a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair.

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not care to have the Chair take up my time at the moment.

The situation I have described remains true, to the extent that no one now knows whether the Senate would sustain such a ruling, if it were made by the Chair. That would have to be developed, after some discussion, perhaps, upon a motion to lay on the table an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Nevertheless, assuming all that were done, then the Senate would again be faced with the fact—and there is no escape from it—that in order to bring such a proposed change in rule XXII to a vote in the Senate, under the present rules it would be absolutely necessary for two-thirds of the Senators present to vote in favor of cloture. That is where we encounter a great deal of difficulty, as Senators can appreciate, because I find the feeling to be quite general among Senators that they do not wish to have any proposal become a Trojan horse which would bring before the Senate an amendment to the rule, ostensibly on a two-thirds basis, but, once cloture was adopted for its consideration, would then be open to an amendment in the Senate to reduce the number to a mere majority. I doubt whether two-thirds of the Senators present will vote for cloture on any amendment to rule XXII unless they thoroughly understand that it means two-thirds cloture, and not a majority cloture, because the general sentiment in the Senate, as I understand it, is decidedly opposed to majority cloture.

If some feasible way could be found whereby it might be known that a majority of the Senators are opposed to majority cloture then I think perhaps it might be possible for the Senate to adopt such a cloture rule as is provided in Senate Resolution 15. But until some understanding of that kind is developed, I am quite sure that there will be very great difficulty in bringing the debate to an end. There certainly will be very great difficulty in finding a two-thirds majority in the Senate willing to vote for cloture, so that anything at all can be done about it. That is my judgment. Senators can take it for whatever they think it may be worth.

I am making this statement today, Mr. President, because I can see no occasion at this time for the adoption of the resolution presented by the Senator from California, and I hope it will not prevail when it comes before the Senate.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Arizona has undertaken to defend himself against what he says are charges of dereliction that are implied by the filing of the resolution offered by the Senator from California. I wish to take the other side of the matter, and with profound regret criticize my friend, the Senator from Arizona, for the speed with which he has hastened the committee's consideration of the cloture resolution. There is certainly nothing more important that can possibly come before the Senate of the United States than the matter of changing the rules of this body. Every additional day a member of the Senate remains here, he attaches more importance to the rules and the precedents which guide our deliberations.

I think the Senator from Arizona has rushed this matter along. I know he gave all of us an opportunity to be heard; but in the committee there was a feeling that we were somewhat imposing upon it; and out of deference to the committee I did not make a very lengthy statement.

Not only did the committee take much longer in its deliberations in the Republican Eightieth Congress, as the Senator from Arizona has stated, but this year we have had an inauguration, which we did not have 2 years ago, and none of the committees could begin functioning until after the inauguration of the President of the United States.

The Republican Congress not only gave the proposed changes longer consideration in the committee, but after reporting it to the Senate permitted it to languish on the calendar for 2 years without ever making a simple motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Now the same men who had control of the last Senate, and who did not make any effort to press the change in the rule, bitterly complain because they cannot rush the matter to a quick conclusion.

The Senator from Arizona has handled this resolution with his usual diligence. He has brought it to a conclusion in the committee, and threatens to bring the resolution to the floor at some time in the very near future. I do not believe the Senate will discharge so diligent a committee. As has been correctly said, it is a matter of fundamental courtesy always shown Senators to allow them a reasonable time in which to read the hearings, for example, or refresh their minds, or make some collateral investigation of a matter brought before a committee.

Certainly the Senator from Arizona has not been derelict in his duty. He has expedited the committee's consideration of the resolution at such a pace that some of us who are opposed to it feel we have almost had it rammed down our throats. Of course, he did not accept the rather unusual proposition that a matter of this importance be presented to the Senate without any hearings at all, but he went as far as he could in that direction and confined the hearings to Members of the Senate. Only Senators could appear as witnesses. He has now closed the hearings, and because he has allowed Members who wished it a week's time to study this important matter, he is threatened with a resolution to discharge his committee. I would that the parliamentary situation under the rules of the Senate permitted me to file some kind of resolution that would force the committee to go into this important question more thoroughly. The Senator is always fair. In this instance I think, if he has erred at all, it has been on the side of pressing this matter, rather, to this point.

Mr. HAYDEN. It may be a habit of mine to try to perform as soon as I conveniently can any work that may be assigned to me in order that I may take up other duties. I felt in this instance that the Senators were busy with their work on other committees, and that they should not be asked to devote more time than was absolutely necessary in attending the sessions of the committee. I will say that the hearings were most interesting and should be read by Members of the Senate who could not find the time to be present.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would ask whether the Senator from Arizona has concluded?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have concluded.

ORDER DISPENSING WITH CALL OF THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next order of business is the calling of the calendar.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the calling of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORITY TO REPORT BILL

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may be authorized, during the adjournment following today's session, to report the export control bill (S. 548), and that it may be taken up for consideration Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REGULAR ARMY AND AIR CORPS NOMINATIONS

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Armed Services numerous routine promotions in the Regular Army and in the Air Corps. The Air Corps is the new arm of the Military Establishment, and has had to be reorganized in the last 2 years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the reports will be received.

Mr. TYDINGS. I also ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, that these routine promotions be confirmed, and that the President be notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, do I correctly understand from the chairman of the Armed Services Committee that there was no objection in the committee, and that so far as the chairman knows there is no objection to any of the nominations?

Mr. TYDINGS. The committee reported them unanimously, and there was not a single objection to any of them. Moreover, they are all routine promotions to fill up the Regular Army and the Air Corps, as provided by Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed, as in executive session, and the President will be immediately notified.

ELECTION OF CHAPLAIN

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, out of order, I send to the desk a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 54) as follows:

Resolved, That Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., of Washington, D. C., be, and he is hereby, elected Chaplain of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to, and Dr. Harris is chosen as the Chaplain of the Senate.

SUPPORT PRICE ON MILK

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, someone has stated that the politicians seem to have selected profit as public enemy No. 1. I can assure those who listen to me that profit is fast going out of the milk picture. In Wisconsin and in many other States, this is becoming so evident that recently there met in Chicago the representatives of seven different milk-producing States, namely, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Wisconsin, Ohio, Michigan, and Illinois. Those participating in that meeting came to the conclusion that the Government must immediately take action to support milk prices. Let me, as I have done on other occasions, state the situation concretely. In Wisconsin the milk prices at the present time are about $2.80 a hundred pounds. There are approximately 48½ quarts of milk to the hundred pounds, which makes the price about 6 cents a quart. When it is considered that we have a 60-cent dollar, it means that the farmer receives about 3.6 cents per quart, based on the 100-cent dollar.

Mr. President, we are very much concerned about labor; we are very much concerned about repealing the Taft-Hartley Act, and we are very much concerned about taxes. Yes, I know that some folks are very much concerned about giving China several billion dollars more, and of course we are concerned about continuing our $6,000,000,000 or $7,000,000,000 appropriation for Europe. What I am asking, Mr. President, is not that we shall fail to give appropriate evaluation to these subjects, but we should evaluate them in view of the fact that the States I have mentioned constitute, along with several others, the backbone of this country, the Mississippi Valley; and in view of the well-established fact that the prosperity of the farmer means the prosperity of the Nation, we had better make sure we do not injure the Nation's backbone. If we want economic health, we had better see to it that the milk farmers, comprising the largest segment of the farm industry, do not have their incomes sabotaged. It may be said the State of Wisconsin is about 50-percent industrial and 50-percent agricultural. Everyone knows the economic health of the villages and cities of my State, as well as of other States, depends upon the good, sound, economic health of the farmer. It depends upon the economic current flowing from the farm to the cities and villages, and from them, back to the farm.

So, today I ask, What is the Government going to do about it? I read in the newspaper last night an intimation that the Secretary of Agriculture was going to do something. I hope he will. I have no criticism. I have on my lips a prayer of hope that he will take immediate action, pursuant to the authority he has, to support the price of dairy products, to the end that the farmer may at least obtain the cost of production and a reasonable return for his investment and labor.

Let me repeat what I have many times said before on the floor of the Senate, that there is good Scriptural authority for what I am asking at this time. Paul, the great metaphysician, said:

> If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than the infidel.

So, while it may be well to look after strangers and look into distant continents and see the problems there, we had better get a new set of glasses and look at our local problems. It might be well for us to pause and consider our obligations to "our house" and how to build it strong morally, economically, and spiritually, instead of constantly looking into distant lands for an opportunity to do good.

Mr. President, the time is not far distant when there may be restated in this country the fact that persons who look to their own are not all to be placed in the category of "damned isolationists." After all, the best market in the world is in America, if we keep our economic current sound and healthy. There is no reflection on those who want to be good Samaritans abroad. There is a reflection, however, on those who do not sustain their own, who will not look after their own.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I am glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. McCARTHY. Am I correct in the statement that if we should support milk production at 90 percent of parity we actually would not add 1 cent to the milk bill of the citizens? Milk is now selling at retail for 18 or 20 cents a quart, so that a support of the milk price at 90 percent of parity which would be about 3.11 per hundred or less than 7 cents per quart would not add 1 cent to the milk bill of the consumer. Is that correct?

Mr. WILEY. I think it is substantially correct. Of course the question of parity is one which I do not care to enter into at this time, because there is a question of a restatement of it. There is a question of whether it is possible later to evaluate parity, taking into consideration market prices on the east coast, where the farmer is receiving from $4.50 to $5 a hundred, whereas in Wisconsin, he is receiving but $2.80. We send our powdered milk, rich in butterfat and ice-cream fats, to the East. I am thinking of the common-sense rule that "the labor is worthy of his hire." I know of no one who labors more diligently and industriously than does the farmer; and for his labor he should receive at least the cost of production, plus a reasonable return.

I have further comments to make——

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. First, let me say that I think the dairy farmers are fortunate in one respect, in that we now have a Secretary of Agriculture who seems to have an intelligent grasp of the problems of the dairy farmers. Is it not a correct statement that, while there is a temporary surplus of manufactured milk products, unless the price is supported many farmers will be forced to sell their dairy herds for beef, and that when that happens, ultimately persons in the cities who are buying cheese, butter, and milk will have to pay much more than would be the case if we were now to adopt a sensible support program? Would the Senator say that is correct?

Mr. WILEY. I think my colleague has made a substantially correct statement, except that I would not say that there is a surplus of milk products. I would say that there is a fault in our distribution system.

A short time ago I was present at a reception and was told by persons from

New York and from this great city that they had gone from store to store and could not obtain Wisconsin cheese. There is something wrong about that situation. It may have something to do with the present prices.

I am speaking for the farmer. He must have relief, because, considering the 60-cent dollar, and the costs amounting to $2.80 a hundred, we can see what the farmer is receiving. The farmer's problem is not simply failure to get a good price; his problem is in failing to obtain labor. It is further complicated by the fact that for everything he buys, his machinery and supplies, and other items, he must pay increased prices. The cost of labor has increased 400 percent over what he used to pay, and in order to meet that change in the situation, he must have machinery. I used the illustration several days ago, of the tractor which could be bought for $1,000, including some other equipment, but which has gone up in price to approximately $2,600. He is thus caught in a squeeze, which may mean, as suggested by my colleague, a lessening of the milk herds of the Nation. That means not only depletion of the soil but also ruinous devaluation of farms, a loss in taxable property, and more and more of a centralization of population in the cities. So it is a vicious circle. We are asking that the Government take action in connection with that downward trend.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, the price to the Wisconsin farmer has decreased from $4.50 to approximately $2.80, but in spite of that tremendous decrease, of 35 or 40 percent, actually the price to the consumer of liquid milk has not changed at all. The individual buying 1 or 2 quarts of milk a day is not benefited at all by the reduction in the price. All the dairy farmers are asking is that their business be stabilized to at least the same degree as that at which other branches of farming are stabilized. In other words, we have placed a support price under corn, flax, wheat, and other commodities but not under milk. The dairy farmers are merely asking for the same consideration. Is that correct?

Mr. WILEY. I again say that the statement of my colleague is substantially correct. In some places the price of milk to the consumer has been reduced 1 cent a quart. In other words, the price may have been 19 cents, and it has gone to 18 cents, the farmer receiving approximately 5 cents for his milk. That is a point which was never made clear to many people in the cities, who did not comprehend the problems of the farmer. Particularly in the last campaign, the farmer was held up as a gouger in certain places, and he was also told that his prices would be kept up. Both statements have proved to be fallacious.

Mr. President, the first point my colleague made was as to the price, and I have answered that. What was the second point?

Mr. McCARTHY. The dairy farmers are not asking for anything which the other branches of agriculture have not already received. In other words, our dairy farmers are merely saying, "You have stabilized the price of corn, the price of wheat, the price of tobacco; we merely ask now that you do the same for the dairy industry you have long since done for other branches of agriculture."

I should like to make it clear that what I am saying is not intended as criticism of our present Secretary of Agriculture. I think he has a more intelligent grasp of the problem of the dairy farmer than any Secretary of Agriculture has had for a long time—excluding, of course, the junior Senator from New Mexico, who was Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, in speaking on this subject I am not merely speaking for the dairy farmer. I am speaking for what might be called the public interest. I have already stated, first, that the backbone of the Middle West is the dairy farmer, and when the farmers of Illinois met a few days ago—and I see the distinguished senior Senator of Illinois smiling—they joined in the demand for the constructive action I have asked to have taken by the administration.

Mr. President, I am not merely speaking for the dairy farmers. I say that when there is any segment of our society that is very ill, the disease transmits itself to every other segment; and when such an important segment as the dairy farmers, who, by virtue of their industry being what it is, have no control over their prices, cannot fix their prices, it might be said they are in a hole; and in view of the dairy industry being the largest segment among the farm industries of the United States, and in view of the fact that it produces the food that is best for human kind, it is not asking favoritism of the Government; it is merely asking a "fair deal," and that, I understand, is the slogan of the new administration. I would say give it a square deal, and see that adequate prices are provided.

Mr. President, I shall now return to the remarks I had prepared, which will not be long.

We now have an opportunity to do good for our own—and I am using the phrase so often employed among the do gooders—for the dairy farmer is of our house, and I am not one of those who want to deny the faith and be worse than an infidel. Oh, I know it probably does not have very much noise appeal, as do some of these other ideas that are being thrown into the political jackpot to gain the attention of the electorate, but I know, Mr. President, it has in it a thing of substance that goes to the question of maintaining the vitality of the Nation.

Mr. President, recently there appeared in the Evening Star an editorial entitled "Mr. Truman Pays a Debt." It was a very good editorial, which I ask to have printed at the end of my remarks. It relates to what lengths the administration is willing to go to pay its obligation to the labor leaders of this country. If any Senators have not read this editorial, they should because it is very pertinent to this issue.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, there was a segment of our dairy farmers that voted for Mr. Truman because they had been made to fear that "if the Republicans get in it will result in a deterioration of dairy prices." I know whereof I speak, because many in my own State, while they voted the State Republican ticket, had been made to fear on this subject and voted for Mr. Truman. The farmers are asking in this case for no special privilege, they are asking that they get at least the cost of production out of the goods they produce and which mean so much to the health and the vitality of the Nation.

Mr. President, if one could think of producing anything for 6 cents a quart or less—that is, a whole quart, not a fifth, as in the case of something else I might mention—could one think of producing anything comparable to milk for 5 cents a quart, or 6 cents a quart? Yet here is the best food in the world, nature's food, full of the rich substance of butterfat, full of the great mineral and food requirements that we must have in our bodies, and it is all for 6 cents. Of course, purchasers pay more, because of handling charges and distribution charges. They pay anywhere from 18 to 21 cents.

Now, my good friends of the opposition, if you feel you owe a debt for that fear propaganda that was interjected into the campaign—no, I will not say that, I will say if you feel that the producers of this great food have a right to the cost of production and a little bit in addition, is there not more involved than even paying a debt? There is a question of maintaining the national economy.

Mr. President, I do not want to see a return of that condition, a condition which really resulted in my being sent to the Senate, a condition when there were foreclosures, when I sold the milk from my own farm at from 95 cents to $1.25 a hundred, when farms were being foreclosed by the thousands, by governments and by insurance companies, when men were cracking up because they saw what they had accumulated go out the window. Mr. President, that was from 1933 up to the time when the war came on this Nation, and that farm situation continued. I do not want to see a repetition of that. The Government owes an obligation, and I want to see that obligation discharged.

MR. TRUMAN PAYS A DEBT

The President's version of a new labor law, drafted in consultation with union lawyers, reveals a distressing willingness to bow to the demands of the labor bosses.

This bill makes a mockery of any rights which employers might be supposed to have. Except in one tiny area, it gives the green light to unions to take whatever they can get by the use of economic force, and, finally, it does not protect the public against strikes designed to attain a union objective by depriving the Nation of some essential commodity or service. Small wonder that the administration men in the Senate are trying to railroad the bill through without adequate hearings, for it is not a measure which can meet the test of full and honest scrutiny.

The Taft-Hartley Act, which has been condemned in emotional terms because it cannot be substantially discredited by any factual showing, tried to bring about some balance between unions and industry. It sought to equalize the one-sided relationship that grew out of the original Wagner Act. This new bill repeals the Taft-Hartley Act and revives the Wagner Act in an amended form which promises to be more unjust to industry than was the original law. The Taft-Hartley Act assumed that employers and employees were entitled to equality under the law. The President's bill clearly repudiates that assumption, and stands on the premise that unions should have special and favored treatment. As an illustration, the President will lift all restraints on political spending by his union political allies. But the ban on political contributions by corporations and banks would be continued in effect.

The President's bill recognizes only two improper union practices. These are certain types of jurisdictional strikes and secondary boycotts designed to maintain a proscribed jurisdictional strike, and even in this drastically limited area the remedies proposed are so time-consuming that, for practical purposes, they are apt to prove ineffective.

On the larger issue of strikes which threaten the life of the Nation the President's bill is deplorably inadequate. In this respect the Taft-Hartley law offered little enough—at best, an 80-day stay of a crippling strike through resort to the unjunction process. The President's bill knocks out any appeal to the courts. It provides only that when a dispute threatens the national health or safety the President may issue a proclamation calling upon the parties to stay on the job for 30 days. It says that the parties "shall" observe this proclamation, but there is nothing which requires them to do so. It is further provided that the President appoint a fact-finding board which would investigate the dispute and make recommendations for settlement. The bill does not require either party to accept the recommendations.

In practical effect this would mean that the White House would be back in the business of mediating major labor disputes. We have had unhappy experience with that procedure in the past, and if this bill becomes law we will have more unhappy experiences in the future. Presumably, the Government could bring enough pressure to bear to compel an employer to accept a fact-finding body's recommendation. But it has been amply demonstrated that the Government, without the aid of the Federal courts, cannot similarly coerce a strong union. So, as a practical matter, what Mr. Truman proposes is that the Government be disarmed as the representative of all the people when their welfare is threatened by a strike.

There are a variety of other things wrong with the President's bill. Among these are the devices to return the Conciliation Service to the Labor Department, to knock out State bans on the closed shop, to cut down the general counsel of the Labor Board, and to lift the curbs on Communist domination of unions. Fortunately, however, the bill cannot be fastened on the country without Senate approval. As it stands, it represents a handsome payment by the President of his political debt to organized labor. But the Members of the Senate are not under the same political obligation. They are free to examine all of the provisions of the measure and to debate them fully. This will be done, and that debate will be one which the people of this country would be well advised to follow with close attention.

THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN CENTENNIAL

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, on Saturday, February 5, there will be observed throughout the world, by alumni of the University of Wisconsin, founders' day—honoring that day 100 years ago when the first university class assembled for instruction at Madison.

I feel that I would be remiss if I did not invite the attention of my colleagues and of the Nation to the 100 candles in the birthday cake of this great State university. It is not only a natural pride that any legislator would feel for the State university of his own particular State, his alma mater, which prompts these remarks. Rather, it is the fact that the University of Wisconsin has achieved a fame for pioneering in higher education, which is the pride not only of the citizens of the Badger State but of all the 48 States.

The brilliant achievements of the university in the field of education, of science, of the arts, of political science, of technology, of agriculture, are so many in number and so diverse, that it would require volumes for me to give them appropriate description. In this connection, Mr. President, I commend to the attention of my colleagues the Sunday, January 30, 1949, centennial section published in the Wisconsin State Journal and in the Madison Capital Times—a brilliant edition of which any American newspaper might well be proud.

To the faculty and students of the University of Wisconsin, we bid Godspeed in celebration of this one hundredth anniversary and in entering the second century of progress for the good of mankind. As far back as last June, I pointed out the many celebrations which are being and have been held in connection with this centennial, and I am glad to add these few additional words of comment in tribute to a great university, a leader among universities, and a great educational tradition of freedom, of adventure, of going forward—the University of Wisconsin.

TRANSFER OF BUSHNELL GENERAL HOSPITAL NEAR BRIGHAM CITY, UTAH

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, I reported favorably, earlier today, Senate bill 170, with an amendment. The bill authorizes and directs the Administrator of the War Assets Administration to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior, for use by the Bureau of Indian Affairs as a vocational school for Indian children and a center for housing and training adult Indians for off-reservation employment and placement, the property known as the Bushnell General Hospital, near Brigham City, Utah. The Indians in question are Navajo Indians. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of the bill. I may say again that the bill was reported from the committee unanimously. There was no objection to it.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, do I correctly understand from the Senator that time is of the essence; that if the bill is not acted upon promptly it will be of no particular value?

Mr. HOEY. That is true. Unless the transfer is made in time so that an appropriation can be made to take care of the school this year, it will not be of any benefit to the 22,000 Navajo Indian school children who will be served by this transfer and by converting the property into a vocational school property.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 170) to authorize the transfer of certain property to the Secretary of the Interior, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Interior," to insert "without reimbursement or transfer of funds."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of the War Assets Administration is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior, without reimbursement or transfer of funds, for use by the Bureau of Indian Affairs as a vocational school for Indian children and a center for housing and training adult Indians for off-reservation employment and placement, the property known as the Bushnell General Hospital near Brigham City, Box Elder County, Utah, comprising 298.5 acres, more or less, together with roads, buildings, and other betterments thereon.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to take over the property as soon as Congress has appropriated the necessary funds to provide for alterations, maintenance, and operation.

TRIAL OF JOSEF CARDINAL MINDSZENTY, PRIMATE OF HUNGARY

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, more than a month ago the Communist-dominated Government of Hungary announced the arrest of Josef Cardinal Mindszenty, primate of that country, on suspicion of plotting against the Government, spying, treason, and black-market dealings.

On December 29, 1948, the Honorable Robert A. Lovett, the then Acting Secretary of State, denounced the arrest as "a sickening sham," terming it the culmination of a long series of oppressive acts by the Hungarian Government against personal freedoms, human freedoms, and now religious freedom.

Mr. Lovett declared that the charges upon which the cardinal's arrest allegedly were based were patently false, and that the unwarranted arrest indicated what the attitude of the Hungarian Government is toward the liberties to which the rest of the world attaches the greatest importance.

In a statement issued on December 28 by the National Lutheran Council, in New York, the Reverend Dr. Paul C. Empie, executive director, asserted that the cardinal's arrest was consistent with the policy of the Hungarian Government, which seeks to dominate and control every area of church life in that country. Lutherans throughout the world, Dr.

Emple added, deplore this additional instance of persecution of the Church of Hungary, and sympathize sincerely with the unfortunate victims of persecution behind the iron curtain.

Mr. President, now the trial of Cardinal Mindszenty is to begin. From advance notices already made public it is a foregone conclusion what the verdict will be. As a sequel to a travesty of justice it can be expected that the sentence will be either death or a lengthy term of imprisonment.

No stone is being left unturned, from all available accounts, in the efforts to remove this defender of democracy permanently from the Hungarian scene. The "sickening sham" of his arrest, so vigorously protested on behalf of our Government by Acting Secretary of State Lovett, will pale into insignificance, foreign sources tell us, in comparison with the shameless mockery of justice now starting to function.

Mr. President, the program of suppression against the Hungarian primate has followed a familiar pattern. First, a policy of attempted intimidation, culminating in the arrest of his secretary, followed by the merciless "questioning" of that unlucky person to obtain a "confession" that would involve his superior. Then the arrest of the cardinal, on trumped-up charges of suspicion—suspicion, mind you—of plotting against the Government, of spying, treason, and, ridiculous to relate, of black-market dealings.

It must be admitted that the Communist leadership made frantic efforts to avoid arresting the outstanding religious figure in the nation. They had tried to still his voice by forbidding him to appear at public gatherings, except in church; they had banned the Catholic Youth groups; they had arrested his priests; they had prohibited religious processions, and ordered the discontinuance of all but a few minor church publications.

Was it for plotting, or treason, or black market operations, that Cardinal Mindszenty was arrested? Or was it because, as the correspondent of the London Times reported, that "The only surviving center of opposition (to the illegal Communist government) was the Catholic Church under the leadership of the primate of Hungary, Cardinal Mindszenty"?

Was it because the Moscow-trained occupation officials found him, as the Nazi occupation forces earlier had found him, a focal point and unyielding symbol of resistance to despotism, when they, too, were forced to carry him off to prison to still his potent denunciation of tyranny?

The world knows by now how to evaluate correctly the "confessions" gained from Communist prisoners, by their unique and ingenious methods. Already, it is reported, the cardinal has "confessed" and talk of drugs is heard, new drugs that deaden the consciousness, and make the person under questioning ready to admit anything the torturers demand of him.

Now, the news from Hungary says, petitions are being circulated among workers and peasants demanding the utmost in punishment for Cardinal Mindszenty. Thousands undoubtedly will sign them, for to disobey would involve serious, even tragic, consequences.

Further these accurate reports say, a special tribunal is set up for the trial, composed entirely of judges whose hopes for future preference rest solely upon their subservience to the Communist regime. Indeed, a meeting of influential Communist leaders already has been held, we are told, to determine upon the sentence to be imposed at the conclusion of the farcical proceedings.

The end of this latest attempt to eradicate, by violence, all opposition to the illegal government of Hungary may be foreseen. The very violence used is a confession of fear and of impotence on the part of Hungary's oppressors. Instead of stilling the voice of justice and freedom, however, it will engrave indelibly on the hearts of freedom-loving people everywhere, we may be confident, the unforgettable words of courage and good will with which he addressed the people of his country in his final pastoral, which was broadcast to the people of Hungary by the Voice of America when suppressed by the Communist officials.

I stand for God, church, and my country—

The intrepid cardinal declared.

I pray for the world of justice and brotherly love; I pray for those who, in the words of my Master, know not what they are doing. I forgive them with all my heart.

Every American, who values the freedoms which are his precious birthright, will protest this latest Communist move to crush all opposition and particularly to still the voice of religion, the only vocal force abroad now standing in the path of complete Communist conquest. We must condemn such an attack on free institutions.

Because it depicts so clearly the true meaning of events in Hungary revolving around Cardinal Mindszenty, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the body of the RECORD, at this point in my remarks, an excerpt from an editorial in America, issue of January 8, 1949, entitled "The Challenge of Mindszenty."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CHALLENGE OF MINDSZENTY

In arresting Cardinal Mindszenty, the Communists are clearly making a test of strength. They have done what Hitler dared not do in Germany. If their brazen action passes uncensured by a world-wide movement of revulsion and protest, the Communists will know that they can affront the conscience of the world and get away with it. The whole world must rally to Mindszenty's defense. Said the cardinal himself in his statement of November 16: "Two of my predecessors fell on the field of battle; two were dispossessed of all they had * * * John Vitez (fifteenth century) was thrown into jail; Martinuzzi fell at the hands of assassins, hired by the mighty ones of his day (1551) * * * and Pazmany (1616–37), the greatest of all, was sent into exile. * * * But of all my predecessors, no one stood as bereft of means of defense as I do." This is not a juncture where any believers in justice can say it is none of their concern. Here is a question of a naked show of force—godless tyranny against man's spiritual nature. Through Cardinal Mindszenty communism is striking at the spiritual nerve of the West—at those religious values which are the West's strongest defense against totalitarian atheism. All who believe in these values will join with the world's Catholics to protest the injustice which is being staged in Hungary today.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of mankind, amid the contradictory currents of this day, teach us that faith which will keep us strong and patient; which will lift us above the need of praise, and stresses works rather than words.

Make manifest unto us the wonder of our privilege of working together for the common good. Under all conditions, may our country be first on the honor roll of the world. O sustain us by Thy strength, inspired by the ageless truth that right makes might, and eternal truth is the only sword. In the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE LATE DEAN M. GILLESPIE

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, those of us who served with the Honorable Dean M. Gillespie in the Seventy-eighth and Seventy-ninth Congresses heard with profound sorrow of his untimely death on February 2, 1949.

Mr. Gillespie was elected to the House March 7, 1944, at a special election held in the First District of Colorado to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the Honorable Lawrence Lewis. Mr. Gillespie was reelected to the Seventy-ninth Congress, and served as a member of the Appropriations Committee.

I knew Mr. Gillespie for many years. He was a great business and community leader. He truly represented the personal opportunity and private-enterprise efforts offered to young men everywhere under our form of government. He organized and managed many business enterprises—all of them successfully. He was a tireless worker with abundant energy—a friendly man who respected and appreciated those with whom he worked and cooperated. He had great courage and boldly stood foursquare on great issues which he knew and understood could not be compromised.

Mr. Gillespie was born in Salina, Kans., May 3, 1884, a son of a pioneer physician. He moved to Denver, Colo., in 1905 and went into business for himself. At his death he was president of the Dean Gillespie & Co.; vice president and treasurer of Bluhill Foods Corp. of Denver; president, Motoroyal Oil Co., Denver, He was a member of the Denver Rotary, Denver Athletic Club; member of Society of Automotive Engineers, Society for Research of Meteorites, and Society of American Military Engineers. He also was an Elk, Mason, and a Shriner.

Greatly appreciating his high qualities of citizenship, loving and admiring his character and personality, all of his friends and associates of the Congress pause a moment to pay tribute to this great American. And to his daughters and grandchildren we extend our deepest and most sincere sympathy.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARSALIS].

Mr. MARSALIS. Mr. Speaker, I learned with deep regret yesterday of the death of Dean Gillespie, a former Member of this body. While it was not my privilege to have had a personal acquaintanceship with Mr. Gillespie during his lifetime, I did know him as one of the outstanding business and political leaders of the State of Colorado. His business activities reached into nearly every section of the State and in my district there were large billboards that advertised the Dean Gillespie & Co. His friendships also extended over the entire State. Many of his friends in my district have frequently referred to his ability, his fine character, and his human qualities.

Colorado has, indeed, lost an outstanding leader and citizen and his family has lost a devoted husband and father.

I join with the other members of the Colorado State delegation in paying tribute to his memory and in offering my deepest sympathy and condolences to his family.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, Dean Gillespie came here with great business experience. He was a fine character and very able citizen. He was on the Committee on Appropriations in the Seventy-ninth Congress and served very effectively on the Committees on the State, Justice, and Commerce, and the Treasury and Post Office. He was diligent. He was forceful; he was effective on the floor. That kind of man is one that this country can ill afford to lose. I wish to extend to his State of Colorado and to his family my sincerest and deepest regrets.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the death of my good friend Dean Gillespie came to me as a great shock. In his demise the country lost one of its most patriotic and able citizens. A successful businessman, he brought that viewpoint into the political life. He served with distinction and great ability as a Member of Congress and his retirement brought universal regret. To his family I extend my deepest sympathy. A great American has passed away.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we certainly have lost a great friend in the passing of Mr. Gillespie, a former colleague of ours. We mourn his passing because we realize that he was a man who was honest in his convictions. He was sincere in the things that he tried to do. He was capable and able. The Government has lost a great citizen. The State of Colorado has lost a man whom I am sure all the Members of Congress respected during his tenure of office. He certainly will be missed, not only by those who knew him but all those who have come to realize and appreciate the things he stood for and that he did in his lifetime. Those things are going to remain with us as a life of energy and accomplishments. Certainly he was a man who had great influence for good and for the things that make this world a better place in which to live.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, it was with great sorrow that I learned of the passing of Dean Gillespie. As a Member of Congress privileged to serve with him, I can only say that on every occasion I found him to be a man of the highest principle and of deep sincerity. He had a fine understanding of the problems that came before the Congress and the country.

He was a man of courage, intelligence, and conviction. I am sorry indeed that he has been taken from our midst. Every one of us who knew him and were privileged to serve with him can say that for his being among us and for his having served in the Congress of the United States the country and the world is a better place in which to live.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CARROLL].

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, I learned yesterday of the passing of one of Colorado's foremost citizens. His sudden death comes as a distinct shock, both to me and the other members of the Colorado delegation, and also to the many other friends in this body with whom he had served.

Dean M. Gillespie served as a Member of the House of Representatives from the First District of Colorado during the Seventy-eighth and Seventy-ninth Congresses. He was elected to Congress on March 7, 1944, after the death of Lawrence Lewis, who had represented the district many years.

Dean Gillespie brought to this body the viewpoint and convictions of a successful businessman who, through his own industry and ability, had reached a place of high stature in the business life of the city of Denver and the State of Colorado. His record in the House of Representatives was clear and consistent, and he never deviated from the principles in which he believed. His warm personality and his sincerity made him many friends during his service in Washington.

Although I was not intimately acquainted with Dean Gillespie, and although it fell to my lot to replace him in this body, it can be truthfully said that in all of our personal dealings he showed a spirit of friendliness and generosity which was characteristic of this fine American.

I know that the friends of Dean Gillespie in this body and the members of the Colorado delegation will join with me in expressing sincere regrets and deepest sympathy to his two daughters on this occasion.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point the remarks of the senior Senator from Colorado, Hon. EDWIN JOHNSON.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(The remarks of Senator JOHNSON are as follows:)

Dean M. Gillespie was one of the most useful citizens of this country whom I have ever known. In fact, he was a great American from every standard of measurement. His parting is a distinct loss to his State and his Nation. As a very close personal friend, I feel his loss keenly.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to insert following the remarks of Senator JOHNSON, the remarks of the junior Senator from Colorado, Senator MILLIKIN.

The SPEAKER. Withou objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(The remarks of Senator MILLIKIN follow:)

I would like to join my colleague, Senator EDWIN JOHNSON, and the Members of the Colorado delegation in the House of Representatives in paying tribute to former Congressman Dean M. Gillespie, who represented the First District during part of the Seventy-eighth and the Seventy-ninth Congresses. His sudden death came as a shock and has saddened all of us.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. RABAUT].

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, it comes to me as a shock to hear of the death of our former colleague, Dean Gillespie, of Colorado. It was my happy privilege to be associated with him as a member of my Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and the Federal Judiciary. I knew him intimately. He was a sober, able, and industrious man. He set a splendid example in his travels with me to many parts of the world.

Dean Gillespie's passing is a loss to this Nation.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, another milestone along the highway of life has become a monument to a departed friend.

About 2 or 3 days ago my friend Mr. Dean Gillespie called me over the telephone and, failing to reach me, dictated a short statement to my secretary, praising the work I had done in trying to protect America against the subversive elements in this country. I will not quote what he said, but I considered it the greatest compliment I have ever received.

Dean Gillespie was one of the finest Americans who ever served in this House. We did not belong to the same political party. We did not agree on those issues that divide the two great political parties, but on those questions that go to the preservation of our form of government and our American way of life we did agree.

I cannot express my sorrow at learning of the death of Dean Gillespie, as I said, one of the greatest, finest, most patriotic men with whom I have ever served.

Goodbye, dear friend.

"And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest."

Thou'rt gone, the abyss of heaven
Hath swallowed up thy form; yet, on my heart
Deeply hath sunk the lesson thou hast given,
And shall not soon depart.

He who from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way that I must tread alone,
Will lead my steps aright.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend my deep sympathy to the family of Dean Gillespie and to the people of the State of Colorado at his untimely passing. I know of his great work here in the Congress. He was a tireless worker for his State and his country. He had business interests in my State for a matter of 25 years. He was well known and highly regarded throughout the entire State of Wyoming. We will miss him in the years that lie ahead.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, the news of the passing of our former colleague came to me as a distinct shock.

One of the inestimable privileges of service in this House is that it is the only means known to a citizen of this country whereby he may have the privilege of knowing intimately and enjoying the friendship of men worth knowing from every section of this great country. Dean Gillespie was a typical American. Nature cast him in a big mold. He was great of mind and heart. He loved people, he loved his family, his friends, and his country. There was in this House no more generous man. He delighted to talk to his friends, to entertain them, and to be with them. He was eminently successful in his business. He was a diligent, able, and effective Member of this House. His passing is a grievous loss to those who knew and loved him, and to his country which he served so well while a member of this body.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, we who served with Dean Gillespie knew the sterling qualities he possessed and the attributes which made up his splendid American character.

It was my privilege to pass through Denver last year. I stepped into a haberdashery store and talked with a clerk. I asked him about Dean Gillespie. We often measure a man by what his neighbors and associates say of him. This clerk spoke very highly of him and told me that the people of the city of Denver felt that he was one of the finest friends they had ever known in public life.

I came to know him well in the brief period he served here. While he was a Member of this House, he pursued his duties with sincerity of purpose. He always voted his convictions and was devoted to the truth.

Dean Gillespie helped build the better America in which we live today.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Like my colleagues, I, too, received the news of the passing of Dean Gillespie, my good friend, with deep regret and sorrow. It was my privilege to know him well. I was his guest in Denver, Colo., a few years ago. We visited on several occasions about the great West of early days because he was a friend of the old West. He was one of very few people still living in this country who knew of conditions in the early days of the West. He was a personal friend of Col. William F Cody—Buffalo Bill.

As a businessman, and as an American, Dean Gillespie had no peer in this country. When the type of man Dean Gillespie was no longer lives in the United States the Republic of which we are citizens will no longer exist. He was a man of generous impulses. He was a strong and stalwart American, an able legislator, a good man. I have lost a warm friend and our country a distinguished citizen.

I extend my sympathy and sorrow to his family and to his many friends. Someone years ago appropriately said that "as the years go by the milestones become headstones and beneath every one a friend."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I want to join the others in paying tribute to the life and character of the late Representative Dean Gillespie of Colorado. Mr. Gillespie's service in the House was not long, but he did a good job in the time that he was here. He came to Congress with the background of a successful businessman. As I understand, he started from scratch and made his own way. It is often said that there are not enough businessmen in Congress. Well, Dean Gillespie was the best example of the fact that a good businessman in Congress is a genuine asset. He was soon recognized for his true worth, his courage, his fairness, his kindliness, and his practical approach to all legislative matters.

Few men succeed in obtaining a place on the powerful Appropriations Committee in as short a time as did Dean Gillespie. He was an ideal worker and made a splendid impression on all of us. In short, I think all who knew him liked him, regardless of our political affiliations.

I did not have the privilege of being acquainted with his family, but I do want to join with the others in this tribute to the memory of a distinguished colleague.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have the privilege of extending their remarks at this point in the RECORD in reference to Mr. Gillespie.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that I read in the paper today of the death of Dean Gillespie, a former Member of the House from Colorado.

It was my great privilege to have been a close friend of Dean, and I say without reservations that we have lost a real American. I visited Dean in his home in Denver and I know how well the people regard him in Colorado.

Dean Gillespie is a fine example of what this country offers in opportunity to the man who has initiative, courage, and integrity. He was successful in all ventures he undertook. He had all the attributes which make up a real man, such as character, generosity, and kindness.

Therefore I take this opportunity to pay my humble respects to the late Dean Gillespie.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have just learned of the fact, very distressing, that my good friend Dean Milton Gillespie died on Tuesday. It is unnecessary for me to say that he served his State with notable ability as one of the great men Colorado has furnished the Nation and was one of the most distinguished members of the Seventy-eighth and Seventy-ninth Congresses. The record proves that.

Dean Gillespie was my next-door neighbor on the fourth floor of the Old House Office Building. I knew him intimately and very well.

As I judge men, he possessed in a very real and rare degree those outstanding qualities and elements of character we Americans esteem and apprize in others most highly.

It was interesting for me, from my standpoint as an old member, to watch him grow in mental stature to fill the great frame which carried his heart and brain. He illustrated that capacity inherent in man to outgrow such restrictions as are imposed by environment and local usage. He legislated for the whole country.

His frankness was compelling. His business honesty, which had spelled for him great success therein, made him hate hypocrisy and sham and deceit, and he saw through every such curtain as if it were glass.

He believed and he justified the statement that a public office is a public trust.

We mourn his passing. We cannot afford to lose such men of diamondlike integrity as was he, for his honesty of purpose, fixity of conviction, definiteness of decision, businessman as he was, made him a very great asset to those with whom he closely associated and to all his colleagues.

Colorado and the country lost a great son when, as Bunyan said of Valiant for Truth, Dean M. Gillespie—

> Passed over as all the trumpets sounded
> For him on the other side.

FURTHER APPROPRIATION FOR DISASTER RELIEF

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. KERR moves that the rules be suspended and the joint resolution making further appropriation for disaster relief and for other purposes, House Joint Resolution 136, be passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read House Joint Resolution 136, as follows:

> Resolved, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sum:
> FUNDS APPROPRIATED TO THE PRESIDENT
> Disaster relief: A further amount for disaster relief, $500,000, subject to the limitations and restrictions under this head in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1948.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, the pending resolution before you is similar to the one enacted last week and involves relief for the disaster-stricken areas in the West. Much headway has already been made in relieving the suffering of both human and animal life; however, the continuation of the snows and blizzards has made this additional amount of $500,000 necessary. This will complete in full the President's request for this purpose of $1,000,000. In addition to this, the President has authorized from funds made available for the current year the amount of $300,000 for relief purposes. I also wish to state that the President has directed the National Military Establishment to expend such sums as may be required for this purpose from any funds which may be available to the armed services.

To summarize, the following has now been allocated for disaster relief:

|---|---|
| Original allocation | $300,000 |
| H. J. Res. 112 | 500,000 |
| H. J. Res. 136 | 500,000 |
| Total | 1,300,000 |

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. VURSELL. I would like to ask if any of this money may be used in flood disaster relief. We have a very serious flood situation bordering on 100 miles of river front in southern Illinois in my particular district. There is great devastation. The State is trying to get some relief. There is an attempt being made to pass a bill, I believe, to get relief from the State. I introduced a bill for general disaster relief with reference to floods yesterday, and I am wondering if it is contemplated that any of this money might be used where it was imperatively necessary to alleviate suffering by reason of flood disaster, or is this for the sole purpose of the blizzard condition in the Northwest?

Mr. KERR. Frankly, I think this resolution and the items I referred to can only be used for blizzard and storm relief.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. This is an emergency fund and could be used in the discretion of the President.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. For the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois, the committee report states that this fund is for use in the storm-stricken areas of the Midwest and West. I assume the report of the committee constitutes, while not binding, a direction.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The whole thing goes to the President. While the storm has been in the Midwest and the West—and which condition has been the driving force behind this appropriation—nevertheless this goes to the President with the authority to use it in his discretion, and he could go beyond it. He also has a small balance left out of this fund that he could use for any emergency item.

Mr. KERR. If you consider it as an emergency item then I think the gentleman from New York is probably correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. If that is so, then some of this money could be used up in New England in connection with the flooded areas.

Mr. TABER. It could be used out of this fund. There is money in this fund that is not covered in this appropriation.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think we ought to have the record clear so that the people in other areas will not be disappointed. As I understand, this is in connection with the storm-stricken areas in the Midwest and the West. Inasmuch as what the gentleman from New York says is probably correct, I think the President would feel constrained—I know I would if I were President—to use this money in connection with the disaster that visited the Midwest and the West. As much as I would like to make appropriations in other directions, I think in all fairness to the gentleman from Illinois you better concentrate on that directly.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. I quite agree with the majority leader that the intention was to allow the President to use this money principally for the stricken areas of the Midwest and the West, but technically the gentleman from New York may be correct; that he does have the power to use it elsewhere. I want to make clear, however, that it is my understanding that this money is sent to the States by the President to be used almost exclusively for the relief of human suffering and it is not to be used to open roads and trails, and to transport hay and feed to the suffering livestock in the West. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that several of the departments of the Government, particularly the Bureau of Land Management, have spent a large amount of money in opening roads to cities and towns and out to the ranches so that hay and feed could reach the stranded livestock. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from North Carolina, Judge KERR, if the committee proposes to bring in legislation that will reimburse the various departments including the Army for the expenditures that they have made from the funds appropriated in the last Congress.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. As to reimbursing the various departments of the Government, that could be done by action of the President. Under the direction of the President, some of the departments of the Government, especially the Army, have been told to exert their effort.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. If the gentleman will yield further, all these departments, particularly the Army, the Bureau of Land Management, and the Forest Service, have spent considerable sums of money on their own initiative. I insist, therefore, that the President has no way to reimburse these various departments. As I understand, several proposals have gone to the gentleman's committee asking that action be taken to reimburse the departments for the expenditures they have already made and are making pursuant to directions from the President.

Mr. RABAUT. Nothing has come to the committee with reference to reimbursing the various departments. These reimbursements would come up at the request of the President. The President is giving the orders to those departments under his powers.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. GRANGER. I wonder if the gentleman was right in that statement. The departments, as the gentleman from Wyoming has said, especially the Bureau of Land Management and the Forest Service, have exhausted funds that should be spent now. How does the gentleman propose that these departments continue to run?

Mr. RABAUT. In the regular course of business they will go to the budget to justify their expenditures and ask for a deficiency. It is up to the departments to do that. The budget is in the Executive Office. It will then come to the Congress, and find its way to the Deficiency Subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GRANGER. Are we prepared to say that appropriations will be made to cover the expenditures that have already been made by the departments?

Mr. RABAUT. We could say that individual Members of Congress are very much interested in the actions the departments have taken, and it can be a matter of record when the question is later taken up, but it will depend on how much those appropriations have been depleted and what is needed to carry them on. If they desire reimbursement for the funds expended, they may make such a request to the budget, and that is in the executive department. We take the short cut of saying it is up to the President. Is that clear to the gentleman?

Mr. GRANGER. The gentleman is not saying now that any of the funds in the appropriation that is being made today will be used for that purpose?

Mr. RABAUT. That is entirely within the discretion of the President.

Mr. GRANGER. Does the gentleman mean to say that the President can use emergency funds to reimburse departments that have spent money?

Mr. RABAUT. He could if he wished. I am not saying he is going to do it. We are not tying the President's hands.

Mr. GRANGER. I understand that this money goes direct to the States and they are the ones who put it out.

Mr. RABAUT. No; this money goes to the emergency fund of the President.

Mr. GRANGER. It has been the practice in connection with funds of this kind that they have been distributed and expended through State agencies.

Mr. RABAUT. Yes. He can do that. The gentleman knows that the committee has been very sympathetic to his request. He is the Member who originally brought the matter to the attention of the committee. In deference to the gentleman, I want him to understand that no one is at all opposed to it here. He is asking for an explanation of how this fund is used and then trying to say how it is used. This fund goes to the President's emergency fund, and the President has indicated that he wants to help relieve the disaster in the West.

Mr. GRANGER. Of course, I am in favor of that. I am also in favor of relieving the people who have already spent money and who do not have anything to operate on until we make funds available to them.

Mr. RABAUT. They have a right under our system of government to present their case for reimbursement to the Budget.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. I think the committee should be commended for what they are doing today, but I have a serious doubt if this is enough to do the job. May I call the attention of the House to the fact that year after year we make an appropriation for emergency flood relief, rescue work, sandbagging, and the like. Without a doubt this fund ought to be increased, and increased now. When this great snow commences to melt, we are going to have added to our present floods, floods throughout the length and breadth of the country that might be most severe.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. I do not believe that even $1,000,000 will be sufficient money to carry out the program that the President and his aide or coordinator have in mind in the Middle West. Every day letters and telegrams pour in saying that it is too little and too late. I, for one, think that the President ought to have the authority to handle the funds in keeping with this resolution. I believe that every cent of this money will be used in the storm-stricken areas of the West and Middle West and that it probably will not be enough.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman's statement, I would say that the President will have had, including this $500,000 appropriation, $1,300,000 in all. Over and above that he has delegated work to be done by the various agencies, as I said before, for these agencies to go out and assist in this relief work. Therefore, the amount expended is much in excess of $1,000,000 if this is to be measured in dollars and cents. Whether it is enough—whether what has been done is enough or not enough, only time will tell. It all depends on the weather. You must go back to Mark Twain's famous saying, "Everybody talks about the weather, but nobody does anything about it."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution has been brought to the floor of the House with the unanimous vote of the Committee on Appropriations. The whole problem has been approached on both sides of the aisle with the utmost sympathy for the situation that exists in the Middle West and the Northwest and with the desire in every possible way to be helpful. We have provided the full amount which the Bureau of Public Works asks for. If occasion arises where we have to consider this again, I am sure that the committee will be sympathetic.

On the other hand, the million dollars which has been appropriated, that is, with this resolution, and the $300,000 which was in the disaster relief fund of the President, which he used, are but a small part of the funds which are being used in connection with this operation. It is only fair that the folks in the West and Northwest should realize this. There are $50,000 in the President's disaster fund besides this particular set-up which can be used for an acute emergency in other directions if it is needed. I am sure that it is being approached on a broad scale and being approached sympathetically.

What will be done with this particular money is almost entirely an allocation to the States to operate with.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. GRANGER. I am sure we all appreciate the sympathy that has been expressed by the committee and the action that they have taken, but many of us from the West have urged these departments, every one of them in the storm areas, to get busy and help with the job. They have done it, but many of them have exhausted the funds that they already have to do their normal work.

We feel some responsibility in seeing that that fund is replenished. What is the committee going to do about that?

Mr. TABER. They will consider it when it is presented to them. I think I may speak for the committee in that connection. I am sure that is their disposition. I am sure that as soon as the departments have exhausted their funds and they are out of money that they will come. I have never known a department to be backward about doing that, and I do not think they will be in this particular instance.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. I appreciate the remarks of the gentleman from New York. As I said before, I understand the fund provided by this appropriation is sent to the States to be used practically entirely for human relief. In my own particular State the legislature has already appropriated $200,000 which was matched by the counties, and provided a total of $330,000 most, if not all, of which has been expended. They are presently considering an additional appropriation of $300,000, and when appropriated the State of Wyoming and the counties will have expended a total of $300,000 in fighting the storms. The people themselves have expended considerable money on their account and so considerably in excess of a million dollars has been spent in our State exclusive of Federal funds, if you take into consideration the expenditures by private individuals in fighting this storm. The various departments of the Government that helped immeasurably in opening roads and trails and transporting feed have exhausted most of their appropriations. I think some action ought to be taken in the very near future to reimburse those departments.

Mr. TABER. I do not have the slightest doubt but that any of those departments will come before the committee with a budget estimate as soon as they feel that their funds are down to a point where they need replenishment. I am sure that where funds have been used for this purpose and the appropriation is close to exhaustion or it looks like it is going to be because of what has been done to relieve the trouble due to the snow, the committee will give it very earnest consideration. I think I may say that, may I not, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. KERR. Yes; the gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I was much interested in the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. BARRETT]. The last part of his statement was that we would reimburse the States and counties——

Mr. TABER. No. That is not what the gentleman said at all. He said he hoped we would reimburse the treasuries of the Federal agencies that have spent their money in connection with this storm item.

Mr. RICH. I am glad I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the evidence clearly shows that the people of a number of the Midwest and Western States will have been visited in recent weeks by storms that they have never encountered before.

Assistant Secretary of the Interior Warne, in a letter dated January 27, 1949, to Senator O'MAHONEY, said in part:

> The storms that have swept the region repeatedly since December 22 are without precedent since the white man has penetrated the high plains in the intermountain area.

The case is very clear that immediate action certainly is necessary to bring relief to the people of this blighted area, or the area visited by these unprecedented storms; also, to do everything else possible to protect property, whether real, personal, or mixed, particularly the herds of animals in that great area which mean so much not only to the people living in the area but to the people of the entire country. To me, this action is a most refreshing incident on the part of the Congress. It shows how far we have advanced in our thoughts that the crying problems of any section are the problems of the people of all sections of the country. This is the true nationalistic spirit, and I use "nationalistic" in the sense that when a section of the country has problems such as the people of the Midwest and West have now, all sections should realize that it is their problem and the problem of the Federal Government to participate in either solely or in conjunction with the States affected to bring about the greatest relief possible to the people of the blighted area.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I agree fully with the remarks of the gentleman. I have had the opportunity to see some of the blizzard-swept States of the West recently. The situation is serious. It is an act of God that has developed into such a catastrophe that the United States Government certainly should come to the aid of the people in those regions. The President, I am happy to say, has already answered the appeal received from various governors of Western States. It is being handled in a nonpartisan manner and should continue to be so handled.

Mr. MCCORMACK. The gentleman is absolutely correct. I thank him for the contribution. It is fully nonpartisan. The President certainly has acted with sound judgment and courage; and the Congress is supporting him in his action. It will be remembered that last Saturday the President ordered the use of military funds to speed Federal relief in the western blizzard area. He sent a letter to Secretary of Defense Forrestal to have the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force spend whatever funds were needed without regard to existing apportionment. We can expect that the departments that have done so will ask the Congress to have the funds so used reappropriated, or that they be reimbursed by congressional action. I have no doubt but that Congress will do that. I have no doubt that the Appropriations Committee will not view too critically the action of the department heads in the spending of money on the Federal level to help the people of the States affected because action was necessary and it is not a question of consideration of what the Federal Government should do over weeks, it had to be done immediately; and when action has to be taken immediately we have got to view the judgment of the officials who take that action in the light of the necessities of the situation and not in the light of having plenty of opportunity to investigate, inquire, and marshal facts, and then sit back calmly over a reasonable or protracted period of time and form a judgment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

If no more time is desired, the Chair will put the question.

The question is on suspending the rules and passing the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and (on a division demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 123, noes none.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the joint resolution was passed.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce in addition to what I stated yesterday as the schedule for Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, that if a rule comes out of the Rules Committee extending the February 15 date on the legislative budget to May 1 I shall call that matter up on Monday.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, if this matter is to be called up it might as well be called up on Monday and be disposed of, but I would like to observe that the requirement for the determination of the legislative budget by February 15 was enacted by the Seventy-ninth Congress. In the Eightieth Congress we struggled with that problem and in the second session came to an agreement within the time of determination.

I rise only to express regret that the spirit and the letter of the proposed Reorganization Act adopted by the Seventy-ninth Congress is not being followed in this Congress. It does seem to me that if there ever was a time when the legislative branch of our Government should sit down and try to figure out what receipts can reasonably be expected and then try to cut the cloth of expenditures to fit the pattern of receipts, now is the time. Of course, if it goes over until May 1, I assume that many of the appropriation bills will have been disposed of, possibly most of them will have been disposed of. If that is true the original purpose, as I understand it, of the determination of the legislative budget will have been lost.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the members of the Ways and Means Committee, the Appropriations Committee, and the Members of this House should determine how much money we have and how much money we are going to spend. A lot of the things that have been proposed by the Chief Executive would never be enacted into law if we did that because we cannot afford it. The people of this country ought to know that and the sooner they know it the better.

It seems to me it is wrong to continue beyond the 15th of this month action by the responsible heads of this House. In my opinion, you ought to determine that before the 15th of February and not continue on until April or May or June. You will not have anything to stop you. You will be worse than a lot of spendthrifts. That is the only thing to stop you from doing it.

I hope that the Ways and Means Committee, including the gentleman from North Carolina, and the Appropriations Committee, including the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], will get together and determine before the 15th of February just what amount of money is necessary to spend, and then put the brakes on.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The action of the committee during the last Congress did not serve as a deterrent to the House in this respect. It did not stop action of the House at all. It did not have any effect on the action of the House in making appropriations.

Mr. RICH. We had a balanced budget last year. You are not going to get anywhere near a balanced budget this year. There is no one in this House I have a greater regard for than I do for the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I simply rose to announce an additional program. I have been listening with interest to my friend from Pennsylvania and on some later occasion I shall undertake to convince him of the errors of his way.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

PENSION BILL

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute for the purpose of making an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the Veterans' Committee of the House instructed me to announce to the House that Members of Congress will be heard by that committee on the pending pension bills on next Tuesday morning at 10:30.

Those of you who would like to appear before the committee and make statements are invited to do so. But any of you who want to insert statements in the record, if you will supply those statements to the committee on or by next Tuesday, they will be made a part of the record.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman does not mean to say that he is going to bring in a bill here now to provide pensions at the rate of $100 a month for veterans after they become 60 years of age? It seems to me that there are lots of veterans that will not want legislation of that kind.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania evidently has not read the bill. I am inviting him to come over and be heard before the committee next Tuesday or send over a statement to be inserted in the hearings.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I was not on the floor when the majority leader explained the situation as to legislation. The Committee on Rules met this morning to consider granting a rule on the first deficiency appropriation bill, but came to no conclusion because of the absence of certain facts which I hope will be forthcoming this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock when the committee will meet again. There has been an application for a rule on House Concurrent Resolution 23, namely, the budget resolution, extending the time from February 15 to May 1. I think the Committee on Rules in all likelihood will approve that concurrent resolution this afternoon so that the same can be considered tomorrow if there is no other business before the House. There may be two investigating resolutions reported from the Committee on Rules, and that may give the House something to consider tomorrow or the first of next week.

MERCI SHIP

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, the French ship Magellan steamed into New York Harbor yesterday carrying 49 railroad cars filled with French treasures, one for each State and one for the Capital. This is the gracious manner in which the French people say "merci" to the people of America for the Friendship Train conceived by the worthy journalist Drew Pearson. The Magellan is called the Merci Ship. Among the rare museum pieces are a Lafayette chair, a hat of Napoleon, a Louis XV sedan chair. President Auriol has sent 49 precious Sèvres vases. All are heartfelt gifts from France to the United States. These acts are great symbols of the long years of amity and accord between our two Nations. It is significant that 64 years ago another French ship, the S. S. Isere, sailed into New York Harbor carrying a bulky yet wondrous token of friendship and democracy, the Statue of Liberty, that now graces the port of New York and raises the torch of liberty for all. France again rewards us with her good will and friendship. Merci ships and friendship trains are excellent means of breaking down barriers and establishing good will among nations. We accept the gift of France with heartfelt thanks.

I also salute the distinguished French Ambassador Bonnet who has done so much to cement friendliest relations between our countries. He is a tower of strength to France as well as to the United States.

We salute our sister republic, France.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include in each extraneous matter.

Mr. WOOD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include four resolutions adopted by the 23 associations of the Women's Patriotic Conference.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, and include in one a radio address, and in the other a letter.

Mr. STIGLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. MULTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $177.50, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

ELECTIONS IN NORTHERN IRELAND

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, an election has been called for the 10th of February, to be held in the six counties of Northern Island. The unexpected announcement of these elections was made on January 20, and the candidates were given until January 31 to file their nominations. No reason has been given for calling this election, other than the statement of Sir Basil Brooke to the effect that it has become necessary to ask the people to reaffirm their determination not to desert the people of Great Britain in these hard times.

The haste with which this election has been called is in reality due to the alarm, which Sir Basil feels, concerning the growing sentiment in the northern counties of Ireland for union with the rest of Ireland. By calling these elections now, the old register, which was established in February of 1946, will be used, and anyone who has attained voting age since January 31, 1946, will not be entitled to vote in this election. Were the election to be held some 6 weeks later, the new register would be in effect and all who have recently turned 21 years of age would be eligible to vote. By eliminating these younger voters, Sir Basil hopes to be able to point to the results of this election as a proof that the people of Northern Ireland do not desire to be united with the rest of Ireland.

Because of the undemocratic methods being employed in this election, Mr. John A. Costello, the Prime Minister of Ireland, called for a conference to be held in the Mansion House in Dublin last Thursday, January 27. At this conference to study means of assisting the antipartition candidates of Northern Ireland, the leaders of all the parties in the Irish Parliament at Dublin, including the leader of the opposition, were present. Those attending the conference were: Mr. John A. Costello, Prime Minister, Fine Gael Party; Mr. W. Norton, Deputy Prime Minister, Labor Party; Gen. Richard Mulcahy, Fine Gael Party; Mr. Sean McBride, Clann na Poblachta; Mr. Joseph Blowick, Farmer's Party; Mr. James Everett, Labor Party; Mr. James Dillon, Independent Party; Mr. Eamonn de Valera, Mr. Frank Aiken, and Mr. Patrick Smith, all of the Fianna Fail Party.

Following the conference a statement was issued, which I believe to be worthy of the careful reading and consideration of all the Members of the House. With the permission of the Speaker I desire to include that statement in my remarks. It reads as follows:

Efforts are being made to represent the results of the forthcoming elections in the six northern counties as justifying the continued unnatural division of our country. We, representing the overwhelming majority of the Irish people, assert that the continuance of partition is a flagrant denial of the democratic right of national self-determination and is bitterly resented by the Irish people. The partition of Ireland was effected by a British Parliament in 1920, in defiance of the clearly expressed wishes of the Irish people, and no Irish vote, north or south, was passed in favor of it. We assert once more the right of the Irish people to the ownership and control of all the national territory and we repudiate the right of Britain to carve up the Irish nation or to occupy any portion of it, even though a local majority against unity can be procured in the area which was deliberately selected for that purpose by the British Parliament.

Elections in that artificially selected area, based as they are on gerrymandered constituencies and an out-of-date register, are a violation of democratic principles. They are calculated only to serve the interests of the privileged group, who by electoral manipulations in Derry City, the counties of Tyrone and Fermanagh and many other areas, have not hesitated to make one partitionist vote equal to two or more antipartitionist votes; the result of elections in these circumstances must be a foregone conclusion.

Efforts are being made to arouse sectarian hatreds and to create intolerance; we appeal to our fellow countrymen in the northeast, irrespective of creed or politics, not to allow such efforts to blind them in their common interests and duty as democrats and Irishmen. The continued domination of a small and privileged ascendancy in a portion of our island can hold out the prospect of nothing but bitterness and strife—a united Ireland could make what a divided Ireland never can; an effective contribution to the causes of world peace based on democratic institutions, and Christian principles. The candidates in the forthcoming election which stand for the unity of Ireland vindicate the just demand of the Irish nation in this regard, and as such, deserve the support of the united Irish Nation.

FARM PROGRAM

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I have just been granted permission to insert in the Appendix the text of some correspondence I had with the leader of one of the farm organizations of my State.

During the campaign of 1948 we sort of expected to be subjected to unfair criticism and to incomplete truths and insinuations regarding the farm program of this country, but that campaign ended 3 months ago. It seems to me that of this date the energies of our political opponents could much better be expended in developing a real, sound, long-term farm program than in uttering recriminations against the Eightieth Congress for either the real or the fancied ills of our national granary.

I think perhaps the farmers of the Middle West ought to be reminded that it was the Republicans of the Middle West who stood as the bulwark against the repeal of the oleo taxes as pledged by the Democrats, and that the farmers ought to be reminded that the Eightieth Congress provided more funds for rural electrification than any other Congress and more than the President has requested of this Congress for the next fiscal year.

It might be well to remind them, too, that the Democrats, and not the Republicans, must bear the responsibility for the declining prices of milk and other farm products in the Dairy State. A year ago they asked for another OPA to roll back farm prices. Now that prices are descending too rapidly, the same group is blaming the Hope-Aiken bill, which is not yet in effect for parity purposes, for that. If it were so, would anyone on the other side of the aisle be so false as to deny that the Hope-Aiken bill was the Truman administration's program, supported by Secretary of Agriculture Brannan and others high in the administration?

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries may sit during the session of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES MERCHANT MARINE ACADEMY

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, are graduates of the fourth Federal academy to be continually harassed by the selective-service system?

That is a question being asked by the graduates of the United States Merchant Marine Academy at Kings Point, N. Y., and it is a question we in Congress might well consider.

Because a strong merchant marine is necessary to national defense and security, we have appropriated money to establish this fourth Federal academy, and each year we appropriate funds for the training of merchant marine officers there. We spend money each year to aid in the building of merchant marine vessels. Yet we are permitting the men trained at this academy, with Federal funds—the men necessary to officer the ships we want built—to be drafted under the Selective Service Act.

A cadet at the Merchant Marine Academy is militarily trained from 2 to 4 years, as a specialist in the Navy and merchant marine, at a cost of approximately $9,000 of the taxpayers' money. This training, so valuable in both war and peace, is wasted when he is inducted into the Army under selective service. A graduate of Kings Point is ready for immediate service under section 7 of the Selective Service Act, and he can be called to active duty by the President at any time, so we are not increasing our Reserve components, but we are sacrificing special skills, when such graduates are inducted.

Induction of a graduate of the United States Merchant Marine Academy could cost the taxpayers $24,000, and would not enhance the security program. It costs $9,000 to train this graduate originally at Kings Point, $6,000 to train him in the Army after induction, and another $9,000 to train a replacement merchant marine officer in event an emergency does arise.

We have been prone to do too little for the men of the merchant marine while expecting them to do much for us in time of war. Seamen have received little or no rewards for the sacrifices they made during the last war. One of the least things we can do to show some consideration for that service, and at the same time aid national security, is to pass legislation deferring graduates of the Merchant Marine Academy—the fourth Federal academy—from the draft.

CHINA

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, I take this minute to call the attention of the Members to an article which I think is of the greatest significance. It appears on page A457 of the Appendix of the RECORD and was inserted by Senator BRIDGES. The article is the foreword of a book The Way of a Fighter, written by Gen. Claire Chennault, and has just been published this week.

For those who are confused with regard to the situation in China—and who is not—this man can shed real light. He knows more about it, perhaps, than any other living American, because he has been working at the problem from the inside out rather than standing on the outside giving moral lectures and advice. I think every Congressman owes it to himself and to his constituents to read carefully at least this foreword and get Channault's analysis and constructive suggestions for our policies in China in the immediate future. His record as a fighter for freedom and for our country's interest in China long before other people woke up, and his repeatedly demonstrated ability to retrieve situations which the experts said were hopeless, must command the respect of every responsible person who realizes the seriousness to our own country's future of what is happening in China.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules may have until midnight tonight and midnight tomorrow to file reports.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, for what bills is the gentleman making this request?

Mr. SABATH. On those bills on which the Committee on Rules will grant rules. That is on the resolutions that it will report this afternoon.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, may the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] be repeated for the benefit of the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has asked unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules, if it reports any rules, may have until midnight tonight or midnight tomorrow night to file such reports.

Mr. HALLECK. I thank the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

REBURIAL OF OUR WAR DEAD

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I reluctantly call to the attention of the membership a matter which may very sadly affect someone in each of our districts.

Many American lads are now overseas. Unfortunately, some of them have died or have been killed, or will die or be killed while serving outside the continental limits of this country. The present method of returning their bodies, employed by the War Department, is shockingly slow. I have called this to the attention of the War Department as emphatically as I know how, but apparently I have not been convincing.

It would be unfortunate, I think, if it should be necessary for this Congress to change this policy by legislation. It can and should be done administratively. This will, of course, entail the expenditure of money and will involve change and effort.

There can be little more compelling reason, however, for the change and the expenditure of money than the comfort it would bring to the hearts and minds of those Americans whose loved ones have died in the service of their country.

You understand, of course, that I do not speak of those who died in the war—only those who have died since the war.

A period of 6 to 8 weeks required for the return of these bodies is an unconscionable delay, and, I believe, an unnecessary delay. It would be well for each of you to check with the War Department and see if we may not remedy this matter through administrative change.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOOD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette of February 1.

Mr. SADOWSKI asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include excerpts.

Mr. LARCADE asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GORE). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW] is recognized for 15 minutes.

REPEAL OF TAX ON OLEOMARGARINE

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time so that I might address the House on a question of grave importance to the State of Wisconsin, and particularly to my district which is one of the leading producers of butterfat in the Nation. I am opposed to the removal of the tax of 10 cents per pound on colored oleomargarine. This tax has been somewhat of a protection to butter producers in preventing oleo colored yellow from being sold in imitation of butter whose natural color is yellow. This has also been a protection to the consumer who wants butter and not an imitation.

I understand that leading dairy and farm organizations are agreed on the suggestion that oleo taxes and license fees be repealed. This is being misinterpreted to mean the repeal of all restrictions on the manufacture and sale of yellow oleomargarine. This movement which threatens the very existence of the dairy industry is sponsored and financed by the oleomargarine manufacturers, a small industrial group that seeks to remove all restrictions on the sale of oleomargarine colored yellow in imitation of butter.

The fight between oleo and butter is an economic battle. On the one hand you have 2,500,000 dairy farm families, 40,000 small dairy plants and their employees as against 28 large oleomargarine manufacturers. The dairy farmers are a vital part of our national economy, they pay substantial taxes and also provide the Nation with vital and nutritious food. They merely want the synthetic product called oleomargarine to be sold for what it is and not to permit it to be disguised as an imitator of butter by coloring it yellow.

I believe it is very conservative to say that the relationship between the producers of cotton and the oleo and crushers of cottonseed has not been conducive to a sound economy. The cottonseed oil industry sets the market price—they make the money, not the cotton farmer.

The dairyman is in an economy in which butter is the balance wheel; more than 25 percent of all milk produced goes into butter. The consumers of the Nation are dependent on dairy farmers for 40 percent of their beef and veal, and all of their milk.

From year to year the dairyman, by reason of rigid State requirements and voluntary usages relative to sanitary requirements, has invested hundreds of thousands of dollars in more modernized farm equipment; built new or remodeled old barns and silos, bought milking machines, and so forth, fertilized the soil so as to produce more and better feed. In most areas, he has carried on soil conservation work, has prevented, in part, soil erosion. All of this has been done because he anticipated that this greatest of all agricultural industries, namely dairying, and, I might say at this point that most of this work was done under the guidance of the State and Federal Government—at least with their approval. Farm boys have attended the universities in ever-increasing numbers, so that they in turn can take over, and in an intelligent way carry on the work so well done by their parents. They have the intellectual and technical ability to carry on in this worthy endeavor. They are literally the backbone of the Nation. Shall their future be jeopardized by the Congress permitting this synthetic product to be sold in imitation of their natural and wholesome product?

The family-sized farm is doomed if this terrible economic blow is dealt to the dairy industry.

Competent economists have shown, and it has not been questioned, that to sell yellow oleo unrestricted would take away an additicnal 600,000,000 pounds a year in butter sales. The cost of this loss in sales to the dairy farmers would be a quarter of a million dollars in cash income. The long-term result would be liquidation of dairy herds on a large scale. The small farm unit would not be able to operate any longer. This terrible economic readjustment is threatened because the oleo interests of the Nation, who are making handsome profits now, want to expand their business by being permitted to color their product yellow in imitation of butter, whose natural color is yellow. Their object is to fool the consumer and break down a natural sales resistance.

The dairy farmers welcome the expansion of dairying in the cotton areas, and it is of vital interest to you from cotton States that the status of butter be preserved. The cotton producer realizes, I believe, that the farmers of the Nation are their best customers by buying edible vegetable oils in shortenings for salad and desserts, and for spreads; likewise cottonseed meal is used for feed, which is bringing at the present time between $85 and $100 a ton; and also cotton products.

It must also be recognized that there is a critical shortage in edible oil in the manufacture of shortening and salad dressing. In fact, in each of the years 1935–37, it was necessary to import as much as 100,000,000 pounds of edible cottonseed oil from outside the country to satisfy their needs. The increased demand for cottonseed oil that would be created by the unrestricted sale of oleo colored yellow would create a further acute shortage.

It must also be borne in mind that any break in the economy of the dairy farmer would severely impair the soil-conservation program which is making wonderful strides in the voluntary conservation of our soil. A break in that economy would also affect adversely our rural-electrification program which, with its further expansion, will accomplish more to raise the standards of living of those in the rural areas than any one other factor. A blow to the dairy economy would also endanger our farm-credit program which is doing much to help our farm economy. In fact, a blow to our dairy economy would have severe repercussions to the entire agriculture set-up.

This is a most inopportune time to be considering this type of legislation, with dairy prices on a sharp decline, and legislation in the hopper for further farm-price supports. With all somewhat in accord that we must cooperate in an effort to help one another, in come the oleo interests to completely—if they are successful—upset the best of our plans with a scheme which is as destructive as it is deceptive.

Oleo manufacturers are guilty of trying to mislead the public to believe that their product is naturally yellow, and that they are compelled by Federal restrictions to remove this yellow color by bleaching or pay the 10-cent tax per pound. They also say that butter is colored with the same dyes with which oleo is colored and to restrain their use of yellow color is unjustified discrimination.

The natural color of oleo is white or gray, and, I understand, must be bleached in most instances to make it white. The natural color of butter is yellow, except during the winter months when the cows are off pasture. Then a coloring is used to make the color uniform the year around. But it is not put in to deceive the consumer.

I am reliably informed for the year 1947 that the oleo manufacturers spent $6,600,000 for advertising directed in part toward the repeal of oleo restrictions. In 1948 they spent an additional $5,400,000 to mislead the American housewife on the question of yellow oleomargarine.

Perhaps there are people whose incomes are so low that it may be necessary for them to eat oleomargarine instead of butter, but it is not fair for them to be deceived by the yellow color into thinking they are buying and eating butter.

Fraudulent substitution of yellow oleomargarine for butter must be prevented. This can be accomplished by a flat ban being placed on the imitation of butter through the commercial manufacture or sale of yellow oleomargarine.

Under such a prohibition, the housewives could obtain all the oleo they wanted to buy uncolored and tax-free. At the same time, the ban on imitation butter would curb unfair competition for the butter market.

My people are alarmed; they know what happened to agriculture from 1920 to 1929. They are fearful that this latest unwarranted attack may have the same disastrous result—not merely the collapse of the great dairy industry but likewise the disintegration of our entire economic structure, for agriculture is our basic industry.

If the taxes are repealed, then there should be an effective prohibition of the manufacture and sale of yellow oleomargarine.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. If I recollect correctly, the gentleman was at La Crosse, Wis., on October 18 at the National Catholic Rural Life Conference attended by a couple of thousand people when Dr. Carlson and I had a debate of some 3 hours on this subject. Dr. Carlson, of the University of Chicago, is the official mouthpiece of the Oleo Trust. The gentleman will probably remember also that Dr. Carlson said that day that filled milk was equal to natural milk, which is the next step if they are able to pass this oleo legislation, is that right?

Mr. WITHROW. That is right. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK. As I understand it, the gentleman would be perfectly willing to take off the tax on oleomargarine provided they would arrange the legislation so that this inferior grade of foodstuff could not be disguised to take the place of butter, is that right?

Mr. WITHROW. That is exactly it, so that there is a real prohibition against the manufacture and sale of yellow oleomargarine.

Mr. BURDICK. The gentleman would let them have all the oleo they want without tax, if they did that?

Mr. WITHROW. That is correct. I thank the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. May I compliment the gentleman on the fine presentation he has made.

Mr. WITHROW. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JENSEN. May I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that wherever we find a good dairy section in America or the world, a section in which there are plenty of dairy cows, we find good, healthy people and good, healthy soil; but, to the contrary, where they do not have sufficient dairying you will generally find a poorer class of people and poor soil; is that not right?

Mr. WITHROW. That is correct.

Mr. JENSEN. For that very reason most of the Southern States which are clamoring for this oleo bill should be the ones protecting the dairy industry lock, stock, and barrel; is that not right?

Mr. WITHROW. I believe that is so; yes. I thank my colleague.

Mr. GOLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. GOLDEN. I would like to have some information. Under the bill that the gentleman is advocating, if white oleo is sold to the housewife, would the bill permit the coloring matter to go along with the package of oleo and let the housewife do her own coloring?

Mr. WITHROW. Yes; I understand it would. The bill I have in mind is the bill introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN]. I understand that that bill permits the housewife to buy uncolored oleomargarine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may have until 12 o'clock midnight Saturday to file a report on H. R. 1661.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENSEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. JONAS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include House Resolution 17, adopted by the Sixty-sixth General Assembly of the State of Illinois on January 5, 1949, a photostatic copy of which was submitted to him by Hon. Edward J. Barrett, secretary of state.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HÉBERT] is recognized for 30 minutes.

DR. FRANK P. GRAHAM

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, a strange incident has bobbed up in the news involving the good name of the great State of North Carolina.

However, before discussing this I want to make it clear that I deplore the fact that it becomes necessary for me to bring this matter to the attention of this House because I do not come from North Carolina. In doing so I do not in any sense or suggestion cast any reflection on the great State of North Carolina, or its loyal, patriotic citizens; nor do I in any way suggest that the Members of the North Carolina delegation in this House are in any way responsible for this unfortunate situation. The Members of the North Carolina delegation in this Congress are all distinguished gentlemen who have demonstrated on numerous occasions their devotion and their loyalty, not only to their State, but to their Nation. Any State could well be proud of such representation in the National Congress.

Not only has the State of North Carolina given to this body a distinguished group of men, but the roster of outstanding Government officials who have come to Washington in years past, and who are at present in Washington, includes the names of those who claim the State of North Carolina as their own.

The problem of the State of North Carolina is well the problem of my own State of Louisiana or any other of the 48 States. I approach the discussion of this situation on a national, not a State, level. In the far Northwest one great university, the University of Washington, has already publicly accepted its responsibility of the challenge to this menace, and has picked up the gauntlet in the fight to keep our universities clean of any misdirected instruction, attachment, or association, whether given wittingly or unwittingly.

With this explanation behind me I now call your attention to an example of how a great State university and its president can be used by forces of evil which would destroy the system of government which so many of us are trying so desperately to maintain.

The Security Board of the Atomic Energy Commission has decided that Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, ought not, for security reasons, be permitted to come near the atomic secrets. If he cannot be entrusted with our atomic secrets, why is he trusted with the education of thousands of young Americans in these times of peril? What is he doing at the head of the University of North Carolina?

The Board that branded him as a bad security risk is not a collection of village red baiters. It is headed by former Justice Owen J. Roberts, of the Supreme Court of the United States; Joseph P. Grew, former Under Secretary of State; Dr. Karl Compton, former head of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Henning Webb Prentiss, Jr., president of the Armstrong Cork Co.; and G. M. Humphrey, president of the Hanna Coal Co., of Cleveland. Not only that but Admiral John Gingrich, security officer of the Atomic Energy Commission, on his own authority, has similarly barred Dr. Graham from atomic secrets. But Mr. David Lilienthal has overruled both these authorities, because he has already opened the atomic secrets to Dr. Graham.

But what is Dr. Graham doing prying into atomic secrets at Oak Ridge? Well, he is president of the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies. It is supposed to be interested in promoting the activity of southern colleges in atomic research. But how does it come about that Dr. Graham bobs up in that spot?

Dr. Frank P. Graham, aside from being president of the University of North Carolina, has another more dubious claim to fame. The Communist Party, being highly unpopular, does most of its work through so-called front organizations, bearing seemingly respectable names, such as the American League for Peace and Democracy. The game is to get into these organizations Americans who are gullible enough to allow the use of their names in order to hide the Communists in the organization who pull the strings behind the scenes. A good example is this American League for Peace and Democracy. The live spirits in this front were such persons as Earl Browder; Lewis Merrill, Communist labor leader; Ben Gold, Communist editor; Abram Baxer; Muriel Draper; Max Yergan; Donald Ogden Stewart; and other Red stooges. The Attorney General of the United States has officially branded this as a Communist-front. Now what was Dr. Frank P. Graham doing in that company as one of their sponsors? Yet there he was until the Attorney General's attack broke up the organization. And, of course, he was billed as president of the University of North Carolina. The prestige of this great institution was used to exploit this flagrant Red agency.

Of course, Dr. Graham could be fooled once. After all, peace and democracy are alluring words. But Dr. Graham is not a simple-minded man. And so what must we say when we find him in half a dozen similar organizations? Did the Commies fool him six times in a row? Well, it is a little worse than that. The Committee on Un-American Activities lists him as being either a director or sponsor of 18 Communist-front organizations or causes.

Dr. Graham joined these groups, he says, to defend civil rights and freedom of speech. These are fine causes, to be sure. But is not the Communist Party a strange place to go for comrades in the fight for freedom of speech? Could Dr. Graham find no better allies than these American agents of the most tyrannical government in the world? Is Dr. Graham that simple-minded?

However, he insists that he could see no wrong in teaming up with Communists when Russia was our ally in a great war. This is the defense he made to Fulton Lewis, Jr., who denounced him over the radio. But this will not hold water. The doctor was in a number of these Communist fronts before the war started and nobody dreamed of Russia being an ally. He was in the American Friends of Spanish Democracy, the International Labor Defense, the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, all Communist fronts, before 1939. Russia was not our ally then. But it is worse than this. He was one of the sponsors of the American Committee for the Protection of the Foreign Born in May 1940. Of course, that sounds like a good cause, too. But this was a Communist-organized committee to prevent the deportation of Reds. At that time Russia was not only not our ally, she was the ally of Hitler and the President of the United States had denounced the Russian dictatorship as one of the most brutal in the world. At that moment Russia had invaded and terrorized Poland and Finland and was supplying Hitler with war materials.

In his defense of himself, Dr. Graham points out how he was opposed to Mussolini, Hitler, and Franco. Of course he was. So was Stalin. But if he was so much opposed to dictatorships and so much in love with free speech, why is it that he could be found in 18 organizations opposed to Hitler, Franco, and Mussolini, and to various American activities, yet not in one opposed to Stalin?

And, if he joined these Red-front organizations because he saw nothing wrong in teaming up with Communists while Russia was our ally, what is he doing in so many of these organizations now? Is Russia still our ally? Have these organizations ceased to be Communist fronts? And who does Dr. Graham think he is kidding?

When the war in Spain started, Communists in this country tried to sell the idea that this was a war between the democratic Republic of Spain and the Fascist rebels. But that was a fraud. The Republic was originally launched by true republicans. But the Commies got control of it. In the Spanish war which followed it was a war between the Fascists and the Communists. The Communists in America organized the American Friends of Spanish Democracy and another front called the Coordinating Committee to Lift the Embargo. President Roosevelt had induced Congress to prevent the shipment of arms to both sides—Fascists and Communists. But there was Dr. Graham in the Commie-formed committee to lift that embargo so that arms could be shipped to the Reds in Spain. And if he had had his way there would now be a Red dictatorship in Spain as well as in Yugoslavia.

The serious point in all this is that this man was being courted by the Reds because they could advertise his support as that of the president of the University of North Carolina. These Communist fronts require two things: They need money, and they need the prestige of prominent names. They manage to get plenty of money from rich Americans who have inherited it and are ashamed of the system under which they become rich. And they get the prestige of respectable names through these front organizations from Americans with prominent names in Hollywood, the theater, social work, and the colleges. The president of a State university paid for by the people of North Carolina is a prize catch. But one wonders how such a man ever bit on that hook.

Earl Browder, then head of the Communist Party in America, was in jail. Of course a Citizens Committee to Free Earl Browder was organized by the Communists. Elizabeth Curley Flynn, a notorious party member, was secretary of the committee. And there was the inevitable Dr. Frank P. Graham on the list and of course the title president of the University of North Carolina. The Communist Party has been exploiting the prestige of the university for years through the activities of Frank P. Graham.

Of one of these organizations Dr. Graham was president and is now honorary president. This is the Southern Conference Council for Human Welfare. How can Dr. Graham be in any doubt about this strange affair? The Committee on Un-American Activities reports that the conference actually is being used in devious ways to favor basic Soviet and Communist policy. And the Communist Party not only admits this but boasts that it started the organization.

Robert Hall, secretary of the Communist Party in Alabama, wrote in January 1939:

> We can say that the Southern Conference was a brilliant confirmation of the line advanced by Comrade Browder at the tenth convention * * * Our party contributed in a modest but constructive manner to the success of the conference.

Earl Browder testified before a congressional committee under oath that the conference was one of the party's transmission belts. William Weiner, former treasurer of the Communist Party, testified that a subsidy of $2,000 was paid to the Communist Party of Alabama when the conference was organized. Robert Hall has described how resolutions were prepared by the Communist Party and then adopted by the conference. James Dombrowski, executive secretary of the conference, signed a statement in March 1941, while Stalin and Hitler were allies, defending the Communist Party. And he helped launch a joint Socialist-Communist united front movement in the South in 1935. During all this time Dr. Graham was the president or honorary president of this organization. Is there no way of aiding the cause of the Negro in the South save through the Communist Party? Can anyone imagine that the Communists here wanted to improve the lot of the Negro and make him more contented in America? The Communist revolutionaries have only one object in moving amongst Negroes and that is to arouse them, to urge them on to inconsiderate action in order to produce an angry reaction in their white neighbors. Their purpose is to set Negro against white man, worker against employer, Christian against Jew, North against South, East against West, town against country. They work ceaselessly for division and disorder and chaos in our society. What is Dr. Graham doing lending the prestige of the University of North Carolina to a Red front organism working among southern Negroes? He has headed this organization for over 10 years, before the war, during the Hitler-Stalin alliance, and since the war when the whole vicious pattern of Communist disruptive activity has become known.

Now we have the crowning episode of this disquieting incident. The atomic enterprises of the Government have attracted a swarm of Red agents and American dupes eager to penetrate the dread secret of this terrible weapon. In Canada a member of Parliament and a distinguished British scientist were caught red-handed giving secrets to the Russian Embassy. It is difficult to believe such a thing could happen in America. Yet here we have been shocked at the recent disclosures as a result of which Alger Hiss is under indictment for perjury for denying under oath his connection with the supplying of secret information to Russian spies—Hiss, who sat with President Roosevelt at Yalta as one of his advisers when he was dealing with Stalin and who was, until indicted, head of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Now an organization is formed called the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies. Its announced purpose is to promote the cooperation of southern universities in nuclear research. And who should pop up at its head but Dr. Frank P. Graham. And immediately the question arises whether the head of this institute should be admitted to the atomic secrets. In order to protect our country on this dangerous front, the Government Atomic Energy Commission has named a security officer—Admiral John Gingrich—to investigate all persons approaching this guarded secret. Admiral Gingrich investigated Dr. Graham and reported that he should not, for security reasons, be admitted to these secrets. Then the matter went to the board headed by former Supreme Court Justice Owen J. Roberts. That board, composed of five eminent and very sober-minded citizens, also held that Graham, for security reasons, should not be allowed near the atomic secrets. I do not suppose Dr. Graham is a Communist or a Red agent, but it is disgraceful that a man in so great a position should so conduct himself that he cannot be trusted in any situation involving his country.

The facts in the case of Dr. Graham, his long record of association with Reds and Red agents and now this decision of the security officer of the Commission and the security board, cannot be ignored by the trustees or regents of the University of North Carolina. The gravity of this situation is actually increased by the fact that David Lilienthal, whose own views and sympathies have been called in question, prevailed upon this board and against the opinion of his own security officer, Admiral Gingrich, and admitted Graham to these atomic secrets.

What can we expect of the youth in our colleges when the trustees of a great American university permit these bedfellows of American Reds to preside over this institution of learning? Of what avail will all the warnings to our impressionable youth be when conduct such as Dr. Graham's is known and approved by permitting him to remain at the head of one of our leading universities supported by the taxes of the citizens of North Carolina who hate everything that Dr. Graham has been playing with these 10 years. Dr. Graham enjoys under our Constitution the great right of freedom of mind and speech. No one proposes to deprive him of it. But when he uses it to support the revolutionary activities of the most hated and condemned organization in America today, he has no right to remain at the head of a great university and use the prestige of his position to promote the designs of the greatest enemies this country has had in its existence.

This is a State-supported institution. It is entirely probable that the people of the State do not know the truth about Dr. Graham. It is possible the members of the State legislature are not informed about it. It may be that the regents of the university are not fully informed. But there can no longer be any excuse. The university should be relieved of the incubus of this man's operations and he should be freed in order to ply his activities as the ally and front of any organization he wishes without involving the university in the deal.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HÉBERT. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman has not told the worst part of the story yet. It developed that there was a Communist organization inside the student body of the University of North Carolina, which institution is presided over by this man Frank Graham. Everybody knows that it is the object of the Communist Party to overthrow this Government and to destroy the American way of life; yet this man who has been connected with all these Communist fronts, which have been and are now being used by the Communist Party, is now the president of a great university that has a Communist organization, an organization of members of the Communist Party, inside its student body as the records of the Committee on Un-American Activities will show.

Mr. HÉBERT. I think the gentleman also knows from his many years of activity in attacking this menace that the infiltration of the Communist line and the breaking down of our system of government and our institutions of higher education is one of the most dangerous things in this country today as exemplified by Elizabeth Bentley, who attended both Columbia University and Vassar.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one more statement? And then I will not interrupt him further.

Mr. HÉBERT. I yield

Mr. RANKIN. I want to say that if every American knew how recklessly our atomic secrets were being handled today they would be shocked beyond measure. This country is not safe, in my opinion, and in the opinion of Members connected with the Committee on Un-American Activities who have investigated it, for these secrets are being slipped out to our potential enemies with the ultimate purpose of destroying America.

Mr. HÉBERT. May I ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he agrees with the philosophy, thinking, reasoning, or logic, that it takes only lawyers to find unpatriotic people in this country?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I may say to the gentleman from Louisiana that such an excuse was used to dupe some of the present members of the Ways and Means Committee into keeping the gentleman from Louisiana off the Committee on Un-American Activities. If that were the law, if that rule had been adopted at the beginning of our Government, Benjamin Franklin could not have served on such a committee; George Washington could not have served on it; U. S. Grant or Robert E. Lee could not have served on it; neither could Jefferson Davis or Herbert Hoover. That was one of the most stupid things I have ever known Members of Congress to do.

Mr. HÉBERT. I may say to the gentleman from Mississippi that those responsible for removing me from the committee did not have to go so far; they could have laid down the rule that only Members of the House with two eyes could be eligible for service on the committee; that would have left me out for I have only one eye.

Mr. RANKIN. This move to curtail the membership of that committee has been going on behind the Communist line for years. I am not kicking, for I will be here on the floor of the House to carry on this fight as long as I am a Member of this body; but I have never known a more stupid piece of asinine performance than that by the alleged Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee in the way they juggled their resolutions in order to cripple the Committee on Un-American Activities.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HÉBERT. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. It seems to me that the people who took the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Louisiana off the committee were Democrats, were they not?

Mr. RANKIN. I am not surprised that the gentleman thought that was the case.

It was the hand of Esau and the voice of Jacob.

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, I have here in my hand an official report of the Committee on Un-American Activities in connection with Dr. Graham. It consists of four and a quarter pages of single-spaced typewritten matter. I ask unanimous consent to include it at the end of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HÉBERT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to have the gentleman tell us why it is that during all the years of the activities of this Un-American Activities Committee we have not been able to convict someone of subversive activity. In the State of California during the early twenties we were harassed by people of this kind. The Industrial Workers of the World were out there. They were destroying property, they were preaching violence, and they were practicing violence. We indicted some of them in my county. It was my duty to try them. We spent 3 months on it and convicted four of them, putting them in the penitentiary, where they belonged. For over 15 years we never heard one word from those kinds of people.

I wish the gentleman would tell us why it is not possible for us to take some of these individuals who are advocating the overthrow of our Government, find a way to indict them, convict them, and put them out of the way?

Mr. HÉBERT. The gentleman from California has put his finger on a very important subject. I cannot answer the question. The Attorney General of the United States is the only one who can answer it, if he would.

During the hearings last year on the so-called Mundt-Nixon bill—this is a very enlightening thing—the Attorney General of the United States appeared before the committee and denounced communism. He gave a very fine statement; we all agreed with him, but he did not discuss the bill. So I asked the Attorney General: "Mr. Attorney General, I am very much interested in what you say, but tell us about your opinion of the bill now before us?" He replied in substance: "Oh, I cannot give an opinion now. The Department has not given an opinion." I asked him what the Department's opinion had to do with his opinion, that he was the Attorney General, and he replied in effect that he would not desire to give an opinion because the Department might be influenced by what he thought.

Are those the kind of opinions we are getting out of the Department of Justice, whether it is the law we get or what an individual thinks? We asked the Attorney General repeatedly to give us his own opinion on how to strengthen existing laws which he said were inadequate or else forward us his own bill. He said that the statutes on the books at the present time were not sufficient to successfully prosecute these people. He placed himself in the position of the doctor who said that the medicine is no good, but who refused to administer the medicine to find out whether it was any good or not. Then when we asked him and practically begged him to come up with some type of a bill that would have teeth in it, what did we get? I personally asked him to do it. Up to the end of the Eightieth Congress he did not come up with any bill on any request of the committee, though repeatedly, on many occasions, he declined the assistance of the committee and said that they had never come up with anything toward offering an effective means of combating subversive elements in this country. He repeatedly said the committee never got out an effective bill, but he failed to say that he, the Attorney General, had failed to offer any suggestions in spite of our requests.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then this is the effect of the gentleman's opinion, that after 10 years of continual investigation we have not any law on the books to effectively handle these people.

Mr. HÉBERT. In the matter of espionage, no. The laws are ineffective, according to the Attorney General. As to present laws there are the Smith Act and the Vorys Act and acts of that type, but the Attorney General claims that they are not adequate and for that reason has not made use of them. It is for the courts to rule if they are adequate enough. How can we tell if the medicine is any good unless we try it? It is his duty to prosecute under the existing laws, and he has failed in his duty.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will accept the gentleman's word for it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HÉBERT. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Every person the Committee on Un-American Activities has cited, and that has been tried, has been convicted. Today they are trying a group of Communists in New York for attempting the overthrow of this Government, and the Communists are picketing the court. They even sent down thousands of people here the other day to try to influence Congress, in order to bring about the intimidation of the courts of New York.

We uncovered the greatest spy ring in history in the Hiss case and exposed a group that was perpetrating treason at a time when our boys were dying by the thousands on every battle front in the world. What was our reward? It was called a red herring.

Mr. HÉBERT. To continue with the gentleman from California, let us take the so-called Hiss-Chambers affair. It is perfectly obvious to a schoolboy that either Hiss or Chambers was lying. One or the other had to be a liar, and perjury before a congressional committee is a crime. It is a crime to lie before a congressional committee. What did the Attorney General or the Department of Justice do, with that absolute crime staring them in the face? It was not the responsibility of the committee to determine which one of the two was lying. That was the responsibility of the Department of Justice, the enforcement agency, the prosecuting agency. And, with that crime produced in full view, with the corpus delicti at their feet, they refused to do anything about it. It took a civil action in Federal court to finally bring about an indictment of one of the two men. If Hiss had not filed civil action against Chambers, nothing at all would have been done. As a matter of fact the Department of Justice has done nothing yet about perjury before the Un-American Activities Committee. Hiss is under indictment for alleged perjury before the New York grand jury which indicted him and not for alleged perjury before the Committee on Un-American Activities.

JANUARY 22, 1949.

A check of the files, records, and publications of the Committee on Un-American Activities has revealed the following information concerning Frank P. Graham:

Letterheads dated September 22, 1939, January 17, 1940, and May 26, 1940, as well as the Daily Worker of March 18, 1939, page 2, reveal that Frank P. Graham was a member of the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom. This affiliation is also shown by a leaflet, Citizens Rally, which was held by that organization on April 13, 1940, at Carnegie Hall, New York City.

The American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom was established on Lincoln's birthday, 1939, with the announced purpose of preservation and extension of democracy and intellectual freedom. Its establishment was featured on page 1 of the Daily Worker. (Daily Worker, February 13, 1939.) In Report 2277, dated June 25, 1942, the Special Committee on Un-American Activities found that the line of the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom has fluctuated in complete harmony with the line of the Communist Party. The organization was again cited by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in Report 1311 of March 29, 1944, as a Communist front which defended Communist teachers.

A letterhead of March 15, 1940, and the letterhead of the Fourth Annual Conference, Hotel Annapolis, Washington, D. C., March 2–3, 1940, lists Frank P. Graham as a sponsor of the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born. The program of the Fifth National Conference of this organization, held at the President Hotel, Atlantic City, N. J., March 29-30, 1941, lists Frank Porter Graham as a sponsor.

Of this organization, the Special Committee on Un-American Activities stated: "Numerous witnesses who have appeared before our committee have given testimony indicating that the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born is a Communist-dominated front. In particular * * * the testimony of Humberto Galleani * * * that the Communist Party, of which he was once a member, assigned him to work in the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born and that there was no doubt about the party's complete control of the organization." (Report 2277 of June 25, 1942, p. 13.)

The organization was again cited as one of the oldest auxiliaries of the Communist Party in the United States in the committee's report of March 29, 1944. The American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born has been cited as subversive and Communist by Attorney General Clark in lists furnished by him for use of the Loyalty Review Board. (See press releases of the U. S. Civil Service Commission dated May 28, 1948, and September 21, 1948.)

Frank P. Graham was a member of the Committee of the American Friends of Spanish Democracy, according to a letterhead of February 21, 1938, and was one of those who signed this organization's petition to lift the arms embargo as shown by the Daily Worker of April 8, 1938 (p. 4). New Masses, January 5, 1937 (p. 31), discloses that he was a general committee member of the American Friends of Spanish Democracy, medical bureau.

In 1937–38, the Communist Party threw itself wholeheartedly into the campaign for the support of the Spanish Loyalist cause, recruiting men and organizing multifarious so-called relief organizations * * * such as * * * American Friends of Spanish Democracy. (Rept. 1311 of the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, March 29, 1944, p. 82.)

Frank P. Graham has been affiliated with the American League for Peace and Democracy as a signer of a statement on the international situation which that organization issued. (See New Masses, March 15, 1938, p. 19.) According to a letterhead of May 18, 1938, and another of June 11, 1938, and the Daily Worker of April 8, 1938 (p. 2), he was a sponsor of the Easter drive of the China Aid Council of the American League for Peace and Democracy.

The American League for Peace and Democracy has been cited as a Communist front organization in three reports of the Special Committee on Un-American Activities: reports of January 3, 1940; June 25, 1942; and March 29, 1944. The league was established in 1937 as successor to the American League Against War and Fascism, and was designed to conceal Communist control, in accordance with the new tactics of the Communist International. (Attorney General Francis Biddle, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 88, part 6, p. 7443.) The American League for Peace and Democracy has been cited as subversive and Communist by the present Attorney General. (Press releases of the U. S. Civil Service Commission, dated May 28, 1948, and September 21, 1948, respectively.)

A folder of the Citizens' Committee to Free Earl Browder, which was issued in 1942, names Frank P. Graham as one of the prominent American educators who favored Presidential clemency for Earl Browder.

When Earl Browder (then general secretary, Communist Party) was in Atlanta Penitentiary serving a sentence involving his fraudulent passports, the Communist Party's front which agitated for his release was known as the Citizens' Committee to Free Earl Browder. * * * Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, one of the few outstanding women leaders of the Communist Party in this country, headed it. (Report 1311, Special Committee on Un-American Activities, March 29, 1944.) The Citizens' Committee to Free Earl Browder was cited as a Communist organization by Attorney General Francis Biddle. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 88, part 6, p. 7446.)

The affiliation of Frank P. Graham with the Coordinating Committee to Lift the Embargo as a representative individual is shown by a booklet, These Americans Say, page 7. The Coordinating Committee to Lift the Embargo was cited by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities as one of a number of front organizations, set up during the Spanish Civil War by the Communist Party * * * through which the party carried on a great deal of agitation. (Report 1311, March 29, 1944, pp. 137–138.)

According to Equal Justice, publication of the International Labor Defense, Frank P. Graham sent greetings to the National Conference of the International Labor Defense. (Equal Justice, July 1939, p. 4.)

The International Labor Defense was cited by Attorney General Francis Biddle as the legal arm of the Communist Party. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 88, part 6, p. 7446.) The organization has been cited as a Communist front in three reports of the Special Committee on Un-American Activities: reports of January 3, 1940; June 25, 1942; and March 29, 1944. The organization has been cited as subversive and classified as Communist by the present Attorney General. (See press release of the U. S. Civil Service Commission, dated May 28, 1948, and September 21, 1948.)

Frank P. Graham, according to a letterhead of July 6, 1938, was a national sponsor of the Medical Bureau and North American Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy. A letterhead of the Michigan Chapter, dated February 2, 1939, also reveals that he sponsored this organization. The Medical Bureau and North American Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy was cited as a Communist front by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in Report 1311, dated March 29, 1944. (See paragraph 2 on page 2 of this memorandum concerning the Spanish relief organizations.)

The Prospectus and Review, page 3, of the Lawyers Committee on American Relations with Spain discloses that Frank P. Graham supported the Conference to Lift the Embargo. When it was the policy of the Communist Party to organize much of its main propaganda around the civil war in Spain, this Communist lawyers' front organization supported the movement. (Report 1311 of March 29, 1944, Special Committee on Un-American Activities.)

Frank P. Graham, according to Soviet Russia Today, February 1943 (p. 34), sponsored the Soviet Russia Today dinner which celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Red Army. The publication, Soviet Russia Today, has been cited as a Communist front by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in two reports—reports of June 25, 1942, and March 29, 1944.

A letterhead of February 7, 1946, a letterhead of June 4, 1947, an official report of the organization, and an announcement of the third meeting, April 19–21, 1942, at Nashville, Tenn., reveal that Frank P. Graham was honorary president of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare. An official report of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare lists Frank P. Graham as chairman, and the program of the conference held in Birmingham, Ala., November 20–23, 1938, reveals that he delivered the opening address. The Call to the Second Southern Conference for Human Welfare, Chattanooga, Tenn., April 14–16, 1940, reveals that Frank P. Graham participated in that conference. According to a letterhead dated August 13, 1940, Frank P. Graham sponsored the League of Young Southerners, Youth Division, Southern Conference for Human Welfare. Frank P. Graham was one of the signers of a statement issued by the Southern Conference for Human Welfare which appeared in the Daily Worker of May 29, 1947, page 5.

In a report on the Southern Conference for Human Welfare dated June 16, 1947, the Committee on Un-American Activities found: "The most conclusive proof of Communist domination of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare is to be found in the organization's strict and unvarying conformance to the line of the Communist Party in the field of foreign policy. It is also clear indication of the fact that the real purpose of the organization was not human welfare in the South, but rather to serve as a convenient vehicle in support of the current Communist Party line" (p. 8). The Southern Conference for Human Welfare had previously been cited as a Communist-front organization by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in Report 1311 of March 29, 1944.

It is noted that Frank P. Graham was one of the signers of a statement issued by 87 American liberals which includes an attack on the Communist Party of the United States. This statement appeared in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 93, part 11, pages A2459–A2460.

SENATE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1949

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of the living and the living dead: In the midst of life we are in death; yet when the throb of eternity is felt within us we know that life is not measured by heartbeats nor by figures on a dial. We give Thee thanks for the witness of Thy servant who ministered in holy things to this Chamber, now gone so suddenly from our side and sight to a larger sphere but still in the radiant presence of the Master of all good workmen. Knowing that we will not pass this way again and that the sands of our brief years are so swiftly falling, may we so number our days as to apply our hearts unto wisdom, putting into the fugitive fragments of every day such quality of work as shall make us unashamed when our little day is over and all the days are done. We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

"Senate Joint Resolution 1

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States in relation to the establishment of a support price for black-eyed beans

"Whereas the Federal Government has established and pursued for some time the policy of providing support prices for agricultural products to the end that the agricultural industry of the Nation should be stabilized, and that the effects of fluctuation of prices for agricultural commodities below the cost of production may be eliminated and the hardships on the farmers resulting from such lowered price levels avoided; and

"Whereas the production of black-eyed and all varieties of dried beans has become an important segment of the agricultural industry of the State of California but no support price for such products has been established and the market price for such products has fallen below the cost of production; and

"Whereas the producers of black-eyed and all other dried beans in this State and in the other States should be given the same consideration and protection as have been given to producers of other agricultural products, and unless such protection is afforded to them they will suffer an immediate loss which in turn will be reflected in the general economy of the State because of the lowered purchasing power of such producers: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California hereby respectfully urges the President and the Congress of the United States to take such steps as may be necessary for the establishment of an appropriate support price for black-eyed and all varieties of dried beans; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

"Senate Joint Resolution 8

"Joint resolution relative to the proposed international animal quarantine station on Swan Island

"Whereas the people of this State remember with the direst apprehension of the outbreaks of foot-and-mouth disease in 1924 and 1929 and the paralyzing effect each of these outbreaks had upon the economy and welfare of California; and

"Whereas the bulwark of protection against the introduction of foot-and-mouth disease into the United States or this State has been subdivision (a) of section 306 of chapter 497 of the United States Statutes of 1930, providing that if the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States determines that foot-and-mouth disease exists in any foreign country, he shall officially notify the Secretary of the Treasury and give public notice thereof, and thereafter, and until the Secretary of Agriculture gives notice in a similar manner that such disease no longer exists in such foreign country, the importation into the United States of cattle, sheep, or other domestic ruminants, or swine, or of fresh, chilled, or frozen beef, veal, mutton, lamb, or pork, from such foreign country is prohibited; and

"Whereas restrictions on importations have from time to time been issued pursuant to the authority of Congress and by that means foot-and-mouth disease has been kept from the United States or any part thereof; and

"Whereas chapter 592 of the United States Statutes of 1946 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture, in his discretion, to establish and maintain on Swan Island, situate in the Caribbean Sea, an international animal-quarantine station and permits the Secretary of Agriculture, notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, but subject to regulations prescribed by him to prevent the introduction into the United States of communicable diseases of animals, to permit animals to be brought into the Swan Island Quarantine Station from any country, including those in which the Secretary of Agriculture determines that foot-and-mouth disease exists and to permit the same to be subsequently imported into other parts of the United States under the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture; and

"Whereas on December 7, 1948, the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States gave notice of his intention to issue regulations relating to the Swan Island Quarantine Station, which regulations permit ruminants and swine to be shipped into the quarantine station if they originate in an area in a foreign country which has been free from foot-and-mouth disease for at least 60 days immediately preceding the date of movement of the ruminants and swine therefrom and after quarantine at Swan Island for not less than 90 days may be brought into the United States; and

"Whereas the report on foot-and-mouth disease made to the Senate of California on March 18, 1948, by the Senate Interim Committee on Livestock Diseases, created by Senate Resolution No. 145 of the 1947 session of the California Legislature, shows that 316 Cebu bulls were landed on Sacrificios Island in April of 1946 and were removed from said island to the vicinity of Vera Cruz, Mexico, on the 28th of September 1946, and were thereafter inspected by two veterinarians of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture and found to be free from foot-and-mouth disease and 3 weeks thereafter foot-and-mouth disease broke out in the vicinity into which the Cebu bulls had been imported; and

"Whereas the regulations for the operation of the Swan Island Quarantine Station proposed by the Secretary of Agriculture can therefore not give any assurance that Swan Island will not become the avenue through which foot-and-mouth disease will be introduced into the United States; and

"Whereas the California State Board of Agriculture at its meeting on January 17, 1949, attended by representatives from the California Farm Bureau, the California Cattlemen's Association, the California Wool Growers Association, California Farmers, Inc., the Agricultural Council of California, and the Agricultural Department of the California State Chamber of Commerce, adopted a resolution with the unanimous concurrence of those in attendance, that the regulations for the Swan Island Quarantine Station should prohibit the importation into the United States of animals susceptible to foot-and-mouth disease from any country in which it is determined that foot-and-mouth disease exists: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President of the United States and the Secretary of Agriculture thereof that no action be taken for the use of Swan Island as a quarantine station with respect to the importation into this country of animals susceptible to foot-and-mouth disease from any country in any part of which exists foot-and-mouth disease, and respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to this effect; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to every Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

Two joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Finance:

"Senate Joint Resolution 5

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States in relation to changing present Federal laws pertaining to the employment-security programs of the States, and to providing sufficient funds to permit proper administration of the public employment service and the unemployment insurance programs of the State of California

"Whereas this legislature believes firmly in the continuing value of the traditional principle that ours shall be a government of laws and not of men; and

"Whereas although it may be expedient at the beginning to vest broad powers in an administration to legislate by interpretation in order to work out practical methods and corollary principles in the development of a new concept in government, this legislature believes that discretionary administrative powers of interpretation of law should be reduced progressively by more specific law as rapidly as experience permits; and

"Whereas it appears that there is now enough accumulated experience with the employment-security program for Congress to be able to put more into specific provisions of law many of the standards and prescriptions to which a State must conform in order to receive Federal approval, many of which are now so general as to be, for all practical purposes, at the discretion of the Federal Security Administrator; and

"Whereas this legislature believes firmly in the principle that the national interest is best served by permitting each State to experiment with and develop its individual solutions to its own particular problems, insofar as the results are not clearly harmful to the interests or other States or of the Nation as a whole; and

"Whereas the present system, under which the administration of a State's employment service and unemployment-insurance programs is financed fully with Federal money and so is subject to purse-string influence and control by the Federal Government, is inconsistent with a sound State-Federal partnership in solving what is partly a State and partly a National problem; and

"Whereas the present method now prescribed and used by the Federal Security Administrator for budgeting State requirements and apportioning Federal appropriations among the States for administration of the States' own programs offers no incentive to a State to reduce its cost of administration, effectively controls the emphasis which a State may place on any phase of its own program, effectively prevents a State from experimenting in any direction of which the Administrator does not happen to approve, and tends to reduce administration of employment-security programs to a dead level of mediocrity throughout all of the States; and

"Whereas the Federal Unemployment Tax Act now effectively prevents a State from using certain methods of reducing its tax rates for contributions to its unemployment fund to less than the maximum 2.7 percent of subject pay rolls permissible for offset against the Federal tax, whether or not such methods will provide revenue sufficient to maintain the solvency of its unemployment fund; and

"Whereas this legislature believes firmly in the principle that, because ignorance of the law is no excuse for violation of the law, it is a responsibility of government to put the law into such form that a person can find out what provisions of law are effective without a major research effort; and

"Whereas substantive provisions of Federal law which pertain specifically to employment security are scattered through a number of different Federal acts, frequently without indication of what provisions of one act have been amended by another act; and

"Whereas there is now no provision for emergency funds to finance additional administrative costs of employment-security programs due to unforeseen conditions creating overloads; and

"Whereas in the 11 years from July 1, 1936, to June 30, 1947, since which time accurate figures have not yet been published, the Federal Government has made a profit of $49,900,000 from the difference between the $97,900,000 it has collected from California's employers under the unemployment tax and the $48,000,000 it has returned to the State of California in grants for administration of the State's employment-security programs; and

"Whereas because the total amount appropriated by the Eightieth Congress for employment-security administration was substantially less than the amount recommended to be appropriated by the Federal agencies, the Federal grant for administration of the employment-service and unemployment-insurance programs of the State of California for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, is about $4,000,000 less than the $18,300,000 recommended by the Region 12 office of the Federal Security Agency and is insufficient to enable the State properly to serve its citizens and to protect its unemployment fund, as required by State law: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby respectfully memorialized and requested to take such steps as are necessary to bring about the following results:

"1. Wherever practical reduce to more specific standards and prescriptions, stated in law, the requirements to which a State's employment security laws and practices must conform to receive Federal approval, and cut down present broad powers of the Federal Security Administrator to legislate by interpretation of law.

"2. Change the present method of financing administration of State employment security programs to insure that each State may receive a fair proportion of the contributions of its employers for such administration and to reduce the purse-string control of the State's administration by the Federal Security Agency. Amend Federal law to provide that the present 0.3 percent part of the unemployment tax not subject to offset shall be divided between the Federal Government and the State whose employers contribute it, and thereafter that State administration shall be financed by a combination of appropriation by the State and a Federal grant-in-aid.

"3. Amend Federal law to provide that a State may use any method of experience rating or other form of reducing its own unemployment tax rate that it sees fit to use, without loss of the additional credit privilege in computing tax offset against the Federal unemployment tax, provided only that the resulting State tax will maintain the solvency of its unemployment fund, in accordance with specific standards of measurement stated in Federal law.

"4. Rewrite and reenact Federal laws related specifically to employment security activities to consolidate all their provisions into a single act, in logical sequence and without obsolete provisions.

"5. Provide for an emergency fund for State administration of employment security programs, from which additional funds will be available to a State within a fiscal year in unforeseen circumstances which create an administrative overload not contemplated in its original budget.

"6. Provide an immediate emergency supplemental Federal grant to the State of California, for administration of its employment service and unemployment insurance programs, of $2,387,000 to make up the deficit of $500,000 unavoidably incurred in the first half of this current fiscal year as a result of the drastic cut in the expected Federal grant without forewarning, and to restore to the State the $1,887,000, the difference between the amount indicated to be recommended by the Federal agencies and the actual grant for the second half of this fiscal year; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate shall prepare and transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Member of the Senate and of the House of Representatives of the United States from California."

"Senate Joint Resolution 14

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing the Congress of the United States in relation to repealing the transportation tax

"Whereas for the purpose of meeting wartime emergency necessity, the Congress of the United States enacted as excise taxes a 15-percent levy upon the transportation of persons and a 3-percent levy upon the transportation of property; and

"Whereas one of the principal purposes of levying such tax upon the transportation of persons was to discourage unnecessary wartime travel, the need for which no longer exists; and

"Whereas it is the opinion of the Legislature of the State of California that excise taxes should not impose an unfair burden on the long distance shipper and the long distance traveler as does the present tax on the transportation of property and persons; and

"Whereas it should be a principle of Federal taxation to levy taxes in such a manner as to prevent them from falling as an unequal burden on citizens residing in different areas of the country; and

"Whereas the distances to, from, and within the West impose an unfair burden on the western traveler and shipper; and

"Whereas the present transportation tax on property is unfairly burdensome upon the State of California as it adds what is in effect an additional tariff on the goods shipped from California to the eastern markets, with the result that those goods are not able to compete freely with the goods originating in more closely adjacent southern areas; and

"Whereas the State of California is particularly interested in preserving the eastern market as an open market in which the agricultural products of California, in particular, may compete freely with southern produce without the hindrance of artificial barriers such as the present transportation tax; and

"Whereas the State of California is particularly interested in protecting and developing its vacation and tourist travel on an equal basis with other vacation travel areas; and

"Whereas the transportation of both persons and property plays such a vital role in the economic life of this country to the extent that the costs of transportation should always be kept at the lowest possible level; and

"Whereas transportation is in no sense a luxury but is a vital necessity and there is, therefore, sound reason for distinguishing between the transportation taxes and other excise taxes that are imposed upon luxury items; and

"Whereas it is the opinion of the Legislature of the State of California that the best interest of the country and particularly the Western States, who are now discriminated against by the present transportation taxes, would be served by a repeal of those taxes; and

"Whereas there is presently pending before the Congress of the United States H. R. 205 which would repeal the tax on transportation of property and H. R. 208 which would repeal the tax on transportation of persons: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact into law H. R. 205 and H. R. 208 or any other bill or bills which would accomplish the same purpose; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

Four joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Senate Joint Resolution 6

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States in relation to two irrigation canals to supply water from the Sacramento River to areas in northern California

"Whereas the great Central Valley of California consists of two connected valleys, the one to the north comprising the watershed of the Sacramento River and the one to the south comprising the watershed of the San Joaquin River; and

"Whereas the State water plan of California developed from a series of comprehensive investigations conducted principally in the decade following 1920 and envisioned, among other things, a plan for the transfer of large quantities of water from the northern area where water was plentiful to the southern area where it was acutely needed; and

"Whereas the Central Valley Project Act of 1933 had for one of its principal purposes such a large-scale transfer of water from the Sacramento Valley to the San Joaquin Valley; and

"Whereas the State water plan also envisioned the utilization of the water of the Sacramento River within the Sacramento Valley but the original Central Valley Project Act, while it provided that no watershed or area wherein water originates should be deprived of water required for its needs, nevertheless made practically no provision for the utilization of water within the Sacramento Valley; and

"Whereas in 1941 the California Legislature recognized that the project should include some provision for the utilization of the water of the Sacramento River in the area in which it originates and added to the project two units, one, called the Tehama-Colusa conduit, extending from the Sacramento River near Red Bluff through the counties of Tehama, Glenn, and Colusa west of the river, and the other, called the Tehama-Butte conduit, extending from a point near Red Bluff through the counties of Tehama, Butte, and Sutter east of the river; and

"Whereas the United States had theretofore taken over the Central Valley project as a Federal project and the two units have not been added to the project as now being constructed; and

"Whereas in the 1949 session of the Congress of the United States a bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressmen CLAIR ENGLE and HUBERT SCUDDER of California will be under consideration which provides for the inclusion in the Central Valley project of two new features, one called the Tehama-Colusa conduit and the other the Chico conduit; and

"Whereas the conduits provided for in the Engle-Scudder bill will effectuate the same general purposes as the two units above referred to which have already been added to the project as described in the California act; and

"Whereas the Engle-Scudder bill further safeguards the interests of the people of the area affected by requiring that the relevant documents of the State water plan be considered and that local interests affected be consulted; and

"Whereas the utilization of the water of the Sacramento River for the purposes contemplated will not affect or jeopardize any of the other features of the project but, on the contrary, will bring the project into closer conformity with the State water plan, and provide an additional water supply in areas where it is needed: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to give favorable consideration to the Engle-Scudder bill hereinabove referred to, or to take whatever steps may be necessary to provide in such other manner as may be suitable for the construction of the same or similar conduits for the same or similar purposes; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States."

"Senate Joint Resolution 11

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States in relation to establishing a 10-year experimental range program

"Whereas there are approximately 15,000,000 acres of land in California recognized to be grazing land and not suitable for purposes other than providing forage for livestock; and

"Whereas the value of these lands for grazing purposes is subject to the encroachment of noxious weeds and the growth and spreading of useless brush which cause a serious detriment to the value of such lands for grazing purposes; and

"Whereas the United States Forest Service for a period of years conducted a series of studies all relating to rodent damage to pasture lands, the control of rodents, the use of fertilizers, and the planting of new or different types of grasses to improve and preserve the productivity of such grazing lands; and

"Whereas the experiments of the United States Forest Service were conducted at what is known as the San Joaquin Experimental Range, which is located in almost the exact geographical center of the State and is typical of the grazing lands throughout the State; and

"Whereas the work of the United States Forest Service and the benefits derived therefrom have been augmented by a series of studies made by the University of California to determine the value of the grasses as cattle feed, and the value of feeding concentrates as auxiliary to the feeding of such grasses in order to produce more beef value at a lower cost; and

"Whereas the desirability of increasing the productivity of the millions of acres of California grazing land is apparent and a very slight proportionate increase throughout the State would produce millions of dollars in additional values; and

"Whereas the State of California is rapidly developing and increasing in population and all possible steps should be taken to increase the value of the grazing lands of California and the production of livestock to meet the needs of the growing population; and

"Whereas a long-range program of 10 or more years designed to improve the productivity of California's grazing lands would be very desirable and would return many times the cost of such program: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby memorialized and requested to take such steps as may be necessary to provide for a 10-year experimental range program to be conducted within the State of California, and preferably at the San Joaquin Experimental Range, and to make available sufficient funds so that such program can be conducted upon a scale commensurate with its potential value in increasing the productivity of California grazing land; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and the Vice President of the United States, the President pro tempore of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

---

"Senate Joint Resolution 13

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States in relation to the Forestry Service special-use permit fees

"Whereas the new Forestry Service fee schedule now being executed by the Federal Forestry Service is based upon a percentage of gross revenue of the permittee; and

"Whereas a fee based upon a percentage of gross revenue in practical effect taxes the permittee on the capital investment he has added to the unimproved lands; and

"Whereas this would discourage the investment of capital to improve our public lands, thus retarding its development and reducing facilities available to the vacationing public; and

"Whereas there is no relationship between the value of land before improvement by the permittee and the fees charged; and

"Whereas the new fee schedule will cause great hardship in many cases by increasing the fees charged by many hundred percent; and

"Whereas the increase of fees for the use of lands appears entirely inconsistent with the Federal rent-control laws; and

"Whereas increased fees will necessarily raise the cost of services to the vacationing public, thus lessening the volume of business for the permittee, and consequently reducing the revenue for the affected countries: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California hereby respectfully urges the President and the Congress of the United States to take such steps as may be necessary to suspend the new fee schedule pending a full investigation of the conditions, and to revise the schedule so that it will bear a reasonable relationship to the value of the lands, and the use being made of such lands; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate shall prepare and transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each member of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States from California."

"Senate Joint Resolution 15

"Joint resolution respecting memorializing Congress to enact legislation for the relief of gold mining

"Whereas under War Order L-208, effective October 1942, an unusual and unprecedented hardship was inflicted upon the industry of gold mining causing a general suspension of gold mining throughout the United States, thereby seriously injuring many gold-mine operators and ruining many others; and

"Whereas many fine communities in California have been for nearly a century almost wholly dependent upon gold mining and are now threatened with becoming ghost towns, because enforced abandonment of these gold mines is imminent under existing circumstances; and

"Whereas gold mining was the industry which originally founded the prosperity of California and has continuously been one of California's major industries and sources of new wealth up until the said L-208; and

"Whereas the injury and injustice to gold mining has not been remedied but on the contrary becomes more acute, causing poverty and dislocation among the many communities of California's extensive mining regions threatening excessive and unnatural unemployment with the great costs and expense incident thereto a heavy burden upon the State: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of California (now in regular session), That the Congress of the United States be petitioned and urged to take early and effective action toward remedying the distress caused by the said L-208 and to effectuate ways and means of restoring, rehabilitating and preserving in its former circumstances prior to the said L-208, the gold-mining industry; and be it further

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"House Concurrent Resolution 4

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States not to federalize the practice of medicine

"Whereas the American people now enjoy the highest level of health, the finest standards of scientific care and the best quality of medical institutions thus far achieved by any major country in the world; and

"Whereas the great accomplishments of American medicine are the results of a free profession working under a free system unhampered by Government control; and

"Whereas the experience of all countries where government has assumed control of medical care has been progressive deterioration of the standards and quality of that care to the serious detriment of the sick and the needy: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Arkansas, a majority of all the members elected to each house agreeing thereto:

"1. The Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized not to enact any proposed legislation the effect of which will be to bring the practice of medicine in this country under Federal direction and control, either through a form of compulsory insurance or any system of medical care designed for national bureaucratic control.

"2. The Senators and Representatives from Arkansas now in the Congress of the United States are hereby respectfully requested to bend their every effort and utilize all facilities at their command to prevent the enactment of such legislation.

"Whereas the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army has favorably recommended the construction of a series of four dams with locks to provide slack-water navigation from the mouth of the Snake River to Lewiston, Idaho; and

"Whereas the site locations are, namely, Ice Harbor Dam, at mile 10.2 above the mouth of the Snake River; Lower Monumental Dam, at mile 44.7; Little Goose Dam, at mile 72.2; and Lower Granite Dam, at mile 113.1; and

"Whereas these dams are to be enduring structures, constructed for the welfare and benefit of the people of the United States; and

"Whereas the names and works of many of our early explorers and missionaries are indelibly written in the history and development of the Snake River and the entire Pacific Northwest: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That in keeping with our educational and psychological campaign to preserve our liberties, we can look with an artistic view to the possible design of the old mill, or as we know it, the powder house, and realize that it would make a decorative stamp of rare beauty, with the background of being one of the choicest antique relics of the United States: Be it therefore

Resolved, That this board of aldermen do hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to take the proper action to formulate the printing of a stamp depicting the afore-mentioned event; and be it further

COMMISSION ON INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and myself, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to establish a bi-partisan national commission on intergovernmental relations, in which all levels of government are represented, to study problems in Federal, State, and local governments which make for overlapping services, duplication of effort, and sheer waste in tax dollars.

I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement with reference thereto.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am constrained to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard. The Senator understands that under the morning business procedure, remarks are not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have a statement incorporated in the body of the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks, and also to have the text of the bill printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 810) to establish a National Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, introduced by Mr. HENDRICKSON (for himself, Mr. WILEY, Mr. BRICKER, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mr. SCHOEPPEL, Mr. IVES, and Mr. O'CONOR) was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established a national bipartisan commission, in which the various levels of government are represented, to be known as the National Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (hereinafter referred to as the Commission). In view of the constantly increasing complexity, during the last century and a half, of a vast network of relationships among the Federal, State, county, and municipal governments in the United States, this Commission is established for the purpose of studying and making recommendations to the President and the Congress, in an effort to bring about:

(1) The finding of ways and means of establishing a more orderly and less competitive fiscal relationship between the several levels of government. Major aspects of this problem include the overlapping and confused systems of taxation and the increasing demands made upon the Federal Government and the States for tax-sharing and grants-in-aid, without following any consistent over-all pattern.

(2) The elimination of duplication and overlapping services, activities, and functions, and the securing of a better coordination of such services, activities, and functions among the several levels of government.

(3) The attainment of such an allocation of governmental functions among the several levels of government as will contribute to economy in governmental administration on the one hand, and maximum service to the public on the other.

(4) A reduction in the total governmental expenditures to the lowest possible level consistent with the efficient performance of essential services, activities, and functions.

(5) The development, within the existing constitutional framework, of a governmental structure, and such cooperative policies and procedures as will tend to overcome existing obstacles to efficient governmental administration, and to lay a sound foundation for future development.

SEC. 2. (a) The Commission shall be composed of 14 members as follows:

(1) Five appointed by the President of the United States, two of whom shall be officers of the executive branch of the Government, and three of whom shall be private citizens, all of whom shall have had experience with or knowledge of major problems in the field of intergovernmental relations;

(2) Two appointed by the President of the Senate, who shall be Members of the Senate;

(3) Two appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall be Members of the House;

(4) Two appointed by the President of the United States, who shall be State officials, from a panel of at least four, submitted by the Council of State Governments;

(5) Two appointed by the President of the United States, who shall be municipal officials, from a panel of at least four, submitted jointly by the American Municipal Association, the International City Managers Association, and the United States Conference of Mayors;

(6) One appointed by the President of the United States, who shall be a county official, from a panel of at least two, submitted by the National Association of County Officials.

(b) Of the members enumerated in paragraph (1) of subsection (a), not more than three members shall be from any one political party; of each class of members enumerated in paragraphs (2), (3), (4), and (5) of subsection (a), not more than one member shall be from any one political party.

(c) Any vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, but shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

(d) The Commission shall elect a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members.

(e) Seven members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the Commission:

(1) To make a thorough and comprehensive study of the subjects listed below, and of any related subjects, with a view to determining what changes in existing relationships, in its opinion, are necessary to the accomplishment of the purposes set forth in section 1 of this act:

(A) The origin and development, and present status, of the relations and interrelations of the Federal, State and local governments of the United States.

(B) The allocation of governmental functions among the Federal, State, and local Governments of the United States.

(C) The problem of geographical areas as related to governmental functions, field administration, and metropolitan communities.

(D) The gradual encroachment upon our Federal system of current and impending developments in the fiscal relations of the Federal Government with the States, and of the States with their political subdivisions.

(2) To submit its final report and recommendations to the President and the Congress on the subjects indicated above, and suggest plans and procedures for carrying these recommendations into effect, not later than February 1, 1952.

SEC. 4. (a) The Commission may, in carrying out this act, hold such hearings and take such testimony, sit and act at such times and places as it deems advisable. Any member of the Commission may administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses appearing before the Commission. The Commission may delegate the powers conferred by this subsection to any member or to a group of members of the Commission.

(b) The Commission is authorized to secure from any department, agency or independent instrumentality of the executive branch of the Government any information it deems necessary to carry out its functions under this act; and each such department, agency, or instrumentality is authorized and directed to furnish such information to the Commission, upon request made by the Chairman or Vice Chairman.

(c) The Commission shall have power to appoint and fix the compensation of a director of research and all other necessary personnel without regard to the civil service laws, and without reference to political affiliations, solely on the ground of fitness to perform the duties of their office.

SEC. 5. (a) Members of the Commission, other than those to whom subsections (b) and (c) of section 2 are applicable, and within the provisions of subsection (c) of section 5, shall receive compensation at the rate of $50 per day for each day they are engaged in the performance of their duties as members of the Commission, and shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties as members of the Commission.

(b) Members of the Commission who are Members of Congress shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for their services as Members of Congress; but shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties as members of the Commission.

(c) Each member of the Commission from the executive branch of the Government shall receive, in addition to the compensation for duties performed in the executive branch, $50 per day for each day he is engaged in the performance of his duties as a member of the Commission: Provided, however, That his total aggregate annual salary shall not exceed $12,500; and shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred in the performance of his duties as a member of the Commission.

SEC. 6. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. The Commission shall cease to exist at the end of the fiscal year during which its final report to the President and the Congress is made.

The statement by Mr. HENDRICKSON was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HENDRICKSON

This bill, Mr. President, represents the views and expresses the considered judgment of many Members of this body who have served in State government. It is the result of their experience at local and State levels of government that it now comes before us for study, consideration, and appropriate action.

The distinguished junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] has already introduced a resolution to the same effect and purpose. The distinguished junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] has introduced similar legislation. The distinguished Congressman at Large from Delaware, Mr. CALEB BOGGS, is introducing a counterpart of this measure in the House today. The able Governor of my own State, Alfred E. Driscoll, keynoted the proposal at the biannual convention of the Council of State Governments in January 1947. The activities and the deep interest shown by the members and the experts of the Council of State Governments in this matter over the past years demonstrates clearly that there is a definite need for the study established by this bill.

In presenting a very able report on the coordination of Federal and State taxes to a Senate committee last April, our very distinguished colleague, the junior Senator from Ohio [Senator BRICKER] said: "The committee was fully aware that these recommendations do not in any sense offer a comprehensive solution of the present problems of intergovernmental fiscal relations."

This bill, Mr. President, as I have indicated, provides for the establishment of a bipartisan, or better still, a nonpartisan, Commission on Intergovernmental Relations which will examine all aspects and phases of National, State, and local government with special attention to the serious fiscal problems which threaten to overwhelm us today. It is true that there have been many studies in this general field in the past—but none of them have had the full participation of our National Government.

Under this bill, the commission will represent all of the parties at interest, both public and private, Federal, State, and local; legislative and executive, and where necessary, judicial. It will be given the opportunity and the responsibility to report its findings to the people of the Nation.

It is not intended that this group shall lend itself to any criticism of the basic structure of government levels as we know them or to their general purposes, but it is our intention that we improve the services of government at each level and at the same time stretch the value of the tax dollar in respect to the rendition of those services.

When he introduced the bill to establish the Commission on Reorganization of the Executive Branch of the Government, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts said:

"This is not a job which Congress alone, working through congressional committees and using its own staffs, can do. We in Congress have not the time. There is no use deluding ourselves about that. We have not the time to do the job that needs to be done. We would have to leave it to our staffs; and our staffs would not have the standing which the members of this Commission would have in relation to the departments. All sorts of expert knowledge would be required, including the services of industrial engineers and management experts. It would take time and money."

I most heartily agree that such an undertaking requires full-time work from many experts of proven ability in the several fields we propose to study.

Since this bill envisages a full-scale investigation on all levels of government, it is necessary to include the representatives of local and State governments, Members of Congress, administrative officials, and men and women from private life.

The purposes as stated in the bill itself open exciting vistas for tremendous progress in efficient and effective government. To me they spell new opportunities to employ sound and scientific business methods in public operations.

The entire world watches us day by day as we conduct our public affairs. To friends and foes we are the outstanding example of the democratic processes of government. If we are to prosper and be worthy of the hopes of those who trust and rely upon us, we must be eternally vigilant that our system does not become fatally enmeshed in coils of its own construction.

The time is ripe for such an undertaking as this—indeed our present situation demands positive and definite action.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, following the remarks which have just been ordered printed with relation to the bill of which I am a cosponsor, I may have the privilege of having printed in the RECORD a statement which I have prepared.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR ALEXANDER WILEY

COINTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL COMMISSION ON INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

Mr. President, I am introducing today on behalf of myself and others, a companion bill to a very important measure prepared by and being introduced today in the House of Representatives by the Honorable J. CALEB BOGGS, Congressman at Large from the State of Delaware. The purpose of this bill is to establish a temporary National Commission on Intergovernmental Relations along the lines of the Hoover Commission on Reorganization of the Executive Branch of the Government.

Congressman BOGGS has devoted nearly a full year of study in cooperation with many prominent individuals and groups preparatory to introduction of this legislation. He has kindly invited members of his own Republican and of the Democratic Party to join with him in co-sponsoring similar legislation and I am happy to do so here on the Senate side for myself and others.

Hodge-podge of duplication

The purpose of this bill is to study the slap-happy, hodge-podge of duplication of authority and functions between Federal, State, and local governments; to analyze the jig-saw puzzle of overlapping taxes between Uncle Sam, the States, and localities; to prepare a comprehensive survey of "grants-in-aid" which have become used to a tremendous extent in recent years; to analyze the increasing centralization of power of the Federal Government and of its fiscal authority.

Congressman BOGGS is preparing a very comprehensive statement on this subject in the House today and I respectfully commend his statement to the attention of my colleagues.

Jumble-jungle-jangle of duplication

I, personally, have been deeply interested in this subject since my coming to the Senate in 1939, and I have introduced my own decentralization legislation on several occasions. I feel that there are few more important subjects for active interest of Congress and of our people than this matter of straightening out the haphazard, jumble, jungle, and jangle of Federal, State, local work.

Undoubtedly, the Hoover Commission will itself be making preliminary recommendations for a survey of this very field, and I feel that by our consideration of this legislation in the early future, we will be that much more advanced toward solving one of the really pressing problems of our times.

Problem in Wisconsin and other States

I can state personally that in my own State of Wisconsin, the fact that the Federal Government has pre-empted many sources of tax revenue, has served to "dry up the tax spring," so to speak, in many localities, and this has resulted in a staggering burden on our financially overburdened villages, municipalities, and State Government. The same is true throughout the Nation.

The Council of State Governments, to name but one of many prominent organizations, has been intensely active toward a resolution of this problem. I feel that this national commission being recommended today could go a long way in making a monumental contribution to restoring governmental and fiscal sanity at all levels of American political administration.

I feel, too, that if this legislation is approved by the Congress, as I hope it will be, it will mark a historic turning point at which a gradual decentralization of authority may be begun. Considerable economies may be expected as a result of recommendations which will come from such a Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

AMENDMENT OF ECONOMIC COOPERATION ACT

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill. It is introduced by request, because it relates to the ECA. It is quite technical in some of its provisions, and we have not had an opportunity thoroughly to digest some of its provisions. We want to start hearings on the bill tomorrow, and it is necessary to have some form of bill before us.

The bill (S. 833) to amend the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ADEQUATE AND BALANCED FLOW OF FISH IN INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. MAGNUSON. I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide an adequate and balanced flow of fish in interstate and foreign commerce, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement prepared by me, together with statistical and summary data taken from Senate Document No. 51 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, entitled "Fishery Resources of the United States," be printed in the RECORD. These data demonstrate in a summary fashion the importance of fisheries to our economy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the remarks and statistical and summary data will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 856) to provide for an adequate and balanced flow of fish and fish products in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MAGNUSON, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The statement by Senator MAGNUSON, together with the statistical and summary data, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MAGNUSON

This bill proposes to create a Fisheries Stabilization Corporation in the Department of the Interior. It proposes to capitalize this Corporation for $5,000,000 and give it a borrowing power of $75,000,000. My bill authorizes and directs the Corporation to conduct operations aimed at stabilizing the price of fish to the producer—our fishermen.

There are approximately 150,000 fishermen in this country. These men are dependent for their livelihood upon the size of their catch, but even more so, upon the price they get for the raw fish. The price paid the fisherman for his product is subject to extreme fluctuations. Just as the farmer is receiving Government assistance through price-support activities, as carried on by the Commodity Credit Corporation, so this bill proposes similar operations for fishermen.

I frankly state, I do not consider this bill a finished product. I think, however, it will serve as an excellent starting point for the committee as it considers the problem of our fishermen, and how to extend to them the benefits of a stabilized industry. Legislation to assist the farmer is familiar to all of you. There are before the Congress now numerous proposals to raise the minimum wages of our workers to 75 cents an hour. I have supported all measures of this character and request all of you who have consistently advocated farm price supports and adequate minimum wages to study my bill carefully, give me the benefit of your thinking on it and lend me your assistance in enacting legislation to stabilize the fisheries industry.

ECONOMICS OF THE UNITED STATES FISHERIES

In an average prewar year with purse seines, 13,000 fishermen caught 2,100,000,000 pounds; with otter trawls, 11,000 fishermen caught 700,000,000 pounds; with lines, 24,000 fishermen caught 500,000,000 pounds; with gill nets, 19,000 fishermen caught 200,000,000 pounds; with pound nets, 6,000 fishermen caught 400,000,000 pounds; with all other types of gear, 19,000 fishermen caught 500,000,000 pounds. Total production, 4,400,000,000 pounds of fish.

These fish were processed thus: 1,500,000,000 pounds were canned, 340,000,000 pounds were fillet-packaged, 150,000,000 pounds were cured, 130,000,000 pounds were frozen whole, 680,000,000 pounds were sold fresh, 1,600,000,000 pounds were made into fish meal and oil and other byproducts.

Statistics on fishermen: 31,900 fishermen worked regularly on vessels of over 5 tons net; 33,400 fishermen worked regularly on smaller boats or from shore; 59,500 fishermen worked casually on smaller boats or from shore.

THE 1943 VALUE OF FISH AND FISHERY PRODUCTS

The initial value of the fresh fish to be canned was $60,800,000; canning added $96,200,000; wholesaling added $15,700,000; retailing added $57,500,000; for canned fish the United States public paid $230,200,000.

The initial value of the fresh fish to be made into oil, meal, and byproducts was $12,000,000; manufacturing added $42,900,000; distributing added $5,500,000; for oil, meal, and byproducts the United States public paid $60,400,000.

The initial value of the fish to be sold as fresh fish was $60,400,000; primary wholesaling added $22,100,000; secondary wholesaling added $20,700,000; retailing added $34,400,000; for fresh fish the United States public paid $137,600,000.

The initial value of fish to be filleted and packaged was $23,600,000; processing added $40,400,000; wholesaling added $16,000,000; retailing added $26,700,000; for packaged fillets the United States public paid $106,700,000.

The initial value of fish to be frozen (other than filleted) was $6,700,000; processing added $2,300,000; primary wholesaling added $3,200,000; secondary wholesaling added $3,000,000; retailing added $5,100,000; for frozen fish (other than filleted) the United States public paid $20,300,000.

The initial value of fish to be cured, smoked, and pickled was $10,800,000; processing added $7,200,000; primary wholesaling added $6,500,000; secondary wholesaling added $6,200,000; retailing added $10,200,000; for cured, smoked, and pickled fish the United States public paid $40,900,000.

Total initial value, $174,300,000; total paid by United States public, $596,100,000.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

These are the conclusions to be drawn from the facts given:

1. The United States fishery resources are a very important part of the national wealth. Their money and employment value, their unique food properties, and their universal recreational appeal make them worth whatever effort is necessary to maintain them at high productive level. Like any other form of wealth, this inheritance of ours can be abused, misspent, and ruined from want of care. It can be wasted as much by a miserly failure to use it fully. This book has given us examples of fishery resources that were once great and valuable but which now are reduced to insignificance through bad management (Great Lakes ciscoes and whitefish of Lake Huron; Atlantic salmon, among others); and it has given us other examples of fishery resources that are still hardly touched (Pacific coast anchovies, cod, pollock).

2. From a conservation viewpoint, the fisheries are perhaps the most poorly managed of all our national resources. Legislative regulations governing them, where they exist at all, are piecemeal, localized, and often based on lay opinion, superstition, or snap judgment, rarely on knowledge. Yet there is a science of fishery conservation, which is highly specialized and exact. That it has not been more fruitful in this country is no reflection on the science or the scientists but rather on the public's failure to back them up. True, fishery science is costly. It has to be costly if it is to be properly done; but it more than pays for itself in increased value and security of wealth which it strives to protect. Nevertheless, Federal and State conservation agencies have everywhere been required to do their fishery conservation work on a financial shoestring. Small wonder that they have obtained shoestring results. There is only one example of a fishery resource that has been successfully studied and conserved over most of its range; that is the Pacific halibut, administered by the International Fisheries Commission since 1930. This is the only fishery conservation agency that has come even close to being adequately supported in money and personnel.

3. However much the American public might treasure its fish for the food and recreational value they afford, it shows little respect for the water they must inhabit. It defiles its streams and lakes with sewage and industrial wastes; it draws from them for irrigation and for domestic and manufacturing purposes; it uses them for transportation, and it blocks them off with high dams. These uses all involve modifications in the water courses of one sort or another, which are too often antagonistic to fish life. In addition, all sorts of other human activities serve to destroy fish habitats. Yet there is no reason why man's uses of water need be inimical to maintaining fishery resources. That they have been so is largely the consequence of the lack of coordination among the many agencies—Federal, State, municipal, private—which are separately concerned with the various uses of water, and the lack of representation by conservation agencies in the designing and operation of water-use plans.

4. The commercial fisheries, taken as a whole, are among the least progressive industries in the United States. They are generally slow to improve their products, to develop new ones, to exploit virgin resources, to correct wasteful fishing methods or to utilize the whole of their raw material. This backwardness is not the fault of the industry, but rather the consequence of its widespread, diffuse character. The fishing industries are composed of small, independent enterprises, widely scattered throughout the country and along extended coast lines; they are concerned with a great diversity of local fisheries, and they are beset by a notoriously unstable supply. Most fishery companies must be conservative to survive and are too small to carry on technological research for developing new fields, except at best on a very limited scale. In most States public agencies have not been equipped or staffed to help them, and the Federal Government gives them only a fraction of the aid it affords other food industries.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further bills or joint resolutions? If not, the next order of business is concurrent and other resolutions.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, concurrent resolutions are now in order. As I understand, the resolution to discharge the Committee on Rules and Administration from the further consideration of Senate Resolution 15 is not yet in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not now in order. It comes up automatically at the end of the morning business. Following the order under which the Senate is now operating, namely, concurrent and other resolutions, that resolution will be laid down automatically.

THE INDONESIAN SITUATION

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I submit a resolution. Associated with me in it are also the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY]. This resolution deals with the Indonesian situation. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the RECORD at this point, together with a statement of facts of the situation, the speech of Ambassador Philip C. Jessup in the Security Council on January 11, 1949, and a further statement of facts, together with a series of questions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be printed in the RECORD, and the matters referred to by the Senator from Maine will be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution (S. Res. 56) was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Royal Netherlands Government, on December 19, 1948, in violation of her sworn commitments under the Renville agreement, signed by the Netherlands and the Republic of Indonesia aboard the U. S. S. Renville, January 17, 1948, under the auspices of the United Nations Good Offices Committee, did willfully and without warning launch a military attack against the Republic of Indonesia; and

Whereas the United States delegation to the Security Council of the United Nations did join with the delegations of Colombia and Syria to introduce a resolution in the Security Council, at Paris, December 22, 1948, stating that the Security Council "* * * considers such resumption of hostilities (in Indonesia) to be in conflict with the resolution adopted by the Security Council at its one hundred and seventy-first meeting of August 1, 1947 * * " and " * * calls upon the parties (a) to cease hostilities forthwith; and (b) immediately to withdraw their armed forces to their respective sides of the demilitarized zones established under the truce agreement (Renville) of January 17, 1948 * * *"; and

Whereas the United Nations Security Council, on December 24, 1948, did order the Royal Netherlands Government to cease hostilities forthwith and "immediately to release the President [of the Republic of Indonesia] and other political prisoners arrested since December 18, 1948 * * *"; and

Whereas the Royal Netherlands Government did ignore these orders of the United Nations Security Council and did ignore further orders of the Security Council, issued on December 27, 1948, calling for release of the political prisoners within 24 hours: Therefore be it

Resolved, That, in full support of the foreign policy of the United States and in support of the United Nations, the President is hereby urged to cause an immediate cessation of all financial aid, through the Economic Cooperation Administration or any other United States Government agency, directly or indirectly, to the Royal Netherlands Government, in Europe as well as in Indonesia, until the Royal Netherlands Government ceases hostilities against the Indonesian Republic, withdraws her armed forces to her side of the demilitarized zones established under the Renville Agreement of January 17, 1948, releases all Indonesian Republican Government leaders arrested since December 18, 1948, and opens bona fide negotiations with the Indonesian Republic under the terms of the Renville agreement.

The matters presented by Mr. BREWSTER were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FACTS OF THE CURRENT INDONESIAN SITUATION

1. The Dutch have received more than one billion dollars since VE-day: $350,000,000 lend-lease and UNRRA, $290,000,000 World Bank, $195,000,000 Export-Import Bank, $400,000,000 ECA.

2. The Dutch are asking for $600,000,000 in ECA funds for next year.

3. The Dutch have maintained 150,000 troops in Indonesia for the past two years at an expense exceeding $1,000,000 per day.

4. The Dutch own $4,000,000,000 in Indonesia; the Indonesians $15,000,000. United States investments total $250,000,000 in Indonesia. By and large, the Dutch have shut American business out.

5. The Dutch, for 30 years, have taken at least $200,000,000 a year clear profit out of Indonesia—the fact is that 70,000,000 Indonesians average 15 to 30 cents a day as family income (an average family of five). In brief Indonesia is a gold mine.

6. For the past 40 years, a national independence movement has existed in Indonesia, led by moderate Republicans who have consistently fought all radical tendencies and within the past year have suppressed by force of arms a small Communist uprising.

7. Following VJ-day the Dutch promised full independence to Indonesia and made two agreements to this effect, the Linggadjati and Renville Agreements, the latter agreement being negotiated under the auspices of the UN Good Offices Committee.

8. On December 19, without warning, the Dutch attacked the Indonesian Republic and took prisoner its leading officials.

9. The State Department on December 22 condemned this act of aggression in the Security Council meeting at Paris and by resolution asked that (a) a cease fire order be issued, (b) the Indonesian Republican leaders be released immediately, and (c) the Dutch troops withdraw from Republican territory.

10. Points (a) and (b) were adopted by the Security Council; the Dutch refused to comply with the order of the Security Council.

11. Nehru of India promptly called a conference of 19 Asiatic and African nations (including Australia and New Zealand) to take action against the Dutch.

12. Moscow has seized upon the situation and its radio is proclaiming day and night that the United States is hypocritical, pointing to the fact that we have financed the Dutch and are continuing to do so.

STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR PHILIP C. JESSUP IN SECURITY COUNCIL ON JANUARY 11, 1949, ON INDONESIA

The United States Government can find no adequate justification for the military action taken by the Netherlands in Indonesia. In many important respects, the reasons put forth by the Netherlands representative at the meeting of the Security Council on December 22 in Paris and again here last Friday as to the justification for their action are not supported by the reports of the Committee on Good Offices. In our view, the Netherlands military action is in conflict with the Renville agreement and with the Security Council's resolutions of August 1 and November 1, 1947.

As the United States delegation has frequently made clear, it is our opinion that these two Security Council resolutions were adopted under the provisions of article 40, chapter VII of the Charter, and that, therefore, in accordance with article 25 of the Charter, the Netherlands Government was and is under obligation to comply.

On the initiative of the United States, the Security Council was called into session in Paris to consider the emergency created by the military action of the Dutch authorities. The United States, joining with Colombia and Syria, introduced a resolution which called upon both parties to cease hostilities forthwith and immediately to withdraw their armed forces to their respective sides of the demilitarized zones under the Renville truce agreement of January 17, 1948. Unfortunately, the paragraph calling for the withdrawal of forces was not adopted by the Council. The Council on December 24 passed the resolution calling upon the parties to cease hostilities forthwith and to release the political prisoners which had been arrested since the 18th of December. Later, on December 28, the Council passed an additional resolution calling upon the Dutch authorities to release the political prisoners within 24 hours. The Netherlands representative has assured the Council that his Government has complied with the cease-fire and release of prisoners order of the Council. Neither my Government nor the Committee on Good Offices consider they have done so. The Committee has reported on this as follows:

"The Committee is not in a position to report that there has been satisfactory compliance with subparagraph (A) of the resolution of December 24, which called on the parties to cease hostilities.

"(A) The telegram dispatched to territorial commanders in Java by the chief of staff of the Royal Netherlands Indonesian Army at 1700, December 29, 1948, is, according to its terms, for information and cannot be construed as an order to 'cease hostilities forthwith.' (Par. 9 above.) The dissemination of the order of the commander in chief to territorial commanders in Java which confirmed the fact that hostilities in Java had ended at 2400 of December 31 was begun at 1845 Batavia time, January 2. (Par. 9 above.) In Sumatra where a 'special emergency situation' existed, the parallel order disseminated late on January 4 had an effective time of 1200, January 5, 1949. (Par. 10 above.)

"(B) It is noted that these orders were issued at a time when the 'operational phase' of military activities presumably had been completed. (Appendixes I and II of Netherlands letter of January 3, par. 4 above.) The orders noted respectively that hostilities had terminated on December 31, 1948, in Java and on January 5, 1949, in Sumatra, but charged the troops to 'carry out action against roving groups, bands of individuals, who attempt to cause unrest or, as was stated by our representative to the Security Council, to act against disturbing elements, who either individually or collectively endanger public security or interfered with or prevent the supply of food and other essential commodities to the needy population.'

"The orders permit the continuation of the very type of military action that would be required against the guerrilla resistance likely to be offered by regular or irregular Republican forces (pars. 5 and 9 above).

"(C) As a result of the immobilization of its military observers the committee has no first-hand information as to the effect of the order discussed above.

"(D) The committee is of the opinion that these orders issued more than a week after the adoption of the resolution of December 24, and expressed as they were, cannot be looked upon as satisfactory compliance with subparagraph (A) of the resolution.

"(E) There is no channel available to the committee for dissemination of the resolution of December 24 to the Government or to the commanders of the Republican Army (par. 8 above). Subparagraph (b) of the Security Council's resolution of December 24, calling for the immediate release of the President of the Republic and other political prisoners, has not been implemented. So far as the committee is aware, President Sukarno, Vice President Hatta, and the other members of the Republican Government, who were captured by Netherlands forces on December 19, are still under detention."

Despite the statements to the Security Council by the Netherlands representative on December 27 and 29, the committee has not been in a position to make independent investigations of any kind in the field for the purpose of carrying out its functions under the resolution of December 24. It has been heard unofficially and informally that certain military and naval liaison officers attached to some of the consular officials in Batavia took advantage of a Netherlands offer to conduct them on a tour of some of the military areas on January 5–6. These officers are not the military observers of the Committee of Good Offices and their observations are not available to the committee, even if their tour was the type of field investigation and observation required by the functions of the committee.

The continuance of military action of the Netherlands authorities after the Security Council resolution of December 24 was clearly an act of defiance on the part of the Netherlands authorities. No excuses offered by the Dutch Government can conceal the fact that they have failed to comply with the Security Council demands, both in refusing to cease-fire immediately and in refusing to release the political prisoners immediately. In the opinion of the Government of the United States, the representative of the Netherlands has failed to relieve his Government from the serious charges that it has violated the Charter of the United Nations.

The purpose of the Security Council cease-fire order of December 24 was to stop the fighting in Indonesia immediately so that the dispute could be settled not by force, but by the processes of peaceful settlement enjoined by the Charter on member states.

Even though members of the Council were well aware that it was the Netherlands authorities which had initiated the resumption of military action, the resolution of the Security Council called on both parties to order a cease-fire. In such situations this is an appropriate form of Security Council resolution since the cessation must be mutual no matter who was responsible for starting the fighting.

It must be assumed therefore that in ordering a cease-fire, the Council could only have intended that such an order would apply equally and simultaneously to both sides. The Council could not have expected one side to comply unilaterally while the other considered itself free to comply at such a time and in such a way as it saw fit. The continuance of military action by the Netherlands forces until all military objectives have been taken cannot be regarded as compliance with the cease-fire order. Certainly the reservation of the right by one side to use its own forces in the territory of the other side to eliminate armed adherents of that side, which may so far have escaped destruction, cannot be regarded as compliance with the cease-fire order. Taking these factors into account, I am sure that the Security Council has no intention of approving action consolidating military victories which themselves were gained as a result of open defiance of an order of the Council.

Probably the most striking and clearest disregard of the orders of the Security Council is to be found in the refusal of the Dutch authorities to release President Sukarno and Prime Minister Hatta and the other leading officials of the Government of the Republic of Indonesia. Quite aside from the disregard of the Security Council's resolution of December 28, which required that these prisoners should be released within 24 hours, there is the present fact that these persons are still not at liberty. The Security Council cannot be expected to accept the view of the Netherlands Government that these prisoners have been released because they are given a certain liberty of movement on the Island of Banka. In an archipelago comprising thousands of islands, liberty of movement which is restricted to a single island, one which, I might add, was under Netherlands control even under the Renville truce agreement, cannot be regarded as being in conformity with the Council's resolutions of December 24 and 28. The clear intent of these resolutions was that the high officials of the Republican Government should be restored to a position in which they would be free to exercise their governmental authority. The minimum which would seem to be called for at this moment is that the President and other interned officers of the Republic should be allowed to return to their capitol and to exercise their appropriate functions there free from the constraint of any occupying army. They should be free to establish and maintain contact with other officials of their government. They should also be free to provide their own forces for maintenance of law and order in Jogjakarta.

Further, my government in considering the Netherlands-Indonesian dispute cannot but recall a history of noncooperation on the part of the Netherlands in the work of the Good Offices Committee in Indonesia.

The failure to achieve political settlement and the protracted negotiations which followed the signing of the Renville agreement in January 1948 brought about in Indonesia an increased tension between the Netherlands and the Republic with a consequent increase in provocative incidents which sorely strained the truce. The bill of particulars for these actions has, over a period of months, been reported by the GOC to the Council. From these reports it appears that even prior to the resumption of military action against the Republic, the Netherlands pursued a policy which had the effect of weakening the Republic; working unnecessary hardship on the population; isolating the Republican Government economically and politically, and presenting it with a prefabricated interim administration for Indonesia with which it was to associate itself but which it had no part in forming. My government considers these actions and the Netherlands failure to enter into bona fide negotiations since May of last year to be indicative of a reluctance to utilize the procedure for pacific settlement made available by the United Nations, and to be in conflict with both the spirit and letter of the Linggadjati and Renville agreements.

From a purely pragmatic point of view it should be pointed out that the quick military successes of the Netherlands forces will not effect a solution of the Indonesian problem. The United States Government cannot associate itself with any aspect of the Netherlands military action. The use of force in this situation makes the solution of the problem far more complex and difficult. The problem remains a matter of international concern with which the Security Council must continue to deal. It cannot be solved if we begin on the basis of acceptance of the fruits of the illegal use of force.

The Republic of Indonesia represents the largest single political factor in the projected federation and should therefore have a voice in the formation of the federation. The Republic has a twofold nature. Firstly, it is a political entity and secondly, it is the heart of Indonesian nationalism. This latter attribute cannot be eliminated by any amount of military force. The Netherlands Government may find that far from assuring law and order in the Indies the action they have embarked upon may instead let loose forces of terror, chaos and sabotage. It may well be that the only victory will be that of the forces of anarchy.

My government is of the opinion that real peace in Indonesia can be expected only if there is a settlement of the political issues on the basis of the principles and procedures agreed to by the parties in the Linggadjati and Renville agreements and under the auspices of United Nations machinery.

The responsibility for the future rests in the first instance on the Netherlands authorities. The Security Council has a right to assume that the Netherlands Government will in accordance with its obligations bring to an end its defiance of the Security Council and give its full cooperation toward a fair and reasonable solution of the Indonesian question.

My Government has over a substantial period of time devoted serious thought to the problem and to its proper solution. Our views are contained in the plan which our representative on the Good Offices Committee submitted to the two parties on September 10 of last year and which was accepted by both of them as a basis for the resumption of negotiations. If Indonesian leaders were restored to their rightful position as the responsible representatives of the Republic of Indonesia, free to conduct the affairs of their Government and to negotiate freely with the Netherlands Government concerning the future of Indonesia, and if these two Governments could proceed to negotiate on the basis of this proposal in accordance with their earlier undertakings this would be a notable contribution to the ultimate solution of the Indonesian problem.

A first and fundamental step in this direction should be the fixing of a definite date for the holding of elections throughout all Indonesia with a view to establishing the foundations of the United States of Indonesia. Secondly, and also of fundamental importance, is the fixing of a firm date for the transfer of sovereignty from the Kingdom of the Netherlands to the United States of Indonesia.

The elections should be for the purpose of choosing an assembly to represent the people of Indonesia as a provisional legislature and at the same time as a constituent assembly for the purpose of drawing up a constitution. The elections should be held by secret ballot with all the safeguards necessary to insure a vote free from any coercion. Freedom of assembly, speech, and publication must be guaranteed as provided in the Renville agreement. This program contemplates a termination of the type of military occupation of the country which has been brought about by Dutch military action. The withdrawal of the Dutch armies should commence at the earliest possible date and as rapidly as the need for the preservation of law and order permit. The occupation must be completely terminated before an effective transfer of sovereignty could take place.

My Government believes that the length of time which should elapse between the present and the date when elections should take place, and also the date of transfer of sovereignty, should be calculated in terms of months and not in terms of years. As soon as elections have been held and a provisional regime set up, authority should be turned over progressively to the new regime by the Netherlands Government, and the transfer should have been completed by the time when sovereignty is assumed by the United States of Indonesia.

As I have stated earlier, the problem of Indonesia remains a matter of international concern with which the Security Council must continue to deal. The carrying out of the steps necessary for the ultimate transfer of the sovereignty of the United States of Indonesia should, we believe, be accomplished under the auspices of the United Nations and with the help of the machinery it affords. The Good Offices Committee in its report of January 7 has appropriately pointed out that it does not wish to be put in a position of seeming to approve by its participation or even its authentication any settlement based on force rather than on true negotiation. The Good Offices Committee was created at the outset as an instrument to further free negotiations between the parties. The Dutch action has temporarily suspended the Committee's ability to carry out that function. But the Council's agencies in the field remain in existence ready to carry out any task assigned to them by the Security Council. No temporary suspension of the functioning of an agency of the Security Council can operate to remove an established interest of the United Nations in dealing with a situation to which the Security Council has already addressed itself. In this connection it is necessary to call attention to the report of the Good Offices Committee which indicates that the Netherlands authorities took upon themselves the authority to question whether the military observers were reporting to the Consular Commission or the Good Offices Committee. This is not a question which concerns the Netherlands authorities. The Security Council can utilize any agency which it considers appropriate, and it is the obligation of a member of the United Nations to cooperate with any and all agencies operating under Security Council instructions.

It cannot be denied that despite the efforts of some governments of states which are members of the Security Council, this body has not yet succeeded in overcoming the obstacles which have been placed in the path of achieving a peaceful settlement in Indonesia. The responsibility of the Netherlands Government for this lack of success has already been made clear. Another obstacle has been created by the action of a member of the United Nations which has in many parts of the world sought to obstruct the successful operation of the United Nations. I refer to the Soviet Union.

When this question of Indonesia was being discussed in the Security Council in Paris, the Soviet Union speaking both through its own representative and through the Ukrainian representative followed its familiar procedure of endeavoring to cloak its own improper actions by seeking to place the blame on someone else. The representative of the Soviet Union and the representative of the Ukraine both insinuated that the Government of the United States was in some way responsible for the action of the Netherlands in resorting to hostilities against the Indonesian Republic. It thus becomes necessary to point out again certain salient facts. In the first place, it was the Government of the United States which took the initiative in convening an urgent meeting of the Security Council when it became apparent that the Dutch were resorting to military action. It was the Soviet Government that prevented the Security Council from acting promptly by insisting that the Council meeting should be deferred for 3 days. Every other member of the Council attended the meeting on December 20 except the two Soviet representatives. The United States also took the initiative in conjunction with the representatives of Colombia and Syria in proposing a resolution to the Security Council to deal with the situation, but the Soviet representative refused to support this resolution. He later tried to cover up this further attempt to prevent the Security Council from acting by introducing a resolution of his own which he knew could not be adopted by the Council.

More fundamental, however, than these obstructionist tactics in the Security Council is the fact that the Soviet Union is fundamentally opposed to the government of the Republic of Indonesia and has itself through the Communist Party, which is, of course, its mouthpiece throughout the world, sought to undermine and overthrow this government. No one doubts that the Communists in Indonesia like the Communists throughout the world are responsive to and act in accordance with instructions from Moscow. The Communist revolt against the government of President Soekarno and Premier Hatta was thus an effort on the part of the Soviet Government to overthrow the Indonesian Republic. Furthermore, when the resumption of hostilities by the Netherlands Government against the Indonesian Republic took place, the official Communist line as printed in the Communist press instead of deploring this action, openly gloated that this action was a punishment for the government of President Soekarno and Premier Hatta who had successfully put down the Communist revolt. The Communist line, which I again repeat means the line of the Soviet Government, accused that distinguished statesman of the Indonesian Republic, Dr. Hatta, of being a traitor to his country. At the very time when editorials were appearing to this effect in the Communist Party organ in Paris, the Soviet representative on the Council sought to cover up the actual policy of his government by identifying himself with the Council's endeavors to ensure the release of Dr. Hatta and other political prisoners. These are the facts on the record which are known to the world and which reveal that the Soviet Government has no interest in supporting the government of the Indonesian Republic or of restoring peace to Indonesia. On the contrary, it is following its familiar tactics which it has used in Korea, in Greece, and Berlin, and again now in Indonesia, and which have been described in the speeches of many delegates in the last session of the General Assembly, namely, seeking to overthrow a lawful democratic government and to undermine its authority. The Soviet Union does not want an independent Indonesia. It wants an Indonesia under the domination and control of a Communist minority taking its orders from Moscow. Anywhere in the world when a Communist government climbs in through the window, independence is kicked out of the door.

The Government of the United States on the contrary has viewed with admiration the efforts of the Indonesian people both in the Republic and elsewhere to gain their independence and has steadfastly sought to support them. It still takes that position and it is for this reason that it has taken the lead in endeavoring in the Security Council and in the Good Offices Committee to bring about a peaceful adjustment of the difficulties between the Indonesian Republic and the Netherlands Government and to establish the United States of Indonesia as one of the fully sovereign and independent peoples of the world.

IT'S 1776 IN INDONESIA

December 19, 1948, Holland invaded the Republic of Indonesia with a crushing, sneak attack like Japan's on Pearl Harbor, like Nazi Germany's on Holland itself.

The UN-negotiated Renville agreement was trampled. Solemn international discussions were used as cover-up for weeks of Dutch preparation.

Holland, home of Kris Kringle and good cheer, timed its murder for Christmas. World leaders were conveniently dispersed. The UN General Assembly had adjourned. So had the United States Congress.

In Indonesia itself, the Dutch first cut off the UN delegation's telegraph lines, then notified it. Elaborate deceptions kept republicans off guard.

Then the Dutch struck without mercy or honor, but with American-manufactured planes, tanks, guns.

The Netherlands lately and always has promised Indonesia independence in words, brutally suppressed it in fact.

THE RENVILLE AGREEMENT, JANUARY 17, 1948

Promise: Free plebiscites within 6 months to a year in areas claimed by both sides; a constituent convention; an all-Indonesia legislature; voluntary Dutch-Indonesia union. On February 3, 1948, Queen Wilhelmina broadcast to the world: "Colonialism is dead."

Deed: All-out invasion on December 19, 1948; complete sea blockade of republican trade for 2½ years, even on essential imports like medical supplies.

THE LINGGADJATI AGREEMENT, MARCH 1947

Promise: A sovereign United States of Indonesia by January 1949; guaranty of Indonesian rights in interim period; voluntary Dutch-Indonesian union.

Deed: All-out invasion on July 20, 1947, stopped short of complete destruction of the Republic only by Security Council cease-fire order; refusal to implement agreement because of reinterpretation; sea blockade.

POSTSURRENDER PERIOD, AUGUST 1945

Promise: Constitutional reform; new era.

Deed: Immediate mobilization of war-starved Dutch reservists for invasion service in Indonesia; dispatch of 120,000 troops over the next year or two.

QUEEN WILHELMINA'S WARTIME PLEDGE, DECEMBER 6, 1942

Promise: A postwar conference leading to "a commonwealth in which the Netherlands, Indonesia, Surinam, and Curaçao will participate."

Deed: Prewar refusal to train Indonesians militarily for their own defense; postwar use of armed force to restore Dutch power.

The direct Hitlerlike rupture of the Renville agreement is the most recent case in point.

Promise: The Renville agreement, January 17, 1948, reached through the UN Good Offices Committee, with especial United States encouragement, stipulated in particular; "10.) This agreement shall be considered binding unless one party notifies the Committee of Good Offices and the other party that it considers the truce regulations are not being observed by the other party and that this agreement should therefore be terminated."

In general, it provided a military truce and a set of 18 political principles as a basis for final settlement.

Deed: The Dutch notified the committee and the Republic of their December 19 invasion just as it began. Telegraph facilities of both were cut in advance, eliminating UN communications.

The Linggadjati agreement, March 1947, was likewise breached by a bloody, unheralded invasion during negotiations on its implementation.

Promise: After hysterical, false denunciation of the Republic as Japanese created, terror by Dutch forces and establishment of Dutch-controlled independent states outside the Republic had all failed to break it, the Dutch next tried negotiation.

The Linggadjati agreement, which resulted, guaranteed Indonesian freedom, with something like dominion status. It also provided an interim period during which a mixed Dutch-Indonesian administration would prepare for the transfer of power. Furthermore, it gave formal Dutch recognition of the Republic as the de facto authority in Java, Sumatra, and Madura, the three main islands.

Deed: The agreement reached was 90 percent Dutch, but the Republic accepted it to facilitate a quick settlement. This was in June 1946. Republicans were assured Dutch ratification was a matter of a few days or weeks. Actually, it was March 1947 before Dutch signatures were affixed. The intervening months were occupied with Dutch obstruction and attempts to force new proposals on the Republic.

Both before and after signing, Holland repeatedly ignored the agreement, occupying major republican cities, bringing in 120,000 troops, 30,000 more than previously agreed. Dutch interpretations of their commitments were so extensive that even after the signing, implementation was impossible. Negotiation continued.

At midnight July 20, 1947, while republican leaders awaited reply to their latest formal communication, they were abruptly notified of suspension of the agreement. Simultaneously, full-scale war was launched. It ended only when the Security Council issued a cease-fire order some days later.

By that time, Holland had what it wanted most, the richest producing areas of the Republic.

Before, during, and just after the war, Holland volubly promised freedom, belied itself in action.

Promise: The famous Visman report of 1941 supposedly laid the technical base for it; Queen Wilhelmina's speech of December 1942, pledged it; Dutch utterances just after the surrender of Japan seemed to assume it.

Deed: The Visman report provided excuse for years of delay, while being made; Dutch administration and weakness left Indonesia defenseless before Japan. After the war, Holland left no effort undone to thwart, then destroy the universal vehicle of Indonesian independence—the Republic.

These infamies against 70,000,000 peaceful, long-suffering Indonesians—and against the United Nations—spring inevitably from the faithless Dutch repression of 3 centuries.

Dutch double talk notwithstanding, the cornerstone of all democracy, universal literacy, was effectively prevented. Funds were never assigned, teachers never developed for mass education. Pleading poverty in the world's richest colony, Dutchmen developed only specialized schools for Indonesian aristocrats' sons and daughters, who learned obedience along with their three R's and in higher education.

Mass organizations were unceasingly harassed. Nationalist leaders, including those who head the Republic today and many others who did not survive, were exiled for years at a time to remote swamps and jungles, often killed.

A nominal People's Council or Volksraad before the war was subject to the veto of both Governor General and the Dutch Parliament. Even then a high proportion of its members were appointed, not elected. And on top of that, those elected were chosen by a system of suffrage so indirect as to be meaningless.

Brutality like that of the Nazis at Lidice was meted out when the cup of slavery ran over and an uprising occurred. In 1926 whole districts of villages in Java were burned to the ground, the inhabitants murdered by fully equipped Dutch troops. In 1947 some 30,000 Indonesians were massacred in Macassar, Celebes.

Under its masquerade of paternalistic colonizer, Holland's program was extremely simple—self-enrichment.

Indonesia was a vast treasure house and workshop where 70,000,000 lived at subsistence level, their output streaming to the profit of a minority in Holland's 9,500,000 population: 15 percent of Holland's national income; $200,000,000 per year in straight profits (which made up annual Dutch foreign exchange deficit); $4,000,000,000 invested Dutch capital in Indonesia; the average income of a family of five Indonesians was 15 to 30 cents per day; 400,000 Dutch persons possessing a vested interest in Indonesia as a colony; complete Dutch monopoly of Indonesian trade, excluding the United States and others.

QUESTIONS

1. Is our State Department engaged in international double talk?

2. Will the Dutch withdraw from the Atlantic Alliance? And what difference will it make if they do? And where will they go?

3. By our continuing to support the Dutch, are we not throwing all of Asia to Moscow

4. If the Dutch have $4,000,000,000 in assets in Indonesia and are shutting out American business, why are we financing the Dutch at the rate of $500,000,000 a year?

5. Why has the President and the State Department attempted to kill the proposed Senate resolution?

6. Has the State Department been telling the Dutch to go ahead—privately, of course?

7. How long do we propose to pour American money into countries whose governments take actions that create the exact opposite of what our policy intends to accomplish?

8. Do we intend to support nineteenth century Dutch-British-French imperialism in Asia which will create a climate for the growth of communism? Or do we intend to support the moderate republican nationalists throughout Asia?

9. Does the United States intend to uphold the UN or not?

10. Does the Senate intend to take dictation from the executive department on all foreign-policy matters? Has the Senate relinquished its right to ask questions regarding our foreign spending policy?

Whereas there exists in the United States a serious shortage of aluminum conductor; and

Whereas such shortage is seriously hampering extension of rural electrification; and

Whereas it appears that the rural electrification program may not be receiving its fair share of the supply of aluminum conductor available; and

Whereas there is further an over-all shortage of virgin aluminum metal; and

Whereas it appears that much of the available metal is being used for nonessential purposes; and

Whereas the full facts with respect to the shortage of aluminum and aluminum conductor have not been made available to the general public, nor has any effective action been taken by any Federal bureau or agency to alleviate the disastrous results of the shortage: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of the causes of the existing shortage in the supply of aluminum and aluminum conductor, and of the effects of such shortages in hampering the extension of rural electrification, and the committee is further authorized to recommend a course of action to be taken by the Congress or the executive branch of the Government for the purpose of fostering the rapid extension of rural electrification. The committee, or a duly authorized subcommittee, shall include within the scope of such study and investigation a consideration of (1) the possibility of securing for the extension of rural electrification a large proportion of the available output of aluminum conductor; (2) the possibility of securing for the manufacture of conductor and other electrical equipment a larger proportion of the available supply of aluminum material; (3) the possibility of securing additional power for the manufacture of an increased quantity of aluminum; (4) the possibility of securing increased imports for a temporary period from Canada or other foreign countries; (5) the possibility of curtailing shipments of aluminum to Europe without hampering the program of the European Cooperation Administration so as to make larger supplies available for use in this country for extension of rural electrification.

MEDICAL CARE OF PERSONS NOT ORDINARILY INSURABLE—LETTER FROM DR. PAUL R. HAWLEY

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have been in correspondence with Dr. Paul R. Hawley, chief executive officer of the Blue Cross, whose address is Associated Medical Care Plans, 330 South Wells Street, Chicago 6, Ill. As the Senate knows, he is one of our foremost medical statesmen, having been the chief medical officer for the European theater operations during the war and the chief medical officer of the Veterans' Administration.

I asked him in a recent letter what could be done to help a man with chronic heart disease whose condition could not be insured under sound insurance principles. I inquired whether help could not be given to such a man by having the Government assist him in making available expensive medicines and X-ray. I received a reply which I think is so interesting and constructive that I ask that it be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 3, 1949.

The Honorable HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate,

DEAR SENATOR LODGE: In reply to your question about the medical care of people who are not insurable by agencies operating upon sound insurance principles, there is a way, other than open public charity, by which they can be provided with essential medical care. This is by issuing such persons Blue Cross and Blue Shield cards which entitle them to exactly the same benefits as regular subscribers to Blue Cross and Blue Shield.

The financing of the protection of such people, however, differs from that of regular subscribers in that no subscriptions, or premiums, are paid for such cards. Instead, when in need of medical care, such people apply to a physician or hospital with their cards, the care is given exactly as to a regular subscriber, the Blue Cross and/or Blue Shield plan is billed for such care, and the bill is paid by the plan. Then the plan bills the proper welfare agency for reimbursement of the exact amount of the bill plus a very small percent to cover the actual cost of administration of the transaction.

Such an arrangement has been tried in one or two areas, and has proved most satisfactory to all parties concerned. First, it conceals all outward evidence of charity. The medically indigent person holds the same kind of Blue Cross or Blue Shield card that paying subscribers hold. He gets exactly the same service—in semiprivate or even private accommodations in the hospital, instead of charity ward, if the welfare agency so desires.

Second, the cost of Blue Cross administration is far below that of government administration; and the administrative overhead of such a program would be less than if the government—local, State or Federal—undertook to operate a similar plan. Furthermore, the wider the application of this principle, the lower the per capita administrative cost would be. While I cannot commit any Blue Cross or Blue Shield plan to any course of action, I have reason to believe that most of these plans would write off a considerable part of the administrative cost as their contribution to a public service.

As to the financing of such a program, there seems to me to be no good reason why the Federal Government should not offer subsidies to States, somewhat as provided in the Taft bill of the last session. This would permit low-income States to offer the same program as the wealthier. And the cost of such subsidies should be very, very much less than the amount from its general revenues that the Federal Government would be forced to put into the Ewing program.

The objection may be raised that neither Blue Cross nor Blue Shield offer a complete medical-care program, including all home and office calls, spectacles, artificial limbs, false teeth, wigs, and other such appurtenances, the provision of which appears to threaten the solvency of the present British scheme. My reply to such an objection would be that both Blue Cross and Blue Shield recognize that their present benefits are, in certain areas, not as broad as they should be; and you may expect both organizations to extend their benefits as rapidly as actuarial experience justifies. Both Commissions are committed to extend coverage to the limit of financial stability of plans.

One cannot escape the fact that no plan for the prepayment of medical and hospital care, which is operated upon insurance principles, can survive 1 month if it pays $1.01 in benefits for each dollar of income. Mr. Ewing's plan would have to be subsidized heavily from the general revenues of the Federal Government. He probably will not agree with me, but my own investigation of the problem has convinced me that the income from his suggested pay-roll deductions will cover less than 40 percent of the cost of his program—even when such deductions reach his suggested maximum—and that general taxation must furnish more than 60 percent of the cost. I find some confirmation of my figures in the estimates, not published for obvious reasons, of an agency supporting compulsory health insurance that such a program as Mr. Ewing's would, if supported by contributions of the insured, require pay-roll deductions of at least 12 percent.

Let no one be deceived that Mr. Ewing's plan is, as he categorically states in the Nation's Health that it is, "a thoroughly American system, resting upon insurance principles which have been part of our national fabric for generations." The only kind of insurance that has been part of our national fabric for generations is insurance resting upon the two principles that the premium charged bears a direct relationship to the risk involved, rather than to the income of the insured, and that the premiums collected are adequate both for the payment of losses and for the administration of the business. Certain proponents of compulsory health insurance have advised me that Mr. Ewing's plan is not intended to be "regular insurance" but "social insurance," which operates upon very different—and apparently very weird—principles. My reply is that "social insurance" has not been part of our national fabric for generations, and that the only insurance that has is the regular insurance with which we are all familiar.

The press reports that Mr. Kingsley was very upset by my statement to you that the Nation's Health was, for the most part, a book of truth; but that its truths were interlarded with palpable untruths. If the foregoing quotation from the Nation's Health is not an untruth, we must now redefine "truth" as well as "insurance principles."

With kindest personal regards,

Sincerely,

PAUL R. HAWLEY, M. D.,
Chief Executive Officer, Blue Cross-Blue Shield Commissions.

GENERAL PICK'S PROMOTION—EDITORIAL FROM THE OMAHA (NEBR.) EVENING WORLD-HERALD

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an editorial entitled "General Pick's Promotion," published in the February 1, 1949, issue of the Omaha (Nebr.) Evening World-Herald.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENERAL PICK'S PROMOTION

The people of the Missouri Valley will receive the nomination of Maj. Gen. Lewis A. Pick to be Chief of Engineers with mixed feelings.

Naturally, they will regret to see the general go. Since he came into the valley, a stranger, and fired the imagination of the people with his magnificent conception of river development, they have adopted him as their own. They will regret, too, that he cannot stay on as Missouri River Division Engineer, to carry forward the gigantic projects he initiated.

But they will be pleased to see the general honored by promotion to the Army's top engineering job—a particularly unusual promotion since he is no West Pointer.

And they will know that in Washington the general will keep a friendly eye on the great development of the Missouri Valley, now well under way. More than that, all of the country now will have the benefit of his soaring imagination, his uncommon ability to inspire others, his organizational and executive talents, and his engineering skill.

Mr. Truman made a very fine choice.

SPECIAL SMALL-BUSINESS COMMITTEE

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution to create a Senate special small-business committee, to be composed of 12 Members of the Senate, and I ask that it be appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The resolution, Senate Resolution 55, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

Resolved, That there is hereby created a special committee to be composed of 12 Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President of the Senate, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a study, by means of research and investigation, of the existing or future problems of American independent small business, including but not limited to the following problems:

(1) Supply and distribution of basic industrial materials with particular reference to whether or not independent small business is obtaining its fair share of such materials under existing or future distribution methods and patterns.

(2) Policies of Federal Government departments, agencies, and corporations with respect to inclusion of independent small business in their present programs and future planning with particular reference to the procurement activities of such departments, agencies, and corporations.

(3) Prices charged for materials needed and utilized by independent small business to determine whether they are fair and equitable in relation to prices charged their larger competitors.

(4) Pressures of vertically and horizontally integrated combinations to eliminate independent small business in the American industrial distributive system.

(5) Inability of both new and old independent small business to adequately finance itself from its own earnings due to tax structure and effect of such tax structure on the merger movement.

(6) Participation of independent American small business in foreign-aid programs and adequacy of representation of independent American small business by diplomatic and consular officials abroad.

(7) Development of program to adequately insure independent small business a fair share of raw and finished materials and services produced on and from publicly owned mineral resources, forest reserves, and irrigation and reclamation projects.

(8) Development of a sound program to safeguard the place of independent small business in the American economy.

The committee shall begin its study as soon as practicable and shall continue and prosecute such study expeditiously and with all possible dispatch and shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable with recommendations for legislation.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate during the Eighty-first Congress, to employ such experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to request such information from any departments and agencies of the Government, to require by supena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report the educational material and data on such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or any properly designated chairman of a subcommittee thereof, or any member designated by either of such chairmen, and may be served by any person designated by the person over whose signature the particular subpena is issued. The expense of the committee, which shall not exceed———, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. To what standing committee has the resolution been referred?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. Is the appeal debatable at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator as to the reasons for his appeal. Before he proceeds, the Chair would like to make this comment on the reference of his resolution:

The Committee on Rules and Administration, with respect to the contingent fund of the Senate, is not a legislative committee. It is not a substantive committee for the consideration of resolutions providing for investigations. Therefore the Committee on Banking and Currency, which would otherwise have jurisdiction of the matters involved in the question of small business, is the appropriate legislative committee to which it should be referred. That is the reason for the reference by the Chair.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether the Senator will withhold his discussion until we dispose of concurrent and other resolutions in the morning hour.

Mr. WHERRY. If I do so, it will be some time before we finish consideration of the appeal. As I read the Reorganization Act, it is now in order to debate the appeal. I should like to present my observations as to why I feel this resolution should go to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield. The Chair will state to the Senator that if he wishes to withhold his remarks for the accommodation of other Senators, until concurrent and other resolutions can be disposed of in the morning hour, the Chair will recognize him then to speak upon the appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. WHERRY. When I was seeking recognition I was about to ask the distinguished Presiding Officer if I might be recognized after the other matters were disposed of under the pending order of business, so I will not at this time present my observations on the appeal, but will hold whatever right I may have so far as the floor is concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is entitled to recognition now; but for the accommodation of other Senators he may withhold his remarks.

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

ARREST AND TRIAL OF CARDINAL MINDSZENTY

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], and myself, I submit a resolution, and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 57) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate condemns as unjust the arrest, confinement incommunicado, and trial of His Eminence Josef Cardinal Mindszenty, Roman Catholic primate of Hungary.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 5 minutes on the resolution.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I shall be forced to object. I am as much in favor of that resolution as anyone could be, but I have been forced to follow the rule. I think that if we are to lay down rules, we should follow them, so I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

The resolution will lie over under the rule.

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. Is it appropriate at this time to submit an amendment to a resolution which I previously introduced on January 5?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ordinarily, unanimous consent is required.

Mr. MORSE. I do not wish for a moment to vary from the rule. If unanimous consent is required, I shall wait until an appropriate time for offering an amendment to the resolution.

Will the Chair inform me when it will be appropriate to offer an amendment to the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The offering of amendments to resolutions or bills which have previously been submitted or introduced falls under no particular category of the morning business. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Oregon when the morning business is concluded, to permit him to submit amendments to his resolution.

Mr. MORSE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to modify Senate Resolution 12, on page 2, line 11, to strike out "two hours" and insert "one hour", and that the resolution be reprinted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SPECIAL SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE

The Senate resumed the consideration of Mr. WHERRY'S appeal from the decision of the Chair referring Senate Resolution 55 to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, we are now debating the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair. Am I correct in my understanding that we are not operating under the 5-minute rule, but that we can debate this matter as long as we wish to do so?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no 5-minute limitation on debate on an appeal from a decision of the Chair.

Mr. LUCAS. Even though it arises during the morning hour?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HOLLAND. The resolution submitted by the junior Senator from Florida immediately prior to the submission of the resolution just referred to would call for the creation of a Senate Small Business Committee as a standing committee. My question is, To what committee was that resolution referred?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was referred to the Banking and Currency Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT subsequently said: The Chair wishes to make a correction in the statement which he made a while ago regarding reference of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND]. The Chair stated that the resolution would be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, but the Chair was mistaken, because the resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida proposes a permanent amendment in the rules of the Senate, and therefore must go to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, it is my opinion that the Committee on Rules and Administration is the standing committee of the Senate which should consider the resolution which I have already submitted, and also that it is the committee which should consider the resolution previously submitted by the distinguished Senator from Florida.

Since the Congress convened I have been contacted by businessmen throughout the country asking that I lend every possible assistance to securing an extension of the Senate Special Committee on Small Business. I wish the RECORD to show that I have done, and will do, everything possible to see to it that such a committee is provided for so that the work of the Special Committee on Small Business may be continued.

Recently the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] submitted a similar resolution. It was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. That committee has not seen fit to report it to the Senate calendar. In fact, it is my understanding that the members of the Banking and Currency Committee voted favorably regarding the creation of a Small Business Subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee, which of course they have a perfect right to do. But as of this date, the Banking and Currency Committee has not taken favorable action on the so-called Murray resolution providing for the extension of the Special Committee on Small Business.

It is my feeling that the Senate of the United States should not delay longer in creating a new committee or extending the old Special Committee on Small Business. I also wish the RECORD to show that I am in favor of the adoption of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Montana; and if it is reported favorably by the Banking and Currency Committee, I shall support it not only with my vote, but with any observation I can make in the interest of continuing the Special Committee on Small Business.

So strongly do I feel that the work of the Senate Special Committee on Small Business should continue that I believe the time has come when a resolution so providing should be presented to the Committee on Rules and Administration, which I contend has proper jurisdiction of the matter. It is my hope that the members of that committee will look with favor upon the proposal for the creation of a new or the extension of the old Special Committee on Small Business, and will report the resolution favorably, at an early date, for Senate consideration.

It is for that reason that it becomes necessary for me to make an appeal from the decision of the Chair. The Chair has ruled that the resolution should be referred to the Banking and Currency Committee, but my appeal is that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, because it is my opinion that if the resolution goes to the Banking and Currency Committee, it will meet the same fate as that of the so-called Murray resolution which now is before that committee.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. WHERRY. I prefer not to yield until I have concluded these remarks, and then I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. President, it is with regret that the first action I take as minority leader is in opposition to the former majority leader of the Senate, who now is the distinguished Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate. So it is with profound regret that I have taken the appeal from the decision the Chair has just made. But I feel so strongly that the Committee on Rules and Administration should be the standing committee of the Senate to consider the resolution that, notwithstanding my affection for the President of the United States Senate and my respect for his opinion and judgment and for the decision he has made, I am forced to disagree with the Chair's decision and to appeal from it.

I may say to the Members of the Senate that there is a precedent for referring to the Committee on Rules and Administration the resolution creating a Special Committee on Small Business. In the Eightieth Congress, Senate Resolution No. 20, a resolution creating a Special Committee on Small Business, was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, at my request, without opposition, and was reported favorably by that committee, and was adopted by the Senate. So there is a precedent. Therefore what I ask today is not unusual. What I ask is not in contradiction of what the Senate has done on prior occasions in respect to an exact duplicate of this resolution, in which case the resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I prefer not to yield until I have concluded my statement, and then I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. President, the Committee on Rules and Administration is the proper committee to which such a resolution should be referred. If this were a resolution providing for changing the rules of the Senate, as is being attempted, apparently, by the resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida, which calls for the creation of a new standing committee, in my opinion the resolution would be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration without question. I think there can be no doubt as to that. The special committee authorized by the resolution just submitted by me is in fact a committee of such broad authority that only its lack of legislative power and continuity from Congress to Congress makes it different from one of the standing committees of the Senate. Therefore, it naturally follows that such a resolution falls more nearly under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rules and Administration than under the jurisdiction of any other of the standing committees of the Senate.

There appears to be some misunderstanding or confusion regarding the terms of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. Some persons have said, and have told me, and some Members of the Senate have said, that special committees are prohibited by that act. Mr. President, that simply is not so; such a prohibition is not to be found among the provision of that act. When the legislative reorganization bill passed the Senate, it contained a provision prohibiting the creation of special or select committees. I say it contained that provision when it passed the Senate; but many of us, including the junior Senator from Nebraska went along with such a provision in order to get the entire act passed because of the fact that time was running out. It will be remembered that when consideration was given to the bill on the floor of the Senate, time was running out, and we took the bill as the Senate passed it, with that provision included. But section 101, subsection (b) gives full right to the Senate to change its own rules, one of which recognizes the committee-forming power of the Senate. However, when the bill went to the House, the provision prohibiting the continuation or creation of special or select committees was stricken from the measure. In conference, the House insisted on its amendment. The House amendment provides for the creation of such committees.

One of the authors of the bill, former Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, seated where the Senator from Kansas is now seated, voted to accept the House version of the bill, and in this form it was enacted into law. Therefore, from a legal standpoint there is no prohibition against the creation of a special committee either by Senate resolution, or by joint resolution, or by an act of the Congress itself.

That is the history of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. I supported that act. I voted for its passage, and I did it with that full understanding. At that time I was a member of this special committee, and even though when the Senate passed the bill I voted for the provision against the creation of special committees, yet when the conference report came back it pleased me very much, and the bill passed the Senate by adopting the conference report, which did not prohibit the creation of special committees. Indeed, this is amply evidenced by the creation or the continuance of many joint committees by this body, such as the Joint Committee on Labor-Management Relations, the Joint Committee on Housing, the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, and the Joint Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation, which were created in 1948. The fact that these committees have been created by an act of Congress or by a joint resolution rather than by Senate resolution in no way changes their status.

Distinguished Members of the Senate have told me they recognize it is not a violation. One of our best constitutional lawyers tells me it is not a violation of the provisions of the Reorganization Act. Some of those who oppose special committees say, "No, their creation does not violate the law, but does violate the spirit of the act." Certainly Senators who feel that way will agree with me that the joint resolutions and acts of Congress creating the various special joint committees I have enumerated have been passed by their votes, and they have not moved to abolish those committees since they were created. So if those who oppose this resolution on the theory that it violates the spirit of the Reorganization Act continue to appropriate money and to set up special joint committees as they have done, then they are doing exactly what is sought by the resolution I have offered and asked to have referred to the Rules and Administration Committee. There is no difference. The legal status is the same. There is no violation of the spirit of the act; if one is right, so is the other. If we continue to create such committees, if we continue them in existence, if we continue to appropriate for them, we are doing nothing more, there, than I am asking the Senate to do, in this instance. It involves neither a violation of the act itself nor a violation of the spirit of the act.

There is no reason to dwell upon this, for it is my strong conviction that neither the creation of those joint committees nor the creation of the special committee sought by the resolution violates the spirit of the Reorganization Act.

The reason for the passage of the Reorganization Act, as I understand, was to simplify the operation of Congress, and with that I am in total agreement. The original provision contained in the Senate version of the act prohibiting the creation of special committees was designed to prevent creation of special committees when a standing committee had jurisdiction of the subject matter. That was the principal argument used. It was said "Here is a standing committee which has jurisdiction. Therefore, a special committee that assumes the same jurisdiction, duplicates the work." I can remember the arguments so ably presented by the then Senator from Wisconsin. He certainly made a convincing argument on that basis, and that was one of the reasons given, if I recall correctly.

When the Reorganization Act went into effect, the Senate had, I believe, 33 committees. We reduced the number to 15 standing committees. The reason the then Senator from Wisconsin continued to argue in support of the Reorganization Act and against special committees was the fact that many such committees had exceeded the jurisdiction confided to legislative committees. It was a sound argument. But that is not the situation here. The committee proposed by this resolution covers such a wide range of problems, both specifically and generally, that it reaches into the jurisdiction of nearly every standing committee of the Senate. I am sure all Senators will agree with my statement if they will read the record, and review the activities of this committee for 6 years, first under the able leadership of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and during the past 2 years under the leadership of the junior Senator from Nebraska. If they will review the record, if they will read the reports, if they will be fair in their estimates and judgments, they cannot refrain from saying that the work the committee does cuts across the work of each and every standing committee of the Senate.

Obviously any special committee to investigate the problems of American small business must have broad authority to explore all its problems, else such committee would be of little if any value to the independent-business men of America. But this broad authority permits research, investigations, and recommendations only. All recommendations for legislation by the special committee will in turn be considered by standing committees having jurisdiction over the particular subject matter. We have abided by that. The Small Business Committee has not attempted in any way to assume legislative authority in the enactment of legislation. We have time and time again pointed out on the floor of the Senate legislation that, after consideration by the legislative committee, should be proposed. That is its purpose. This makes the special Senate Committee To Study the Problems of America Small Business a valuable adjunct to the work of the Senate and of its standing committees. It does not duplicate, it does not take away from the work of any standing committee. Instead, it supplements that work by pinpointing the problems of small business and calling them to the attention of the proper standing committee for inclusion in its over-all consideration. That has been its purpose. That has been the thing we have attempted to do. We have kept the faith within the provisions of the act. Certainly, Mr. President, this is in accord with the spirit of the Legislative Reorganization Act and is not violative of it in any manner.

The resolution just offered authorizes the creation of a special Senate Small Business Committee composed of 12 Senators. The committee is authorized and directed to study by means of research and investigation the existing and future problems of American independent small business. While the resolution specifies certain problems important to the continuation of a healthy, independent small business, the committee is not limited to the investigation of such specific problems.

Here is the first problem which the committee is directed to study. Let me quote this particular provision:

> Supply and distribution of basic industrial materials with particular reference to whether independent small business is obtaining its fair share of such materials under existing or future distribution methods and patterns.

That is the first provision of the resolution and it covers supply and distribution. The Senate and the House can go a long way in their study of the supply and distribution problems of small business, but unless they are corrected the small-business man will go out of the picture. There can be no doubt about that.

I want the Members of the Senate to know, as one who has worked on this problem—I think I have given 75 percent of my committee time to the work of the Small Business Committee—that thousands of applications have come to me from men who are depending upon this committee. The question of whether they will continue as future small-business men will depend upon the help and the aid that such a committee can give them in the Senate and in the House.

The time has come when, if we are to protect the corner grocery store, the family doctor, and the banker in small communities, they must have a proper distribution of materials. They do not have anyone representing them in legislative bodies at this time.

So, Mr. President, the first provision of the resolution is one to which each Member should give consideration, because of the observation which I am about to make. Nothing can be more important than is this problem. Industrial materials are the food for the manufacturing industry. Cutting off the supply of industrial materials or inequitably distributing them results in business mortality, just as surely as starving a human being would bring about his death. One is as important as the other. The smaller the businessman the easier it is to put him out of business by cutting off his materials and his supplies. It is like the very food which is required to supply the human body.

This is a study which might fall within the jurisdiction of one of three committees. This first provision might fall within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or the Committee on Banking and Currency. But from the standpoint of the small-business man's problems in this connection, a special committee studying the particular needs could go into the question more thoroughly and then recommend appropriate legislation.

The second problem to be studied and investigated is very important. The President of the Senate has been across the water and knows something regarding procurement for the agencies, departments, and corporations. There should be a study of the policies of Federal Government departments, agencies, and corporations with respect to the inclusion of independent small business in their present procurement and future planning, with particular reference to the procurement activities of such departments, agencies, and corporations.

Mr. President, there exists a vast Federal bureaucracy. That word is used by me merely as one of description. Many of these bureaucracies have within them offices through which small business is supposed to be aided. I can think of two or three of them at this time. Moreover, the Federal Government, directly and indirectly, is today one of the largest, if not the largest, purchaser of commodities in the world. I think it is the largest purchaser. It is important to determine whether small business is being adequately and equitably treated by those agencies and whether the agencies are operating effectively so that they will carry out administratively what Congress has directed them to do.

As chairman of the Special Small Business Committee I offered an amendment to the National Selective Service Act in 1948 to require that small-business men be given their fair share. This should be done also, by other procurement agencies, and the Special Small Business Committee should see that it is done. That should be one of its jobs.

Such a program might fall within the purview of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, or the Committee on Armed Services, or possibly the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; possibly the Committee on the Judiciary. But the independent small-business man's interests can be protected only by a committee which has that as its principal objective, and not have it divided as it would be if it were assigned to all those committees.

The next point is the prices charged for materials and supplies used by independent small-business men to determine whether they are fair and equitable. That is something which needs investigation. This is a problem for small business in either an inflationary or a deflationary economy. The solution of the problem falls within the purview of both the Banking and Currency Committee and the Judiciary Committee. Shifts in our economic system hit the small-business man harder than they hit anyone else. A committee authorized specifically to study the impact on small business, which must report to the Congress with legislative recommendations which are referred to the standing committee having legislative jurisdiction, is the only effective course, to my mind, to pursue.

The next specific problem set forth in the resolution is pressures by vertically and horizontally integrated combinations, starting at the beginning, when a product is taken from the soil and moves through to the consumer level. This should receive the utmost consideration of every Member of the Senate. This is the only Nation in the world which actively avoids the creation of industrial and distributive cartels. It is the only Nation which feels that the independent small-business man is the balance wheel of our economy. In this field the Committee on the Judiciary, which has jurisdiction over antimonopoly legislation, or the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which has jurisdiction over interstate and foreign commerce generally, might conduct a study of the problem. But, again, the special Small Business Committee can best serve the interests of small-business men and of the Nation as a whole when it makes a study of the situation and makes recommendations to a standing committee having legislative jurisdiction.

The next problem, Mr. President, is found in the fifth paragraph of the resolution. It has to do with the inability of the independent small-business man adequately to finance himself from his own earnings, due to tax structures, and the effect of such tax structures.

The Special Small Business Committee will directly file a report on the question of taxation and its impact on small business.

Sufficient consideration has not been given to this problem. During the Eightieth Congress an expenditure of $5,300,000,000 was authorized for the European recovery program. This appropriation and the materials purchased with it affected every man, woman, and child in the United States. It affected every one of us in connection with the price structure. It has obviously had an effect on the availability of materials to the independent small-business man in the United States, and no one can deny it. So the resolution includes the authorization of the following studies:

Participation of independent American small business in foreign-aid programs and adequacy of representation of independent American small business by diplomatic and consular officials abroad.

Certainly when these commitments are made the impact comes back on the domestic economy, and those making them should know, through an investigation, if in no other way, what the impact upon the small-business man, in this community, and the other communities of the Nation, will be. Certainly that comes within the purview of such a committee. Certainly the small-business man should be assured the right to a fair participation in the foreign-aid programs which we are financing today.

But what are the facts? I shall give one example. From the beginning of the European recovery program up to and including December 3, 1948, about 2 months ago, there was a total authorized purchase, out of ECA funds, of 103,641,571 pounds of cotton. Remember that figure, about 103,000,000 pounds of cotton. Now this is the important fact; one company received 71.2 percent of that entire cotton business. That is something for the record.

In the case of tobacco—and no doubt the President of the Senate is interested, as are many other Senators, in tobacco—up to December 3, 1946, the total authorized purchases amounted to $13,075,101. In this case, again, one company received 80.98 percent, four-fifths, of the business; and that company was not even an American company, but, instead, was British-owned.

On good authority I have been informed that less than 500 firms participated in ECA commitments up to December 3, 1948, on authorizations for $4,000,000,000 of expenditures, and that of these 500 firms to which the commitments were made approximately 150 were foreign firms.

Obviously, American independent small business is not getting fair participation in the foreign-aid program, and the one who suffers most is the small-business man. The Small Business Committee has held preliminary hearings on this matter, but was not able to go into it as thoroughly as should be done.

This is a problem falling within the jurisdiction of the Foreign Relations Committee, I imagine, and the so-called watchdog committee, which was authorized, and which, incidentally, is a special joint committee set up by the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, section 124–A, and has no different status legally, or within the spirit of the act, from that of the special committee we are attempting to authorize by the resolution I am discussing. There is no difference. If one is legal, if one is within the spirit of the act, so is the other.

The next problem of particular interest to small business which is directed to be investigated by the resolution is:

(7) Development of programs to assure independent small business fair share of raw and finished materials and services produced on and from publicly owned mineral resources, forest reservations, and irrigation and reclamation projects.

The special Small Business Committee, during the past 2 years, investigated several phases of this problem. A Newsprint Subcommittee checked into the possibility of national forest reserves in Alaska being developed as a source of newsprint for the small independent newspaper. A Mining and Minerals Subcommittee was set up, devoted, in part, to the intelligent and fair development of our mineral resources so as to assure small-business participation. The committee also assisted small-business firms which had contracts for the construction of vital portions of irrigation and reclamation projects, as well as helping independent small-business enterprises to obtain electrical power produced as an adjunct to such reclamation projects.

I recall that the committee went to Kansas City, Mo., where steel was fabricated and that it was the Small Business Committee which was the final committee to which the parties seeking relief came for relief. It was the work of the Small Business Committee which took the matter up with the agency involved and showed how necessary it was that the necessary materials should be supplied; otherwise we would not keep pace with the power development so badly needed in that area. There is need for further study and many recommendations for legislation which, in this case, would ultimately be passed upon by the Public Lands Committee.

Finally, the last specific task authorized to be studied under the resolution is this: Development of a sound program to safeguard the place of independent small business in the American economy.

It is not necessary to go into detail about this. Certainly Senators have had enough complaints so that they know how the economy is being affected. Suffice it to point out to the Senate that a program of this nature could conceivably involve the jurisdiction of every committee mentioned thus far, all of them, and possibly the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Committee on Appropriations, and even the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. It cuts across those committees. So one committee cannot take the jurisdiction. The Committee on Banking and Currency has jurisdiction, according to the Reorganization Act, as interpreted by the Parliamentarian, from whom I made inquiry, over financial matters, and I agree with that. Anything we could do to help the committee, or any subcommittee, should be done. But the Committee on Banking and Currency has no more jurisdiction over the other items I have mentioned than has any other committee. Therefore, if we are to have an over-all committee which is to be the mouthpiece of small business and the place where it can go, there must be a special committee cutting across lines. I think it should be a permanent committee, if legislative authority could be given it, but that is a different question, and until we arrive at some decision on that point, the special committee should be continued because it does cut across lines.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I have asked that Senators do not request me to yield until I have concluded. Then I shall be glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

In addition to all these studies and investigations, it has been an important function of the Senate Small Business Committee to assist individual small-business men in many ways. The committee has helped small-business men who became lost in the maze of Government agencies. If Senators think that some of the people who have sought relief have not been lost, they should hear some of the stories that have been told us, of cases where they have not only had difficulty in finding an agency set up to help them. Small business did not know where to go or what to do.

We have even presented their cases—and I say this modestly—in hundreds of instances, to suppliers and producers of materials, so as to keep them from going out of business. That has been a part of the work of the Small Business Committee, to take individual cases and send the parties to those who could help them get needed materials.

I now ask all Senators on the floor, is there any Senator who served in the Eightieth Congress who did not have constituents helped in some instances by the Small Business Committee? I have here a list of Senators whose constituents have been helped. I can refer to the Senator from Maryland, who a year ago, in the winter time, presented a plea for oil. Ask him who got the oil. I can refer to the distinguished majority leader, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], representing a State where a great deal of industry is centralized, one of the greatest producing areas of this Nation, if not in the world. Time and time again representatives of small business have come from Chicago and other communities in Illinois asking the Small Business Committee to help them secure materials so that they might remain in business—not alone oil, but steel.

I have in the files covering the past 2 years thousands of letters from the 48 States of the Union asking for help in order that small businesses might keep their doors open, and continue to get what they needed in order to fabricate their products and thus continue in business.

I have heard many Senators say that it is not the function of a Senate committee to secure relief for individuals, and that it is beneath our dignity to do such a thing. But, Mr. President, the small-business men of America cannot be convinced that it is not the function of the Senate Small Business Committee to do just that, and I will tell the Senate why. The legislative branch is just as vital a part of this Government as is the executive branch, and any way in which the Congress can be of assistance to and help in the preservation of the small-business man, be it by legislative aid or be it by immediate spot assistance, is important and appropriate. It does not make any difference whether the assistance is rendered through a legislative committee, a subcommittee of a legislative committee, or through a special committee. It requires the work of all such committees to provide the aid so desperately needed at this time by small-business men.

Certainly the House of Representatives when reviving, by unanimous vote, its select Small Business Committee last week thought it was both important and appropriate to do so. As a matter of fact, the House of Representatives did not feel that what it was doing was a violation of the spirit of the Reorganization Act. The House helped to create that act.

As a matter of fact, if for no other reason than that the small-business man should have a place to come to in the legislative branch of the Government, this Small Business Committee should be continued.

During the past 8 years the Small Business Committees of the Senate and House have been the mediums through which the small-business man, who finally did get up courage to come or write to Washington, sought and obtained relief.

Small business has grown to depend upon these committees as the ones to which they could come for relief, and as their spokesman in the legislative halls. Certainly, as long as we continue the commitments abroad, and there are material shortages, the small-business men will depend more than ever upon this special committee to aid them in all those problems that confront them—problems that cross over legislative committee jurisdictional lines.

Mr. President, it is said that a standing committee, or some subcommittee thereof, can do the same thing the Small Business Committee can do. I will agree with that statement. In fact, some standing committee might do a better job. It can, provided it goes outside the jurisdiction granted to it by the Reorganization Act. That is the point I am making. If the work previously done by the Small Business Committee were to be turned over to one of the standing committees, or a subcommittee, it would be necessary for the committee or the subcommittee to go outside the jurisdiction granted it under the Reorganization Act. But for a standing committee to go outside of its jurisdiction is certainly a violation of both the letter and spirit of the Legislative Reorganization Act. So why not continue the committee that has already been built up over the years.

It has been said in some quarters the investigations of the Senate Small Business Committee can go on indefinitely—and that it is high time that most of the problems of small business be brought to the point of legislation. Perhaps that is a good criticism. I submit the record of what has been done, and Senators can vote on that record.

There is no question that there are many problems of smaller business upon which legislative action should be taken at once—based upon the facts which the Senate Small Business Committee investigations and surveys have brought out.

But there is no break-off point in the problems of small business—there is no place at which we can say, "Now we have finished with the American small-business man. Let us close up shop."

For example, many of us thought that when controls over price and distribution were lifted in the fall of 1945, the increased production resulting thereby would adjust most supply problems. Production has increased in most strategic lines.

But the pattern of distribution for many vital materials has shifted as crazily as a patch-work quilt, particularly as our international policies have develped.

An important consideration in determining whether to create a committee especially to handle the problems of small business is the flexibility and rapidity with which such a committee can operate. In the past 2 years, there have been many times when the need for prompt action on conditions affecting small business has been amply demonstrated. For example:

First. A smaller, independent erector of steel construction came to the Steel Subcommittee of the Senate Small Business Committee, stating that he was unable to bid on the erection of Government buildings, due to the fact that the Government bid form required that he bid on furnishing the steel for the job as well. With steel in short supply, and faced with competition from large integrated steel companies which have erection subsidiaries, the smaller man was out of luck. This committee worked out, with the Government agencies involved, a revision of the bid form, which now makes its possible for the independent erector to bid on Government construction without requiring him to bid upon furnishing the steel. That revision is in force today, and many a small steel erector has been saved and his company has been saved because we absolutely provided that the agencies change the bid form upon which contracts with Government agencies can be made.

Second. The continuous protests which this committee has made, and its hearings and investigations on the export of large quantities of steel from this country, have resulted in both legislative and administrative action to strengthen export controls and curtail the export of strategic materials. When the Steel Subcommittee began its investigation of the export situation with respect to steel in May 1947, only a few steel products were under control and there was no knowledge as to destination or end use. By December 1947, 95 percent of all steel products were under export control and more realistic quotas were being set. At the end of 1948, exports of steel were reduced 2,000,000 tons under 1947 exports—a sizable contribution to the domestic economy—effected by administrative action influenced by this committee.

Third. Similarly this committee's recommendations to correct licensing procedures and policies in the Office of International Trade have been acted upon favorably by the Department of Commerce, and have resulted in reducing errors in export licensing and trafficking in licenses which had permitted millions of dollars worth of short-supply materials to leave the country illicitly.

Fourth. An independent survey made by this committee on the amount of steel going to smaller, independent manufacturers of farm machinery has resulted in hardship aid for hundreds of smaller manufacturers. For instance, in the harvesting season just past the committee was successful in getting a shipment of steel chain to a manufacturer of corn pickers in Kansas, which enabled him to complete delivery of 500 pickers through the Middle West.

I could cite hundreds of cases. Hundreds of smaller dealers and distributors of petroleum products in the Illinois area and throughout the Middle West were saved from complete extinction in a price and distribution squeeze which they experienced in 1947. The major oil companies were cutting off independent customers in favor of their company-owned outlets. I do not think anyone can deny that. They were stifling other channels of distribution. Let anyone go to Illinois and examine the record and talk with any distributor, large or small, and he will find that the situation which I have described existed.

The tangible results of the research and investigations of the Senate's Small Business Committee could be detailed for hours. The committee is now nonexistent. It never had the personnel or the time to permit it to make a compilation of all the requests which have been made by Senators and by various legislative committees to alleviate the troubles of small business generally, and help individual small business enterprises.

An examination of the appropriations and a check of the personnel will disclose, I think, that the total personnel of the Small Business Committee at the time it folded up was 14. That was the highest number during the past 2 years. I will check that figure. It never had the personnel to do the job we would like to have done. However, if the work of the members and personnel of that committee be compared with the work of any other committee, I challenge anyone to show a committee, legislative or otherwise, which has done more for the benefit of the taxpayers with the amount of money which was spent. It is a safe and conservative estimate to say that thousands of cases were handled. Furthermore, the constitutents of many Senators have been helped by the Small Business Committee. I can furnish many comments which have been made in letters to the Small Business Committee.

Mr. President, if the Senate fails to revive the Small Business Committee, the result will be the folding up of an agency to which the small-business men of the country look for assistance.

I have made the statement on the floor of the Senate that I would not seek the continuation or revival of a special Senate Small Business Committee whenever a standing committee was able to take over its functions. However, I am convinced, after looking into the record and considering the spirit of the act itself, that there is no existing standing committee which can take over those functions and do so effectively. If it should do so, it would violate the very spirit of the act, as it is claimed that this resolution, if adopted, would do.

Mr. President, I refuse to stand idly by and see this committee fumbled out of existence. If this resolution is not referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, to which I think it should go under established precedent, as I have indicated by the observations which I have already made, then I intend to submit a resolution seeking to create a permanent Small Business Committee, in order to cover adequately the urgent needs of independent small business. This committee is a part of our economy which must be preserved at all costs if we are to maintain our private-enterprise system.

Mr. President, I very respectfully ask for a reversal of the Chair's reference of this resolution to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. TOBEY and Mr. MAYBANK rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. WHERRY. I agreed to yield to two or three Senators. One was the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK]. The other was the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY]. I shall be glad to yield the floor unless they wish to ask me questions.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have no questions to ask.

Mr. WHERRY. If no other Senator has any questions to ask me, I am glad to yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like, for the information of the Senate, to read the rule under which he referred this resolution to the Committee on Banking and Currency, not in an argumentative way, but as a basis for his ruling.

Prior to the enactment of the Reorganization Act, as Senators all know, there was a specific rule in the Senate that when any resolution was submitted which fixed a charge upon the contingent fund of the Senate, such resolution must first go to the committee having jurisdiction of the legislation involved in the resolution. Therefore, for many years prior to the Reorganization Act, when any resolution was submitted providing for an expenditure from the contingent fund of the Senate, the resolution was referred to the appropriate standing legislative committee, and if that committee submitted a favorable report, the resolution then went to the old Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to determine the amount of money involved in the expenditure, or whether there would be any.

When the Reorganization Act was passed creating the committees and establishing their jurisdiction, as set forth in rule XXV in the Manual, in prescribing the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the second item read as follows:

> 2. Financial aid to commerce and industry, other than matters relating to such aids which are specifically assigned to other committees under this rule.

That means to other standing committees. The Chair has been unable to find, in the jurisdiction of any other standing committee under the rules, any reference to financial aid to commerce and industry. There may be some indirect reference to that subject in the jurisdiction of other committees, but the Committee on Banking and Currency is specifically given jurisdiction over legislation providing financial aid to commerce and industry.

In the rule on page 39 of the manual, setting forth the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rules and Administration, the following is found:

> Matters relating to the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creating a charge upon the same; except that any resolution relating to substantive matter within the jurisdiction of any other standing committee of the Senate shall be first referred to such committee.

Inasmuch as the Committee on Banking and Currency obviously has specific jurisdiction over aid to business and industry, and inasmuch as the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska provides for a charge upon the contingent fund of the Senate, it is obvious that in the adoption of the Reorganization Act no substantial change was made in the previous rules of the Senate, requiring that any such resolution involving an expenditure from the contingent fund must go to the standing committee having jurisdiction of the substantive matter involved in the resolution. Therefore, to all intents and purposes, the rule is the same now as it was prior to the enactment of the Reorganization Act.

It is true that the Senator from Nebraska submitted a resolution a couple of years ago which, by unanimous consent, was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration. However, as a former Vice President once said, the Senate can do anything by unanimous consent—a comment to which the Chair does not completely adhere. However, that related only to one resolution. It did not change the rule of the Senate. It could not affect any other resolution, and it could not operate as a precedent for the guidance of the Chair under the rule which has just been read, under which the Chair feels that he had no alternative except to refer this resolution to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The Chair probably should have made this statement when he made the ruling; but not knowing that the Senator intended to appeal from the decision, the Chair did not do so.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I deeply appreciate the observations made by the President of the Senate. I am in total agreement with the interpretation which has just been made relative to the requirement that a resolution must first be referred to the committee having jurisdiction, and then must go to the Committee on Rules and Administration if it provides for the payment of money from the contingent fund. But the entire point I am making is that although it is said that the resolution has been referred to the committee which has jurisdiction of the substantive matter, nevertheless, as I maintain, there is no standing committee which has jurisdiction over the 12 problems which are presented by my resolution. That is my point. In a sense, therefore, I am asking for a change of the rules, because I am asking that one of the standing committees take charge of the resolution, and make investigations in connection with it and hold hearings regarding it; and yet the scope of the resolution is so broad that no one of the standing committees has complete jurisdiction. That is the point I make, and I think it is well taken.

I agree with the distinguished occupant of the chair that, in the ordinary course, resolutions similar to the ones which have been mentioned have eventually come to the Committee on Rules and Administration for appropriations. But I submit to the Chair, because I know no one is more interested in small business than is he, that after 6 years of hard work on the part of this special committee, our point of view should receive some consideration. Of course, no personal matter is involved in the request for continuation of the committee, because we on this side of the aisle know that we shall not be in charge of the committee. I hasten to add that I am sure I shall be satisfied with whatever selection is made for the membership of the committee. But I say it is not proper to refer this resolution to any of the other standing committees, because the subject matter of the resolution exceeds the limitations of the jurisdiction of any of the other standing committees. I said that 2 years ago when I asked unanimous consent that a similar resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, and I repeat it now.

I agree that a resolution providing for financial aid to industry, or similar matters, should properly be referred to the Banking and Currency Committee; but I submit that in this resolution there are 10 provisions which go away beyond the jurisdiction of the Banking and Currency Committee. I so stated to the distinguished occupant of the chair when I pointed out that the time has come to make a ruling on this matter.

Mr. President, when the legislative reorganization bill was before the Senate I supported it. But the Legislative Reorganization Act is not infallible. Apparently it does not specify the committee to which an all-encompassing resolution should be referred. If it were agreed that all the problems I have included in the resolution relate to financial aid, then of course I would agree that the resolution should be referred to the Banking and Currency Committee, and then there would be no argument about the question of reference of the resolution. But I point out that the complaints which have been made are combined complaints; they relate to finance and to distribution and to allocations and to prices and to various other matters. So it cannot correctly be said that all the matters encompassed by the resolution are properly within the jurisdiction of the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. President, I have no quarrel with the Banking and Currency Committee. There is no Member of the Senate for whom I have a higher regard than the chairman of that committee; and if that committee properly had jurisdiction of the resolution I would not be making this fight.

Knowing the feeling of the Chair about small business, I humbly suggest now that, even though the Chair has indicated that the decision of the Chair is based on the only course the Chair can follow, nevertheless a proper consideration of the various provisions of the resolution will certainly show that it should be referred to the committee which properly has jurisdiction of all the matters which are to be considered in connection with small business.

Therefore I would ask unanimous consent, although I suppose such consent would not be given, that my resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration. At any rate, I submit that the resolution, which is similar to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida, which I did not know he was to offer, should be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

In concluding my statement, Mr. President, I wish to announce that if the resolution is not referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, then I shall submit a resolution providing for the creation of a standing committee on small business.

Under these circumstances, Mr. President, why cannot what I am requesting be done in view of the provisions of the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not wish to argue the matter with the Senator from Nebraska. However, the difference, as the Chair sees it, is that the resolution of the Senator from Florida would change the rules, by establishing a new permanent committee.

On the other hand, the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska proposes the establishment of a special committee. Even though the Committee on Banking and Currency might not have jurisdiction over everything affecting small business, nevertheless some committee must be given jurisdiction of the resolution; and under no conditions could the resolution go to the Committee on Rules and Administration without first going to some other committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, let me inquire whether the Chair feels that all resolutions providing for the establishment of special committees must first be referred to some other legislative committee before they are referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a question which the Chair is not prepared to pass upon just now. However, the Chair will give his opinion on the question under discussion. There may be other committees which might have some jurisdiction over some matters affecting small business; but as the Chair sees it, in accordance with the practice of the Senate heretofore, the Banking and Currency Committee has had jurisdiction and has exercised jurisdiction over most of the resolution's legislative proposals affecting small business, and it is the only committee which has in the statement of its jurisdiction any reference to aid to industry and commerce, whether large or small, so far as that is concerned. No distinction is made under the rule.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I appreciate the observation the Chair has made, and I shall propound no further interrogations. It is not my purpose in any way to oppose or obstruct the ruling of the Chair. But the very observation just made by the distinguished occupant of the Chair is the basis of the argument I submit to the Senate. None of the standing committees has jurisdiction of the subject matter of my resolution, because the resolution includes matters going outside the jurisdiction of all of them. Under these circumstances, it might be argued with equal force that the resolution should be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce or the Commitee on Armed Services or the Committee on Foreign Relations, because the various functions covered by the resolution cannot be separated.

Therefore, Mr. President, the only committee that I know of that could properly be given jurisdiction of the resolution is the Committee on Rules and Administration. Of course, if it is agreed that a change of the rules is necessary, then let us change them. All I know is that I shall continue to fight for an extension of the work for small business in the United States. I shall support the resolution of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], or any other resolution providing for continuing the Special Committee on Small Business.

Inasmuch as the House of Representatives has already set up a committee of like character, regardless of the provisions of the Reorganization Act, I hate to see the Senate fold up the Special Committee on Small Business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The attention of the Chair has been called to another rule which has some bearing on the subject. It refers to controversies over the jurisdiction of committees.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Chair please state the page of the Reorganization Act to which he refers?

The VICE PRESIDENT. This rule is to be found on page 24 of the Reorganization Act.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that it is section 137.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The provision reads as follows:

> In any case in which a controversy arises as to the jurisdiction of any standing committee of the Senate with respect to any proposed legislation, the question of jurisdiction shall be decided by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, without debate, in favor of that committee which has the jurisdiction over the subject matter which predominates in such proposed legislation; but such a decision shall be subject to an appeal.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Therefore, so far as the rule giving specific jurisdiction to committees is concerned, which was one of the objects of the Reorganization Act, undoubtedly the preponderance of jurisdiction—even though that might not include all the jurisdiction which could be conceived of in that connection—would be in the Banking and Currency Committee; and the rule even seems to preclude debate on that subject. However, of course the Chair is anxious to extend every courtesy.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I agree with the distinguished President of the Senate. Of course we are now arguing as to the appeal, which is subject to debate.

I realize the present occupant of the chair has done exactly what the rule provides, and that in referring the resolution to the Committee on Banking and Currency he has referred it to that committee because in his opinion he feels it has jurisdiction. I am not quarreling with the fact that it is assigned to the Committee on Banking and Currency. If I were the occupant of the chair I would not know to what committee to refer it, because if the RECORD is examined it will be found that possibly the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or possibly the Committee on the Judiciary, has more of the subject matter within its province. I would not know where to refer it. So I think the present occupant of the chair in carrying out the provisions of the act, referring the resolution to the Committee on Banking and Currency, has at least referred it to one committee having some jurisdiction over the problem. But that is the very point I make. It cannot be assigned to any one of the committees, because it cuts across all committee lines, and in that respect it should be referred to a committee that can give it the consideration that would be given if the rule were changed, as provided by the rule suggested by the Senator from Florida. I have asked for it in the resolution. If it is desired to send it to the Committee on Rules and Administration, I see no difference, whether the resolution I offer is accepted or not, or whether it is sent to a standing committee having jurisdiction.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I have listened to the remarks of my friend, the minority leader, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], with great interest. To me, after listening for some time, I think they form a perfect illustration of Milton's reference to "Linked sweetness long drawn out." I think the Senator from Nebraska had his fingers crossed in some of the points he made, and I propose to uncross his fingers for a few minutes.

Let us review the situation very briefly. The question before the Senate is, Shall the present incumbent of the chair, the distinguished Vice President, the Presiding Officer of the Senate, be overruled by the Senate, on a ruling he has made to send the resolution to the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency? I think the Chair was correct in his ruling. I think he has made a good case, but as a further aid to him, "to make assurance double sure," let me point out to the President of the Senate as to every other Member, that for many years, the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency has had referred to it by the Presiding Officer of this branch of Congress, all proposed legislation on prices, on allocation of supplies and distribution, in addition to the financing of industry.

Now a word about the special Committee To Study the Problems of American Small Business. There is a Latin proverb, "de mortuis nil nisi bonum," which, as of course every Senator knows, means "concerning the dead, nothing but good." Far be it for me to impugn that committee, rather I would commend its work in the past, but I want to add that the Senate, on no less authority than that of the Senator from Nebraska, who has spoken, was assured 2 years ago, when I fought in an hour's speech against the continuance of special committees, that he would never ask for any further extension of this committee.

The point I want to make, Mr. President, is that the Committee on Banking and Currency is charged, in my judgment, with this jurisdiction, and the President of the Senate has so made his ruling. I will not believe that any Member of the Senate would, because of a secondary motive, vote against sustaining the decision of the Chair on this matter, merely because of a partisan aspect. I would not be a party to that, of course. I believe the President of the Senate has done the right thing.

Speaking now of the Committee on Banking and Currency, we have already, last week, started to hold hearings to aid small business, when we had before us the distinguished Secretary of Commerce, when we made a very thorough, a very earnest seeking out of allocations for steel, metals, and supplies to small business. It is in our hearts. It is our purpose. Small business will not suffer one jot or one tittle by this reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency. We will have a staff just as good as, if not better than the previous one. I intend no reflections on them. We will be thoroughly staffed as a committee of nine members headed by the distinguished chairman, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] himself. I am "one of the least of these my brethren," and I would not sanction this thing, if I believed for one moment that the small-business men of the country would be jeopardized or put under a handicap or behind the "eight ball" in any sense or to any degree.

When the Senate wrote the Legislative Reorganization Act they wrote into it, and it passed the Senate, a prohibition of all special committees. It went over to the House, and the House struck out the prohibition. Then under the duress of conference and the inability otherwise to get the bill through, in their judgment, the conferees on the part of the Senate yielded, remonstrating they did not believe the prohibition should be stricken out. So the Senate of the United States is on record, and wisely so in my judgment, as opposed to special committees to handle the business of the Senate. Here is a standing committee, the Committee on Banking and Currency, charged by precedents, with respect to allocations, prices, supplies, and distributions, and in the law with aid to financing business. I ask Senators on both sides of the aisle to stand by the President of the Senate and uphold his decision.

I make one reference now to my friend, the Senator from Nebraska. Last year, I was asked to start an investigation of the great Textron matter, a $30,000,000 corporation. That was not small business. At the request of Wallace White, then chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, I accepted chairmanship of the subcommittee. We went to Nashua and began hearings. I cite this as a concrete example of how a small-business committee should not act. Up there came a gentleman from the Small Business Committee. His name was Mr. Dickey, and he gave press interviews. He impugned in the press the motives of the standing committee of the United States Senate, and the members of the Subcommittee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It was not according to Hoyle. It was below the belt. We rose above it, but I rebuke that practice now, and I can name it if it is desired. But I say that by the rules of reason, by the precedents of the Senate, this resolution should go where the Vice President sent it, to the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate. We will do a goob job for the little people of this country.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I merely want to concur in what the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire has said. I had intended for the RECORD to read section 137 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, and also the sections relating to financial aid, the Federal Reserve control of prices, and the many other things committed to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The distinguished Vice President himself was a member of that committee when I first went on it in 1941. No one knows better than the present occupant of the chair the enormous amount of work done by that committee. In recent years practically 90 percent of the legislation suggested by the Special Committee on Small Business has been acted on in one way or another by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

I realize there are some matters that should go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and some, perhaps, that should go to the Committee on Finance. I am perfectly willing to rely upon the decision of the Vice President in sending to the appropriate committees resolutions and bills when they are presented.

In the meantime, Mr. President, I want to remind the Senate that we passed a bill last week relating to voluntary allocations and allotments. A large part of the time consumed by our committee was in connection with small business. Matters were discussed by the distinguished Senator from Florida, in connection with small business.

Last week I obtained unanimous consent to report a bill during the adjournment of the Senate, Senate bill 548. We held hearings all last week on the bill, which deals principally with small business. If Senators will examine the bill, it will be found that we wrote into the bill section B, in the interest of small business concerns, who must be taken into consideration. In fact, section B, line 21, page 3, of Senate bill 548, shows the interest of the Committee on Banking and Currency in small business. I can only say to the Senate I recognize well the fact that the Special Committee did excellent work in investigating. The Senate may rely upon the Committee on Banking and Currency to do equally as well, if not better, with respect to the subject under discussion, because after that committee investigates, it can legislate. The special committee can only investigate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, following my remarks, statements which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] made 2 years ago, in which they advocated the continuance of the Small Business Committee until a regular standing committee could be properly organized. It was for that reason, and that reason only, that the resolution providing for the special committee was adopted by the Senate by only two votes.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Two years ago, when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] was arguing for the continuation of the Small Business Committee, he rested his argument upon the contention that the standing committees were not yet properly organized under the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. Addressing himself to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], he asked:

"Does not the Senator further feel that until the standing committees of the Senate are properly organized, when perhaps other procedure shall be established, the present Senate special committee should continue, at least during the present session, to be the advocate of the small-business men, and to be the one committee where the small-business man can come, in view of the fact that he has heretofore been taught to come for aid to that committee during the past 6 years?"

To which the Senator from Montana replied:

"Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nebraska has stated the situation exactly."

Toward the close of the debate the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] stated:

"Mr. President, I also wish to say that I am not asking that the special committee be made a permanent special committee. I see no reason why, in the future, the Senate cannot use for such purposes the Banking and Currency Committee and the other committees which otherwise would handle such problems. For instance, I refer to the Judiciary Committee and the Interstate Commerce Committee as well. When those committees are properly organized they can take care of the subject matter, and then the Senate can terminate the work of the special committee which is proposed by Senate Resolution 20. Because of that fact I have amended the resolution so as to provide for the continuation of the special committee for only 240 days."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to say to the Senate that we are now proceeding under the heading morning business, and when the hour of 2 o'clock arrives the morning hour will terminate. If it is the desire of the Senate to have a decision on the question today, it must be done before 2 o'clock; otherwise morning business will be concluded and the Senate will proceed with something else.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I think every Member of the Senate who has heard the discussion has been greatly impressed with the earnestness of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] who has spoken with such vigor regarding the encouragement and preservation of small business and the solution of its problems. There has been mentioned once or twice during the course of the discussion a fear that if the resolution should be referred to a committee other than the Committee on Rules and Administration it would suffer a fate similar to that which was suffered by an earlier bill. Reassurance has been given by one or two Senators that upon the consideration of the subject by the Committee on Banking and Currency there will be an adequate, complete, and fair treatment of the subject by that committee.

I assume, as I am sure every other Senator does, that every member of the committee will endeavor to give a fair, full, and adequate consideration of the subject.

I rise for two purposes, one, to suggest most respectfully that the question before the Senate should not at all be determined on the basis of whether the resolution will have a better chance of success before one committee than before another committee. I take it that it is entirely a question of the proper construction of the rules of the Senate as to whether the appeal which is now pending should be sustained or should not be sustained.

In the second place, to my mind, the ruling of the Chair is unanswerable. In my judgment, the Chair has made a proper ruling. It would appear to me that the resolution could be referred, and I understand it is sought to be referred by the Senator from Nebraska, to the Committee on Rules and Administration, only on one theory, namely, that included in the jurisdiction of the committee are matters concerned with the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creating a charge upon it, and that there is no standing committee which has jurisdiction over the subject matter of the resolution.

It occurs to me that the resolution may have numerous facets and points which do not at all detract from the right of the Chair to refer it to the committee which section 137 provides has jurisdiction over the subject matter which predominates. That section obviously contemplates that there may be matters over which more than one committee has jurisdiction. Otherwise section 137 would not have used the significant language to which I have reference, and which I quote "jurisdiction over the subject matter which predominates in such proposed legislation."

The resolution which is before the Senate does raise the question as to which subject matter predominates. It would seem perfectly clear to me, Mr. President, that the mere fact that the resolution calls for payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creates a charge upon the same is not the subject which predominates in the resolution. Obviously, to my mind, the subject which predominates is one of financial aid to commerce and industry, as the Chair, I think, has very properly pointed out.

So, Mr. President, in the first place, while paying tribute, which I think is properly deserved, to the Senator from Nebraska and to his associates on the special committee which has heretofore functioned, and paying a tribute to others who have cooperated, I should, in fairness, say that in my judgment, whether this resolution should be referred to any given committee is not at all to be determined by the committee before which the resolution will stand the best chance, but, clearly and obviously, to my mind, under the rules of the Senate, the subject matter which predominates in the resolution is one which is under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I am, therefore, in favor of affirming the decision by which the Chair has made the reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the hour is drawing near to 2 o'clock. I hope we can get unanimous consent to continue the debate. I am asking consent now for the debate to continue until after the hour of 2 o'clock.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and in view of the statement made by the junior Senator from Oregon——

Mr. LUCAS. I do not want the Senator's argument to continue after the hour of 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no control over the clock.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I shall have to object because of the statement made by the junior Senator from Oregon that he wanted to have notice of unanimous-consent requests.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion is not debatable.

Mr. LUCAS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the vote be taken after the hour of 2 o'clock?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is simply a matter of unanimous consent.

Mr. WHERRY. Then I submit we are not making any progress.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I withdraw my request.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. McMAHON addressed the Chair.

REGULATION OF EXPORTS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the special order, which the clerk will state.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 548) to provide for continuation of authority for the regulation of exports, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 47, and ask that it be read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 47.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the motion in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is in order. The resolution has gone over 1 day, and therefore the motion of the Senator from Illinois is in order. The clerk will state the resolution by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 47) to discharge the Committee on Rules and Administration from the further consideration of Senate Resolution 15, relating to cloture.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. TAFT. I inquire what is the vote on, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the motion to take up Senate Resolution 47.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator from Illinois yield for an inquiry?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, the motion is to take up the resolution. After the motion has been voted upon, if the vote is favorable, the resolution will be open to debate and discussion, will it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a debatable question. Does the Senator from Illinois ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to take up the resolution?

Mr. LUCAS. I withdraw the request for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion that the resolution be taken up for consideration.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is in the process of voting.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The result has not yet been announced, has it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The Senator from California is entitled to the floor to speak on the motion, is he not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is debatable.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McMAHON. The Senator from California is entitled to the floor if he gets recognition. The Senator from Connecticut has been here for 2 hours seeking recognition.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, the Senator from California understood he had been recognized.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that in spite of the fact that the Senate was in process of voting viva voce, the Senator from California is entitled to recognition.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, the question before the Senate today is whether Senate Resolution 15 shall be withdrawn from the Rules Committee and placed on the Senate Calendar. Senate Resolution 15, submitted by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] for himself and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], reads as follows:

Resolved, That subsection 2 of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, relating to cloture, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"If at any time, notwithstanding the provisions of rule III or rule VI or any other rule of the Senate, a motion, signed by 16 Senators, to bring to a close the debate upon any measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, is presented to the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall at once state the motion to the Senate, and 1 hour after the Senate meets on the following calendar day but one, he shall lay the motion before the Senate and direct that the Secretary call the roll, and, upon the ascertainment that a quorum is present, the Presiding Officer shall, without debate, submit to the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote the question:

"'Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?'

"And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative by a two-thirds vote of those voting, then said measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of.

"Thereafter no Senator shall be entitled to speak in all more than 1 hour on the measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, the amendments thereto, and motions affecting the same, and it shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer to keep the time of each Senator who speaks. Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time. No dilatory motion, or dilatory amendment, or amendment not germane shall be in order. Points of order, including questions of relevancy, and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate."

Mr. President, in regard to this matter of the Senate securing an effective cloture process against an unlimited filibuster, we are faced, as President Cleveland once said, "With a condition and not a theory."

The cold, hard facts of the situation are that there is little hope, if any, of amending the rules of the Senate in this regard unless the matter is acted upon in the first 60 days of a legislative session. Both the proponents of a change and the opponents to any change recognize this fact. It is for this reason, with the full knowledge that each day's passage of time makes more difficult the problem, that I offered the motion to withdraw resolution 15 from the committee.

Certainly no disrespect for the Rules Committee, of which I am a member, was intended or implied by this action, nor was there intended any disrespect for the able chairman of the committee, the senior Senator from Arizona, for whom I have a very high regard and a personal affection. He is one of the few present Members of either House of Congress who was serving in the House of Representatives during a part of the 12-year period my father served in that body.

The basic question we must face is whether the unlimited use of the filibuster is something that should be corrected. Do we believe that any man or small group of men should have the power to obstruct the legislative process? The fundamental issue is whether this body should be in such a vulnerable position that its legislative functioning can be blocked to such an extent that the security of our Republic and the peace of the world may at some future date be placed in jeopardy.

If this be the problem, then it seems to me clear that all those who prudently wish to lock the barn door before the horse is stolen and not afterward should be willing to meet this issue without evasion.

Certainly I admit that on this as on other great public questions there is an honest difference of opinion. I wish to commend the very able presentation made by the opponents of a change in the cloture rule. With sincerity and ability they presented their case before the Rules Committee, as they no doubt will present it at length to the Senate itself when the matter is before us.

In fairness I will also state that I believe they have made a very strong case against any change in the rules that would permit cloture by majority vote. It is not my intention today to make any prolonged statement in regard to this matter. When the issue comes before the Senate, as inevitably it will come, I shall have more to say.

This issue is so fundamental that it is not going to be allowed to die, nor are we going to permit the question of the correction of this defect in the rules to be brushed under the carpet of legislative procrastination as a poor housekeeper might brush dirt under the rug.

It is my very strong belief that this issue must be met frankly and that the Senate is entitled to vote upon it. Whatever action is taken here today will not end the matter. It shall be brought to the Senate for action in one form or another "again and again and again."

The very able junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] and a number of his colleagues recognize the fact that in time of a national emergency it is conceivable that the functioning of the Senate could be effectively blocked by a small handful of Members. We have been informed that an amendment will be presented to take care of that phase of the situation. Such an amendment, I believe, has merit not as an alternative to the two-thirds rule but in addition thereto. Majority cloture is not the issue here at this time.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the junior Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], and the junior Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] jointly submitted Senate Resolution 13 which is identical with Senate Resolution 15 submitted by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], which in turn is identical with the resolution favorably reported to the Senate by the Rules Committee during the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. President, the charge has been made before the committee, in the public press and on the floor of the Senate that the resolution reported to the Eightieth Congress was not acted upon while the Republicans were in control.

I am not one of those Republicans who believes that all the virtues are to be found in my party and all the faults in the opposition. I believe that a serious error was made on this side of the aisle in not pushing to a show-down early in the last session an amendment to the rules. However, Mr. President, two wrongs do not make a right.

I would not make an issue of the point, Mr. President, that the Democratic Party, which has been in control of the executive branch of the Government for the last 16 years, and of the legislative branch for 14 of those 16 years, was also a bit lax in acting on civil rights and other legislation in which the administration segment of that party now professes such keen interest.

The present rule 22 dealing with cloture reads as follows:

If at any time a motion, signed by 16 Senators, to bring to a close the debate upon any pending measure is presented to the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall at once state the motion to the Senate, and 1 hour after the Senate meets on the following calendar day but one, he shall lay the motion before the Senate and direct that the Secretary call the roll, and, upon the ascertainment that a quorum is present, the Presiding Officer shall, without debate, submit to the Senate by an aye-and-nay vote the question:

"Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?"

And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative by a two-thirds vote of those voting, then said measure shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of.

Thereafter no Senator shall be entitled to speak in all more than 1 hour on the pending measure, the amendments thereto, and motions affecting the same, and it shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer to keep the time of each Senator who speaks. Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time. No dilatory motion or dilatory amendment or amendment not germane shall be in order. Points of order, including questions of relevancy, and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate.

This was adopted in the Senate on March 8, 1917, by a vote of 76 yeas and 3 nays. It grew out of the filibuster in the previous session on a bill which had been proposed by the Wilson administration to arm merchant vessels.

Referring to the defeat of that bill President Woodrow Wilson said:

It would not cure the difficulty to call the Sixty-fifth Congress in extraordinary session. The paralysis of the Senate would remain. The purpose and the spirit of action are not lacking now.

The Congress is more definitely united in thought and purpose at this moment, I venture to say, than it has been within the memory of any man now in its membership. There is not only the most united patriotic purpose, but the objects Members have in view are perfectly clear and definite.

But the Senate cannot act unless its leaders can obtain unanimous consent. Its majority is powerless, helpless. In the midst of a crisis of extraordinary peril, when only definite and decided action can make the Nation safe or shield it from war itself by the aggression of others, action is impossible.

Although, as a matter of fact, the Nation and the representatives of the Nation stand back of the executive with unprecedented unanimity and spirit, the impression made abroad will, of course, be that it is not so, and that other governments may act as they please without fear that this Government can do anything at all. We cannot explain. The explanation is incredible.

The Senate of the United States is the only legislative body in the world which cannot act when its majority is ready for action.

A little group of willful men, representing no opinion but their own, have rendered the great Government of the United States helpless and contemptible.

The remedy? There is but one remedy. The only remedy is that the rules of the Senate shall be so altered that it can act. The country can be relied upon to draw the moral.

Certainly in 1917 the Members of the Senate thought that they were providing an effective way to control the unlimited use of the filibuster. To take any other position is to affirm that what they did was an empty gesture and of no consequence. It is to say in effect that they agreed to this amendment with tongue in cheek for the purpose of kidding either themselves or the American people. I do not believe that such is the case. Nor do I believe that any reasonable reading of the record will support any such thesis.

Yet under the precedents of the Senate now existing this present two-thirds cloture rule is meaningless. In the narrow interpretation of the word "measure" it has been held that the rule does not apply to motions. Since no measure can be brought before the Senate except by motion it is apparent that there is at the present time no cloture whatsoever. Not even by two-thirds of the Senate. Indeed, not even by nine-tenths of the Senate.

The present rule was presented to the Senate by the then majority leader Senator Martin, of Virginia. On the day the amendment was passed Senator Pomerene said; as found on page 20 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 8, 1917:

Mr. President, I had hoped that this rule might be so drawn as to make it a little more drastic during the last few days of a session.

My belief has been that a majority or at least a two-thirds vote of the Senate should have the right to further limit or conclude debate in the closing days of a session. I am satisfied, however, and I have talked the subject over with a number of Senators, that the rule presented by the Senator from Virginia is perhaps the best that can be obtained now. For this reason I earnestly hope that the proposed rule will be adopted, if we can get nothing better.

On the same day Senator Curtis said:

Mr. President, I am very heartily in favor of this resolution which proposes to amend rules of the Senate so that debate may be closed. In 1911, when certain Senators on the other side were filibustering against certain measures which were then pending, I offered an amendment to the rules providing that two-thirds of the Senators might close debate after a certain time. That proposed amendment was not reported from the committee. In May 1916, an amendment to the rules substantially like the one now proposed was reported unanimously from the Committee on Rules. That resolution, which enabled two-thirds of the Senate to close debate was on the calendar from May 1916 to March 4, 1917, but was not taken up. The change proposed by the resolution was agreed to by a joint committee of the majority and the minority. I therefore hope this resolution may be adopted.

These statements and many more like them, any fair reading of the rule itself, and common sense indicate that the two-thirds cloture was meant to be something and not a dead letter and an empty gesture. That clever men found a loophole in the rule that permitted them to destroy it does not relieve us of our obligation to correct it. That is all that we are trying to do.

There are some who make the statement that this change in the rule is timed so that it will affect legislation on which one section of our country is in violent disagreement. Such is not the case. This amendment to the rules would and should be presented even if there were no civil rights legislation pending before Congress and recommended by the President of the United States.

While the amendment we are discussing is only intended to make effective the two-third cloture adopted by the Senate in 1917 by a vote of 76 to 3, I would certainly not deny that the defeat of the temperate proposal we have submitted will make certain the defeat of the entire civil rights program presented by the President of the United States. If that be the desire of the majority leadership, let them make their record here today.

I believe that it is contrary to orderly legislative procedure for any small group to prevent the Senate of the United States from voting on legislation of importance to the country after there has been full debate and two-thirds of the Senate has expressed its own desire that debate be brought to a close. There still remains the additional safeguard that each Senator has an hour to discuss the legislation after cloture is voted before the final vote is taken. I can understand how some of our colleagues who are sincerely opposed to Federal legislation in the field of civil rights can and do object to any change whatever, but Mr. President, I cannot understand how those who purport to support the civil rights program can join in the processes of delay when every Member of this body knows that each day's delay makes less likely any change in the rule.

Time is priceless in the atomic age in which we now live. The use we make of it may well determine not only the strength of our own Republic, but of western civilization as well. Need I remind the Senate that in World War II Holland was overrun by Nazi Germany in 5 days, Yugoslavia in 12 days, Belgium in 19 days and Poland in 28 days. There have been filibusters in the Senate that lasted longer than it took these nations to lose their independence and their people their liberty. One of the longest filibusters in the Senate took place in 1893 over the repeal of the purchase clause of the Sherman silver law. This filibuster consumed 42 days. In 1846 the Oregon bill was filibustered for 2 months.

To permit one person or a small group to obstruct the legislative process even after two-thirds of the Senate have in their judgment determined that the time had come to act and not just to talk is to place in the hands of one Senator more power than the Constitution gives to the President of the United States. The President's veto can be overridden by a two-thirds vote.

Some of the opponents of any change try to raise the issue that this moderate proposal is in some way in conflict with the Constitution. Such, of course, is not the case. Section 1, article I of the Constitution provides:

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 3 of article I as amended by the seventeenth amendment provides:

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for 6 years; and each Senator shall have one vote.

When the unlimited filibuster is used, less than 5 percent of the Senate can effectively prevent 95 percent of the Senate from ever exercising their constitutional right to represent their States by casting a vote on issues which they too believe to be in the public interest and in conformity with the Constitution.

It was not we, the farmers and the merchants, it was not we, the employees and the employers, it was not we, the gentiles and the Jews, it was not we, the Protestants and the Catholics, it was not we, the Caucasians, Negroes, and orientals, but it was:

We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

The preamble does not refer to part of the people. The Constitution does not say that the Senate shall be elected by a segment of the people. The fifteenth amendment is no less valid than the nineteenth amendment or any other amendment or original article of the Constitution.

Both amendments state: "Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation." It is clear that while it is not mandatory that Congress enact any specific legislation it is likewise clear that Congress is given the power to legislate on the subject. The unlimited use of the filibuster deprives the Senate of its constitutional power in this regard. Section 5, paragraph 3 of article I provides—> the yeas and nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the Journal.

Yet the unlimited use of the filibuster can prevent the yeas and nays from ever being entered and the people learning how their Senators stand upon questions of vital interest to the people and to the States.

Section 8 of article I sets forth the powers of Congress. Yet an aggressive use of the filibuster by a small number of Members can completely veto the ability of Congress to exercise any of those enumerated powers in a manner as effective as the abuse of the veto by the Soviet Government in the Security Council.

This then is the issue which confronts the Senate of the United States. It confronts it today, it will confront it tomorrow, and every day the Senate remains in session.

Is it not, therefore, a wiser solution for the Senate to proceed diligently to discuss this question now and reach a conclusion before other legislation of importance is ready for action by this body? We have been in session now for more than 33 days. We have been recessing for 3-day periods. For those who want time for ample discussion, now is the time and here is the place. No one will have any desire to cut off a full and free discussion of the merits of the issue on the part of any Senator who desires to discuss them.

After the merits pro and con have been discussed, if there are those who desire to exercise the unlimited right of filibuster for the purpose, not of discussing the merits, but of blocking the right of the Senate to act on the measure, then now is the time and here is the place to meet that issue head-on.

For the reasons I have enumerated, and for many others that will occur to other members of the Senate, I have felt that a good purpose would be served by bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate as expeditiously as possible. Because of the vital importance to the Senate and the country of making the existing two-thirds-cloture rule effective, I have no apologies to offer for my motion or for other parliamentary moves that will follow in the very near future.

The Senate, of course, is the sole and final judge of what action it shall take. Each Senator in the light of all the facts must vote according to his conscience on the merits of the issue. I certainly have no quarrel with any legislator regarding how he votes on this or any other issue. I only ask that each Senator vote his convictions and not deny me the right to do the same.

PROPOSED MEETING BETWEEN PRESIDENT TRUMAN AND MARSHAL STALIN

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, there is a very simple method by which to test the sincerity of Mr. Stalin's statement that he honestly desires a meeting with President Truman to discuss a pact for peace.

In view of the conditions attached to this latest so-called peace bid by Mr. Stalin, I believe the American Government acted wisely and well in its rejection.

But the attainment of peace is still the supreme task of this generation. The peoples of the world, including the Russian people, ardently wish for peace. In fact, the penalties of failure are so dreadful that a moral obligation rests upon this Government and every other government to test and explore every pathway which has a reasonable chance of opening the way to understanding.

From the experience of the past 3 years, however, we have learned the salient fact that another meeting in itself will add nothing to the cause of peace unless the conditions for such a meeting are radically changed in advance. In recent years there have been constant meetings between representatives of the democratic countries and Soviet Russia, both inside the United Nations and elsewhere. Many of these meetings have taken place within the boundaries of the Soviet Union. Even the bravest optimist would hardly assert that these meetings have produced anything else than bitter fruit.

Because of this record, I believe another such meeting would be worse than futile unless we employ a new and radically different method of approach. Not only have prior meetings proved abortive, but the records show that the Soviet Union has consistently violated the solemn pledges made to this Nation and to other nations over the past several years.

Why is this true? What are the causes of failure, and how can they be corrected?

The reason for failure is clear and obvious. It is that the Soviet Government has no responsibility and no accountability to the Russian people. By means of the iron curtain, the Soviet Government has persistently and deliberately deceived the Russian people as to the peace aims and aspirations of the United States and the other democratic governments.

If the Russian people were to know the truth as to our aims and purposes and intentions, I cannot believe that they could ever be led into a war of aggression upon us or upon any of the nations of Europe.

This latest alleged peace gesture by Mr. Stalin is a perfect illustration of Kremlin methods. While Mr. Stalin was telling the world of his wish for a peace pact with President Truman, the Politburo was busy informing the Russian people that the warmongers of the democratic nations would never consent to such an agreement. This is the same two-edged propaganda thrust so often employed in the past.

The press and radio of America were used to tell our people of Mr. Stalin's peaceful intentions; the press and radio of Russia were used to falsify the peace aims of the American Government.

This proves conclusively what every thinking person knows to be true—namely, that the greatest peace menace in the world is the iron curtain rigidly maintained by the Soviet Government.

The very fact of its existence is evidence that the Soviet Government will not permit the truth about world affairs to penetrate to its own people. And where there is no truth, there is no hope of peace.

The iron curtain proves not only that Mr. Stalin is suspicious of the democratic countries; it proves beyond reasonable doubt that Mr. Stalin does not trust the Russian people. Only a government afraid of its own people would erect a barrier to block the passage of truth across its own borders.

Few people realize that the iron curtain blocks the pathway to peace by other means than the suppression and distortion of news and information. On the record, we are justified in asserting that the desire to maintain the iron curtain is the primary reason, if not the sole one, why the Soviet Government has refused to accept the plan for effective international control of atomic energy.

This plan of control is now the official plan of the United Nations. It has been accepted by all the nations except Russia and her satellites. Under this proposal, the United Nations would have the right to send impartial inspectors into Russia to make certain that the terms of peace were being carried out. In the same way, the United Nations would send impartial inspectors into the United States, and every other country.

Let us make no mistake, about it, Mr. President: this plan for the effective control of atomic energy is the most practical peace plan ever devised, and Premier Stalin could accept it tomorrow if he would. We need no personal meeting of the heads of states to carry it into effect. Soviet acceptance of the United Nations plan would be a major victory in the cause of permanent peace.

But Russia has stalled its acceptance for more than 2 years in the councils of the United Nations. The reasons advanced publicly for this refusal to cooperate are so transparent that they can surely be dismissed as frivolous. Behind these objections lies the stubborn refusal of Soviet authorities to admit inspectors of the United Nations behind the iron curtain. And so the Russian people, as well as ourselves, are victimized because truth must be suppressed to protect the political security of the Politburo.

From this situation we may arrive at this conclusion—there will be no durable peace while the iron curtain remains in existence. To remove this obstacle to understanding should be the primary task not alone of the United States but of the United Nations as well.

The cause of peace is so paramount, the mounting dangers of the cold war so apparent, that I believe a peace meeting between Premier Stalin, President Truman, Prime Minister Bevin, and Premier Queuille, is vitally urgent.

But as an evidence of good faith I believe the iron curtain should be voluntarily lifted by the Soviet Government as a precondition of that meeting. I believe that what the heads of democratic government wish to say to Mr. Stalin, they should be permitted to say to the Russian people as well.

What I am proposing is a direct radio talk by President Truman and the other heads of government to the Russian people on the eve of formal negotiations. The talks should set forth plainly the proposals of the democratic governments for peace. There should be guaranties in advance for adequate translations into the Russian and other Soviet languages. Mr. Stalin, in his turn, should be invited formally to address the American people either by radio or through the press, whichever method he prefers.

In fact, negotiations for this entire public exchange of information should be handled in detail by officials of the United Nations. In carrying out its functions the United Nations could perform no higher duty. It is well equipped to monitor radio stations, to interpret news stories—in short to make certain that conditions for the exchange of information are carried out in absolute good faith.

It is obvious that a single series of talks by the heads of democratic governments to the Russian people will not produce a permanent breach in the iron curtain. But in the peace negotiations to follow the democratic nations should insist upon the right of the United Nations to operate radio stations in each of the Big Five nations, including Russia. Only through the permanent breaching of the iron curtain in this fashion can the cause of peace be served.

In my opinion, if President Truman is accorded the right to address the people of Russia, it will be an evidence of Soviet good faith, and this fact in itself will be a great step forward along the path of peace. But if the right is denied, we may rightfully assume the Soviet attitude is less than frank, the iron curtain is still the greatest stumbling block to peace.

There are many facts which President Truman could tell the Russian people—facts which have been denied them by the iron curtain. He should be able to tell them of our offer to share atomic secrets and that acceptance of this plan will banish the horrors of atomic warfare and lay the foundations for eventual peace.

President Truman should be permitted to tell the Russian people we have poured out our lives and our treasure in two world wars, and that as a result of these victories, we have not taken a single foot of territory belonging to another nation. President Truman should be permitted to tell the Russian people about the billions of dollars which we are spending to succor not only our former allies but our former enemies as well.

And, above all, President Truman should be permitted to tell the Russian people about the deep-seated yearning of the American people for permanent peace.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McMAHON. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Does not the Senator also feel that the President of the United States should be permitted to tell the Russian people just what material contribution we made to their armies during the recent war?

Mr. McMAHON. I am glad the Senator from Oregon reminds me of that, because I know he realizes we spent some $11,000,000,000 or $12,000,000,000 to send matériel to the Russian people, only to find that much of the matériel had our name plates removed and Russian name plates substituted.

For three long years the Soviet propaganda agencies have employed the press and radio of the United States and other democratic countries to brand our people as warmongers and imperialists. During the same period, the Russian people have remained as remote from us as though they existed on another planet.

The proposal I have made certainly goes beyond the limitations of orthodox diplomacy. But the traditional patterns of statecraft are inadequate to meet the existing situation. We must be as bold and imaginative in winning the peace as we were in winning the war.

I believe the heads of democratic governments should propose a peace meeting with Mr. Stalin—under rigid conditions that what they propose shall be made known fully and factually to the Russian people. The Soviet Government, which erected the iron curtain, can end it at will.

Certainly, the place of meeting is secondary. We may accept in sincerity Mr. Stalin's statement that his health will not permit him a lengthy air or sea voyage. But a trip to nearby Stockholm could be made without endangering his health. Or, if he prefers, the place of meeting could be limited to his choice, provided always there is guaranteed the right of access to the Russian people.

In my judgment, it would be a tragic error to close the door entirely. There are many thoughtful people who believe the democratic countries have not gone far enough to meet what they consider to be a peace bid by Mr. Stalin. We would simply be deceiving ourselves if we overlooked the propaganda value of this latest Soviet peace offensive. There will be more of the same to follow.

Once again, Mr. Stalin has made use of the American press and radio to make known his willingness to discuss a pact for peace.

Is not it about time we had a chance to make known our peace aims to the Russian people? And if we are denied that right, should we not inform the world the reason why?

Mr. President, I have a concurrent resolution which I ask unanimous consent to offer, out of order. The resolution carries forward certain of the thoughts contained in the remarks I have just made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the concurrent resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 15) was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas the policy of certain countries in keeping their people uninformed on the true issues relating to present day international problems is not conducive to world peace; and

Whereas the policy of such countries in propagandizing the people of other countries with half truths and untruths leads to confusion and misunderstanding among the people of the world; and

Whereas all the people of the world desire peace and good will among men; and

Whereas such peace and good will will never be achieved until said people are informed of the international problems of their respective countries and the true facts underlying such problems: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress of the United States that the President of the United States hereafter refuse to meet with the heads of other countries for the discussion and settlement of international problems unless the head of each country attending such meeting agrees prior thereto that the proposals and objectives of the respective countries, together with the underlying facts therefor, will be disseminated to the people of each such country through press and radio facilities in such country prior to, during, and at the conclusion of such meeting.

It is also the sense of the Congress of the United States that the United Nations, at its next session, take suitable and appropriate action to provide for the dissemination everywhere throughout the world of factual reports of the proceedings of said United Nations.

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois to proceed to the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 47). The resolution will be debatable if the Senate takes it up.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator want to debate the motion, or the resolution itself?

Mr. HAYDEN. I hope the Senate will make it the unfinished business, so I can discuss it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to commend the Senator from Connecticut for what I consider to be a very constructive contribution which he has just made to the problem of defining the issue which exists between the Soviet Union and the United States. I think it of great importance that certainly the American people and the peoples in those countries where free press and free speech still exist should understand clearly the position the United States is taking in connection with its differences with the Soviet Union.

I want to commend the Senator from Connecticut, not only for his remarks, but for the introduction of the resolution, because I hold to the view, Mr. President, that we cannot continue indefinitely with the relationship that now exists between the Soviet Union and our country and arrive at our goal, which is peace. Therefore, I think now is the time to do everything within our power to try to impress upon the Russian leaders and, to the extent that they will permit us, to make available to the Russian people, information as to our sincerity in seeking to reach a peaceful understanding with the Soviet Union.

Mr. President, I make those comments quite independently of the subject matter which I rose to discuss, which deals with the motion now pending before the Senate and with the comments of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

I do not think that now is the time to debate the merits of various cloture proposals pending before the Senate, but we should endeavor to decide whether we want to take up at this time the motion to proceed with consideration of the resolution of the Senator from California. In that connection, Mr. President, I want—and I am sure that the Chair knows that I mean no disrespect—to discuss a previous ruling of the Chair today, because I think that ruling illustrates very well the point I want to make.

That ruling deprives Members of the Senate of an opportunity to file, during the morning hour, without asking for unanimous consent, amendments to resolutions they have previously introduced. Under that ruling we may find ourselves frequently in the situation in which I now find myself, that of being faced with other action by the Senate on the same subject matter, without having had any opportunity to get on file an amendment to my own resolution pertaining to the same subject matter.

So I most respectfully, Mr. President, wish to address myself for a moment to the ruling which the Chair rendered earlier today, under rule VII, dealing with morning business. I want to commend the Presiding Officer for the position he has taken in urging upon the Members of the Senate the necessity of following strictly the order of business as set out in the rules of the Senate. I think the efficiency of the Senate will be greatly improved. I think we shall be able to transact our business in a much more orderly fashion if we give to the Presiding Officer of the Senate our full cooperation in following the rules of the Senate and the order of business as set out in those rules, and confine ourselves, step by step, under those rules, especially during the morning hour, to the transaction of business which is permitted at a given time under the rules. Of course, Mr. President, in our effort to adhere strictly to the rules we must always be subject, as we all understand, to the exceptional case and where there is some good reason why an exception should be asked for, by way of unanimous consent, we should be ready to take something out of order rather than to insist on slavishly following the steps set forth in the rule. I recognize that that is not only the right of the Senate, but it is a right which we ought to exercise if, in our honest judgment, the circumstances merit it.

However, I want to point out to the Presiding Officer what I think one ruling will do to some of us if it is to be considered a precedent. I do not want it to become a precedent, and I do not think it will, with this protest. Certainly the Presiding Officer, and possibly the Parliamentarian, should look into the question as to whether the junior Senator from Oregon is correct or is in error in the position he now takes.

I refer to rule VII, on page 9 of our Senate Manual.

The first section of it reads as follows:

> After the Journal is read, the Presiding Officer shall lay before the Senate messages from the President, reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the Senate, and such bills, joint resolutions, and other messages from the House of Representatives as may remain upon his table from any previous day's session undisposed of. The Presiding Officer shall then call for, in the following order:
> The presentation of petitions and memorials.
> Reports of standing and select committees.
> The introduction of bills and joint resolutions.
> Concurrent and other resolutions.
>
> All of which shall be received and disposed of in such order, unless unanimous consent shall be otherwise given.
> Senators having petitions, memorials, pension bills, or bills for the payment of private claims to present after the morning hour may deliver them to the Secretary of the Senate, indorsing upon them their names and the reference and disposition to be made thereof—

And so on. I could go on and read the rest of the entire rule, Mr. President, and I submit that we would not find in it any language which prevents the Chair from ruling that when he calls for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions during the morning hour an amendment to an existing bill or to an existing resolution is to be interpreted as a bill or a resolution. Otherwise the Senator who wishes to offer such an amendment, under the Chair's ruling, will have no opportunity during the morning hour to offer such an amendment; he will have to wait until the morning hour has passed. He then will be in the position, Mr. President, of having to take his chances of securing the floor, and he may find that before he can secure the floor, other Senators have put before the Senate proposed action on the very subject matter with reference to which during the morning hour he may have wished to serve notice in regard to an amendment.

As I go through rule VII, Mr. President, I do not find in it any language which supports the Chair's ruling that it requires unanimous consent, during the morning hour, to introduce an amendment to a bill or a resolution. To the contrary, Mr. President, I submit that if the Chair will read rule VII from its four corners, taking into account the purpose of the rule, he cannot escape the conclusion that the purpose of the rule was to expedite the transaction of all business of the Senate which is encompassed in the introduction of memorials, bills, resolutions, and petitions, so that it can be done in a regular fashion, step by step. I say, Mr. President, it is certainly a highly literal interpretation, to take the position that, whereas rule VII specifically provides a step for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, it does not encompass the introduction of amendments to bills or resolutions previously introduced.

Let me show how easily the ruling could be changed from one of substance into one of mere form.

If I had not wanted to offer my amendment to a resolution today, a resolution previously existing, I could have gone through the formality of submitting a new resolution containing the identical language I wished to offer by way of my amendment, and I would then have been in order without requiring unanimous consent. I do not think those who wrote our rules had any intention of requiring that a Member of this body should be put in the position of having to follow that kind of a formality, but they clearly had in mind that when we got to the order of bills and resolutions, at that point a Member of the Senate should be in a position where he could offer whatever perfecting amendment he might wish to make to a previously introduced bill or resolution.

Mr. President, since the Chair's ruling this morning I have read the rule very carefully, and I think it is a rule which sets out in general language the order of procedure which shall be followed in connection with the introduction of resolutions, petitions, and memorials, as well as amendments thereto. If the framers of these rules meant any such limitation as the Chair has ruled today—and which I submit is going to become a very unfortunate precedent unless reversed—they could have said so very simply. But I think the general term "bills and resolutions" certainly carries with it the intention to permit the introduction of amendments thereto without any unanimous-consent requirement.

Let us apply my criticism of the Chair's ruling to what has actually transpired since the close of the morning hour. During the morning hour I sought, within the rule, and without requiring unanimous consent—because I agreed with the Presiding Officer that we should sparingly use the unanimous-consent device in order to do things on the floor of the Senate which at that time would be out of order except for unanimous consent—I sought to offer an amendment to Senate Resolution 12, which resolution deals with my cloture proposal, my proposal to adopt cloture in the Senate of the United States by majority vote rather than a two-thirds vote. I wish to say to the Senator from California, without at this time debating the merits of our differences, that my only difference with the Senator from California, the Senator from Massachusetts, and others who support the two-thirds requirement in their cloture petition, is this matter of whether cloture should be brought about by a two-thirds vote or a majority vote.

I take the position, as I have taken it before the Committee on Rules, that the two-thirds vote requirement is not going to accomplish the results which needs to be reached, because the statistics of the history of cloture in the Senate of the United States show that only four times since 1917 has it been possible to garner a two-thirds vote of the Senate to apply cloture.

Therefore it is my position that if Senators really desire to have an effective cloture rule in the Senate then we ought to have a rule that would permit the Senate by a simple majority vote to get itself into such a position that we could pass legislation in the public interest. There is no reason that we should not be able to stop debate by the same vote by which we pass such major legislation as I cited in the committee, such as lend-lease, the Marshall plan, labor legislation; yes, Mr. President, even a declaration of war, that is by a simple majority vote.

If it is desirable to pass important legislation by a majority vote, then I say it is equally desirable to have a rule which will get the Senate in position so that we can pass that legislation by the application of a majority vote cloture rule.

When I introduced my resolution on January 5 of this year, I was of the impression that if we are to have cloture by a majority vote rule there should be a guaranty to the minority that after cloture has been adopted each Member of this body shall have 2 hours in which to debate the merits of an issue, with the right to farm out all or part of his 2 hours' time. But since offering the amendment I have made further research into this subject matter, because I try at least to render my decisions on the basis of objective data dealing with a given controversial issue, and I find that the statistical material which I have analyzed shows that, after cloture had been adopted, not once, so far as I can find, has the Senate used up the total 96 hours which would be permissible under the existing cloture rule, which provides, as the Presiding Officer well knows, for 1 hour of debate for each Senator after cloture has been adopted. I was greatly impressed with what I found in my statistical analysis.

Mr. President, I am therefore satisfied that after cloture has been adopted 1 hour is sufficient for each Senator, provided we can get an agreement on an acceptance of the view that the principle of farming out the time ought to be adopted. As I said before the committee, I think senatorial courtesy is adequate to guarantee to any Member of this body whatever time he may wish to take on the merits of an issue, if he can satisfy his colleagues on the floor that he is confining himself to the merits of the issue. If he wants 10 hours, or 15 hours, or 20 hours, to debate the merits of an issue, I have not any doubt that even Senators holding opposing views to his on the merits of the controversy would gladly give him their time, and I think there are plenty of instances in the history of the Senate which bear me out in this observation.

So, Mr. President, I sought today, during the morning hour, as I told the Committee on Rules I would do, to offer an amendment changing the 2-hour provision in my resolution to a 1-hour provision. But the effect of the Chair's ruling is that during the morning hour, unless there is unanimous consent, a Member of this body cannot offer amendments to bills or resolutions previously introduced by him, but will have to wait until after the morning hour is closed.

I say, Mr. President, with all respect, that that ruling, in my judgment, just cannot be reconciled with the purpose of rule VII. The purpose of rule VII was to expedite the introduction of resolutions and bills, and I think it carried with it the introduction of amendments to resolutions or bills.

Practically the first thing that transpired here on the floor of the Senate today after the morning hour, or almost the first thing, was the presentation of the motion by the Senator from Illinois to take up the Knowland resolution. I happen to be in favor of taking up the Knowland resolution; but that is not the material fact. It is within the realm of possibility that on some other occasion, or even at this time—and I am speaking hypothetically—the very introduction of an amendment during the morning hour might have a direct bearing upon the position a Senator might take subsequently, after the morning hour, when action was proposed on some phase of the same subject matter. I do not have to tell the Presiding Officer that a great many extenuating circumstances may develop in the Senate which may keep a Senator off the floor at the very time that subject matter is being brought up, and there would be no notice in the RECORD of the Senate, there would be nothing pending at the desk, in respect to an amendment which he had offered as a perfecting amendment to a resolution or bill previously introduced by him.

It is quite possible in this instance, certainly hypothetically possible, that some Senator might have his mind made up entirely on the question as to whether or not, under a majority-vote rule for cloture, a Senator should be allowed only 1 hour instead of 2 hours, because there are Members of this body who have said to me——

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. Not at this time. I shall yield later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. MORSE. Senators have said to me, "We think your 2-hour limitation is too long. If you make it 1 hour, we might be more favorably inclined to your resolution." That is as far as anyone has gone, Mr. President, in speaking to me with respect to support of my resolution, although I may say to my good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] that with this amendment my resolution differs now only in respect to the farming-out provision, and unless the Senator from Pennsylvania is opposed to the idea that after cloture each Senator ought to have the right to farm out his time, or part of his time, if he does not want to use it, to some colleague, I ought to find him as an enthusiastic colleague and supporter of my resolution. Or, to put it in reverse, I will be very glad, as I have said to the Senator privately, to join with the Senator from Pennsylvania in support of his resolution, which is based upon the majority vote rule principle, if he in turn will accept the amendment which I sought to offer today, but which the ruling of the Chair prevented me from offering until after the morning hour, in the absence of unanimous consent.

I close, Mr. President, by assuring the Presiding Officer of my sincere desire to cooperate with him in every way possible in following the order of business set out in the rules, but I respectfully say to him that, in my judgment, his ruling today establishes a very unfortunate and, I think, unsound precedent, and I respectfully urge him to give it further consideration, and in due course of time advise the Senate as to whether or not he thinks rule VII really supports the ruling he has handed down today, because should that be the Chair's final ruling, I shall myself respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Oregon permit the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. MORSE. If I can answer the question I will be very happy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Obviously under the order of business the offering of an amendment would not be in order under the heading of "Petitions and memorials." It would not be in order under "Reports of committees."

The next order is the "Introduction of bills and joint resolutions." An amendment is not a bill, although it proposes to amend a bill which has been introduced; and it is not a joint resolution. The Chair might interpret a bill to include any amendment that the author of the bill desires to offer to it and have considered in the committee. Of course, it is not necessary to offer in the Senate an amendment to a bill that has been referred to a committee. It can be done in the committee itself, or it can be done on the floor if the bill should come before the Senate for consideration.

The next order is "Concurrent and other resolutions." Well, an amendment is not a concurrent resolution. It is not any other kind of resolution. And the Chair would have to interpret one of those orders of business—for instance "Bills and joint resolutions"—to include amendments, which the language does not provide, in order to allow an amendment to come in under that heading.

The Chair appreciates the difficulty to which the Senator from Oregon has referred, and the Chair shares the view that if the Senator wants to offer an amendment to a bill which has been previously introduced it looks like there ought to be some place to do so, without securing unanimous consent, but unless I can interpret a bill to mean an amendment, it could not be done under that item of business.

The Chair will be glad to give further consideration to the suggestion of the Senator, and I hope the Chair is not so hide-bound as to sustain any ruling he has made if he is convinced that the contrary should be the ruling.

I appreciate the Senator's viewpoint, and I thank him for his expression.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, all I ask for is a reconsideration by the Chair of his ruling, because the difference between us is a difference growing out of the Presiding Officer's observation that he cannot interpret an amendment to a bill as business to be transacted at the time bills are to be introduced, or the Chair's ruling that an amendment to a resolution previously introduced cannot be interpreted as a resolution under that section of the rule that deals with resolutions.

I submit that if the Chair will read the entire rule, in the light of its background and its purpose, that the most logical conclusion to reach is that when the Senate arrives at the point where the business is the introduction of bills and joint and other resolutions, in view of the fact that a bill or a resolution which has previously been introduced can be resubmitted with changes or amendments, that is with the perfecting language added, amendments to a bill which has already been introduced can be offered, or when a resolution has once been introduced, amendments to the resolution can be offered. It certainly must have been intended that amendments to bills can be submitted at that time, and that amendments to resolutions can be submitted at that time, because it is not to be presumed that the writers of the language intended such literal construction as the Presiding Officer has given to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] to proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 47. Unless there is some objection to proceeding to the consideration of the resolution, the Chair will declare that by unanimous consent the motion is agreed to. The resolution itself is debatable.

Mr. BRIDGES and Mr. HAYDEN rose and addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona wish to oppose the resolution?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have sought recognition to speak on the resolution itself. As chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, I should like to discuss the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Senator from Arizona is entitled to recognition, if the Senator wishes to discuss the resolution now. The Chair wishes to expedite the matter by getting the resolution before the Senate.

Mr. HAYDEN. As I understand, the resolution is now before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No, the resolution is not before the Senate. The motion of the Senator from Illinois to proceed to the consideration of the resolution is still pending. Does the Senator from New Hampshire object?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I have been trying to secure recognition here for several hours, and I have been taken off my feet, and a few more Senators are going to be taken off their feet, too, if I do not secure recognition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not taken the Senator off his feet. From a legislative standpoint the Senator has not been on his feet. The Chair is trying to expedite the business of the Senate. The resolution is debatable after the motion is agreed to. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arizona if he wishes to speak on the motion.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. I do not want to be overly technical, but I certainly question whether recognition of any Senator should depend on whether he desires to address himself to the subject-matter under discussion. I am sure the Presiding Officer does not mean that recognition of the Senator from Arizona is to be given on that basis. What the Presiding Officer has suggested is that he would recognize the Senator from Arizona if the Senator from Arizona proposes to speak on the resolution. I would have to raise a point of order if that is the intention of the Presiding Officer.

Mr. HAYDEN. In order to settle the matter——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arizona if he wants recognition.

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to my friend from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I may say first——

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. What is the question now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] to proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 47, the Knowland resolution.

Mr. RUSSELL. That motion has not yet been put to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been put.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the question of considering certain other legislation had been before the Senate, and as much time had been spent in debating the motion to take it up as has been spent on the motion now before the Senate, there would not be enough printer's ink to proclaim a filibuster to be in progress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Hampshire.

JOSEF CARDINAL MINDSZENTY

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, the conscience of the free peoples of the world is shocked by the diabolical trial of Cardinal Mindszenty in Hungary. Especially does the heart of America reach out to this new martyr on the tragic list of those who have been bitterly persecuted by the Communists. Once more we witness the torture of a friend of freedom because he dared speak out with the courage of his convictions.

As Cardinal Mindszenty sits alone in his cell awaiting the verdict of a court which mocks at justice, I for one would like to have him know that those who represent the people who champion liberty are thinking of him in grateful admiration. I should like to have him believe that here in America we accept his unfaltering stand as a true symbol of men everywhere who have freedom in their hearts.

The fraudulent trial in Budapest should be for our Government and people another grave reminder that although our wars in defense of decency and justice have been valiant, we have failed pitfully in what we intended would be our moral leadership of the world. In speaking out for the right since the ending of World War II the Government has sometimes displayed a squeamishness which does not compliment our country.

I am aware that there are those who are sensitive to any reference to America's failures in the field of foreign relations. But the horrible truth stares us in the face nevertheless. It was America which led in the appeasement of communism. It was America which led in the compromise of the principles which inspired freemen to win the war. It was America which first dampened the postwar ardor of those who have continued uncompromisingly the struggle against totalitarian abuse.

Yes, our dollars have been poured out by the billions, and our resources have been distributed by the millions of tons. But all too often the burning desire of the American people to augment their material gifts with a firm moral leadership has been denied.

If we lack the courage to speak out for freedom in such an hour as this, then all of our dollars and all of our goods will not keep the torch of liberty aloft in the world. If those whom we would save from Communist slavery are to know that our gifts come from our hearts, then we must let our hearts speak out when they are about to lay down their lives in our common cause. From his cell of torture Cardinal Mindszenty sends his quiet but eloquent message to remind us again that freedom cannot be bought with gold, and that men who believe in freedom must live for it and sometimes die for it, if it is to survive.

Perhaps our protest will not save the life of Cardinal Mindszenty, but it will put Communist forces on notice that America is marking down the Cardinal's plight for what it is—another shocking Communist offense against decency and against the free nations of the world.

Our protest should give to us and to the American people a new hold upon the principles we consider fundamental to our own liberty, a new hold upon our hope for a just peace in the world. The Senate's condemnation of the unjust, torturous, shocking treatment of Josef Cardinal Mindszenty will be notice to those whose lack of moral principle is obvious that America is still a Christian nation and intends to continue as a bulwark of Christianity in the world.

The act against which my resolution is directed is not an isolated offense, Mr. President. It is a part of the design for world conquest which has its origin in Moscow. Let there be no mistake about that. And let there be no mistake about the awful truth that the day may come when mere protests on the part of free America will not be enough, when as a result of the Communist hatred of freedom and love for power all the world may again be caught up in the terrible holocaust of war.

I see only one real source of hope for avoiding a clash of arms between those who believe in freedom and those who embrace the Communist philosophy. It is an uncompromising stand by our own Government and our own people for justice and decency. If we continue to hesitate to give voice to the things we know to be true and continue to hesitate to speak out against the things we know to be false, then we shall encourage those who seek the downfall of free nations the world over.

The eyes of free men everywhere are focused upon a prison cell in Budapest, Hungary, today. One of our number is probably about to lay down his life for all of us. The attention of Communist Russia and her satellites is focused upon that same cell, but also upon those who stand opposed to their slave philosophy. We shall add to the tragedy of Cardinal Mindszenty's plight if we keep our silence today. I therefore submit my resolution, by the passage of which the United States Senate would condemn the Cardinal Mindszenty trial, but even more would condemn before all the world unprincipled, un-Christian communism. We should speak out for freedom in an hour like this or accept as inevitable another fight for it later on.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Let me say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I appreciate the opportunity he gave me to join in the sponsorship of this resolution condemning as unjust the arrest, confinement, and trial of Cardinal Mindszenty. Like him, I come from a section of our great country which was founded by those who believed in the free practice of religious worship, and who were willing to suffer in order to worship God in the manner they deemed best. The condemnation, without a fair trial, of a great religious leader who has the courage to guide his people in the practice of their faith, and his sentence to death or other terrible punishment must not be condoned or passed over by us.

I am glad that the Senator allowed me to join in the sponsorship of this resolution.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am glad to say that I have identified myself with this resolution. Nothing has shocked me more than what I read in the newspaper today regarding this terrible miscarriage of justice, the condemnation of an innocent man who, because he believed in his God and what his religion stood for, must pay the penalty. I think we are justified in this great body in expressing our strong objection and our condemnation of any such action by an autocratic state.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. Will the Senator permit me to join as a sponsor of this resolution?

Mr. BRIDGES. I am very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. TOBEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from New Hampshire for having submitted this resolution. I associate myself with him and with the Senator from Connecticut in what they have said regarding the persecution of Cardinal Mindszenty.

In December, when I first heard of the proceedings against him, I addressed a protest to the State Department and received a reply which indicated complete sympathy with the viewpoint which I expressed. It is interesting to note in the press this morning a statement by Rev. Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, who is the Chaplain of the Senate. I read from the press account:

He told the congregation of Foundry Methodist Church, of which he is pastor, that the trial is also the "signal for war between an anti-Christian colossus and any church which refuses to submit to its supremacy and regimentation."

"This trial," he continued, "is only the first in a series of onslaughts that may be expected. In this fear-haunted world the battle is drawn between Christ and anti-Christ."

TRIAL OF CHRISTIANITY

"The cardinal is really on trial for defending the things which every Christian steadfastly believes. The plain fact is that he is simply anticommunistic and that is the unpardonable sin with the present masters of the Kremlin and the puppet police states which they control," Dr. Harris declared.

Dr. Harris said the trial has been "following the usual Soviet pattern," in which the victim confesses, "at least partial guilt."

"One shudders to think of what diabolical torture wrings such false admissions from human lips which before have spoken so uncompromisingly," he continued.

NEW DAY OF TERROR

"So-called Christian churches who will agree to let 'politics' alone," he continued, "will not be molested. Silence and acquiescence may buy temporary safety. But to defy communism and its godless implications is to court martyrdom in this new day of terror," Dr. Harris declared.

"Every Christian minister who has eyes to see the sinister significance of the cardinal's trial stands with him and for him as he sits in the prisoner's dock before the modern Pilates. With him in the dock is Christendom.

"This fight is not just between Roman Catholicism and communism. It is between a godless communism and any type of Christianity worthy of the name," he concluded.

I believe that those views may be fittingly described as expressing the opinion of Christians everywhere.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I should like to make a very brief observation on the address of the Senator from New Hampshire. I agree with the remarks which have been made concerning the complete horror of the Christian world, our world, at the situation which exists in Hungary today. Anyone who looks at a picture of the man who is now in what is called a trial, and a picture of the same man taken 2 years ago, cannot help concluding that they have persecuted and tortured him shamefully. It is a spectacle which disgraces civilization, and I heartily and strongly join in the protest which has been made here today. Cardinal Mindszenty may be killed by those who wish to enthrone communism in the place of God, but the things for which he stands will survive eternally.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, at about 3 o'clock tomorrow morning Washington time, the world will know what the Communist masters of Hungary have determined to impose as a sentence on Josef Cardinal Mindszenty. That it will be harsh is taken for granted. That it will be in complete defiance of the facts and the truth and human decency is also taken for granted by all civilized people.

All over America, decent people of all faiths, of all political views except one—the Communist—and of all races and creeds, have reacted to the arrest and kangaroo-court trial of the Hungarian primate, first with shock, then disbelief, then utter disgust. Millions of voices have been raised in protest, but so far, under the sorry state of world affairs and of widening totalitarian influence, these voices can be raised only to one authority able to do anything effective about the situation, and that authority, of course, is the Supreme One, the ultimate source of all justice.

Meanwhile, however, it is my earnest hope that the United Nations can be enlisted in some way, perhaps through the instrumentality of the Hungarian peace treaty, in conducting a thorough investigation into the depraved manner in which "justice" is being accorded an outstanding world figure in a state so recently liberated from one type of totalitarianism only to fall into another.

Mr. President, typical of the comments which informed Americans are making on the sickening sham of justice as it operates under Communist totalitarianism are several editorials which I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a part of my remarks. The Pittsburgh Press refers to this trial as an obscene travesty on a court of law. The Philadelphia Inquirer says that not only were impartial foreign observers excluded but that justice has also been excluded. The Washington Star makes similar comments. These are but a fraction of the angry and sorrowful editorials throughout America on this inhuman spectacle in Budapest.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Pittsburgh Press of February 6, 1949]

TRIAL BY TERROR

The Budapest trial of Josef Cardinal Mindszenty cannot prove either his guilt or innocence of treason, espionage, and black marketing, or of any other charges.

It cannot be a fair trial or a legitimate judicial proceeding for the obvious reason that it is held under a reign of terror.

Not only the defendant is the victim of that terror. All connected with the exhibition, including prosecutor and judge, whether willing or unwilling participants, are subject to a law which puts itself above the laws of man and God. That is the law of dictatorship.

In the eyes of that lawless rule all men of honor and conscience who oppose it forfeit their right to live. Whether they are ignored or shot or tortured to death or sent to a prison camp, or whether they are used as drugged or terrorized puppets in an obscene travesty on a court of law, depends solely on the will of the dictatorship.

Even the chief executioner himself is not immune, as shown by the unnatural deaths of succeeding heads of the Russian secret police.

The cardinal's alleged confessions and testimony are as worthless as the charges—as he warned they would be in his prophetic letter to Hungarian Roman Catholics written before his expected arrest by the dictatorship.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer of February 5, 1949]

RED TRIAL OF CARDINAL GRIM TRAVESTY OF JUSTICE

It is cause for wonder that even the Hungarian Communist bosses have had the effrontery to stage such a trial as that in which Cardinal Mindszenty is declared to have confessed that he is guilty in principle to charges of treason and black marketing.

This so-called trial is proceeding according to a Red pattern now wearisomely familiar: the people's court presided over by a judge who is also prosecutor; the incredible confessions and the certainty that the cases were settled and the sentences fixed before this Red farce opened.

If there had been even some slight departures from Communist routine the Budapest trials might not be so utterly suspect to logical men. The Catholic Church has charged, and the belief is reiterated by former Premier Ferenc Nagy, now in this country, that Cardinal Mindszenty's alleged confessions are the result of torture.

We must not forget that in the Red sphere opposition to communism is treason. Cardinal Mindszenty has been a bitter opponent of the Red regime that has grabbed Hungary.

Before his arrest Cardinal Mindszenty wrote to the Hungarian Board of Bishops: "I have participated in no conspiracy whatever. I will not resign my episcopal see. I will make no confession. If after this you should hear that I have confessed or resigned and that this is authenticated with my own signature, consider that to be only a consequence of human frailty and, in advance, I declare it null and void."

That, and the fact that he wrote a letter, which was intercepted by the Communists, appealing last week to United States Minister Selden Chapin to assist him to flee the country, strengthen the belief that Mindszenty's admissions in court are not those of a man speaking according to his free will.

The events of this spectacle, from which foreign government observers have been barred, increase the suspicions of torture and the use of drugs to obtain "confessions." This trial, from which justice has also been excluded, is a stern reminder to all of us that the Communists will go to every length to destroy those who oppose them.

THE MINDSZENTY TRIAL

Under totalitarian regimes, prosecutions for alleged offenses against the state follow an invariable pattern. This has been true of Soviet Russia ever since the Bolshevik revolution more than 30 years ago. It was likewise consistently true of Nazi Germany, the notorious Reichstag fire trial occurring in the early years of Hitler's Third Reich. And the Soviet satellite governments set up since the late war are running true to form.

The basic feature of all such trials is that they are political in character rather than juridical, as we understand the processes of justice. They are held before a special tribunal known as a people's court, with its own rules of procedure. The prosecution always alleges major crimes against the state tantamount to treason, usually coupled with alleged offenses such as black marketing which tend to discredit the character of the accused. Furthermore, the defendants are often charged with seditious relations with the representatives of foreign powers. The case against the main defendants is usually strengthened by confessions made by minor defendants who turn state's evidence. Indeed, in many cases, the chief of the accused voluntarily confesses his own guilt, either wholly or in part. Finally, it may be significant that accredited foreign correspondents have not been permitted to attend and report the Mindszenty trial.

It is against this background that the current trial of Josef Cardinal Mindszenty, Roman Catholic Primate of Hungary, should be evaluated. The cardinal had long since made himself a marked man to Hungary's totalitarian rulers by his vigorous opposition to measures depriving the Roman Church of its historic rights and privileges in that country. For it is a basic tenet of totalitarianism that all opposition to its limitless authority must be broken. Such a trial, once started, is a major political test which can have only one outcome. An acquittal would dangerously compromise the prestige and power of the totalitarian regime, which, in the last analysis, must always be right.

Under these circumstances, every development of the Mindszenty trial adverse to the cardinal should be regarded with skepticism. This certainly applies to the qualified plea of guilty voluntarily made by the cardinal in open court. It likewise applies to the genuineness of incriminating documents allegedly found in his possession, notably the letter purporting to involve our legation in Budapest in a plan to spirit him out of the country.

Unless this trial turns out to be the proverbial "exception which proves the rule," the only uncertain factor is the severity of the penalty imposed on Cardinal Mindszenty after the verdict of guilty has been pronounced by the people's court. And we may be sure that the degree of punishment imposed will be determined by political rather than factual considerations. Justice, in our meaning of the word, will play no part.

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE

The Senate resumed the consideration of Mr. LUCAS' motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 47, to discharge the Committee on Rules and Administration from the further consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 15) relating to cloture.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 47.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, now that the resolution submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] is before the Senate, I should like to discuss it.

I construe the resolution as an indictment of the Committee on Rules and Administration for dereliction of duty. I should like to have the Senate itself pass upon the question of whether a committee which conducted hearings and completed them in less than 10 days has been derelict in its duty, when 2 years ago a similar committee in considering a similar resolution required more than 20 days to accomplish the same result.

With respect to the hearings, I wish to say that the members of the committee were diligent in their attendance. A quorum was always present. The Senators who appeared and testified before the committee did so at inconvenience to themselves, in that their presence there interfered with the performance of their other duties. A Senate committee which acts as promptly as that should not be criticized or condemned in this manner.

Furthermore, I should like to have the Senate pass judgment upon whether it is unreasonable for the members of any committee to take a brief time to determine what position they shall take on an issue of such grave importance, an issue which vitally affects what they may do or may not do upon the floor of the Senate. It is but fair that every one of them individually should have a reasonable time in which to make up his mind as to what he should do.

Following completion of the hearings, all that the committee did was to vote that 1 week—and only 1 week, a postponement of that length of time—be taken before the committee would again take up consideration of the cloture resolution.

I have no definite means of knowing what the committee will do on next Wednesday. It will meet then, and will take up the resolution to amend rule XXII, which is the unfinished business before the committee. If the resolution should be reported to the Senate next Wednesday, I wish to assure Republican Senators who have made engagements to make Lincoln Day addresses that they can plan to go away and will not be required to come back and be in their seats in this body before a cloture rule comes before the Senate. No debate on it will occur in that interval. I am glad that we on this side of the aisle can extend that courtesy to Republican Senators, because we know it will be returned to us in full measure when Jefferson Day comes around, and that regardless of what business is then before the Senate, they will permit Democratic Senators to go out to make their addresses.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from Arizona realizes, of course, that that is in consonance with a great Republican doctrine of long standing, originated by McKinley—namely, reciprocity.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am glad to give reciprocal assurance to the Republican Senators that they can go away next Saturday and there will be no cloture resolution brought before the Senate before they can return, because undoubtedly it will take a little time—if I am honored by the committee by being asked to write the report—to prepare it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I am reminded, of course, of what the able Senator from California has said—namely, that in the event immediate action is not taken, he will again and again file a motion to discharge the committee from the further consideration of this matter. So, in view of the statement of the Senator from California, I doubt whether the Senator from Arizona can count on such an interval.

Mr. HAYDEN. I doubt whether the Senate would sustain any such renewed motion. I can positively state no Senator has suggested to me that there should be a delay of 15 months before such a resolution is even indirectly considered by the Senate. Yet that is exactly what happened in the last Congress.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. Let me preface my question with a brief statement: I heard what the Senator from California had to say about the motion. I wish to hasten to tell my friend the Senator from Arizona, who is chairman of the committee, that as I heard the remarks of the Senator from California, I did not understand them to imply any criticism whatever of the chairman of the committee.

I wish merely to add this inquiry: Can the Senator from Arizona give us any assurance as to when we shall have an opportunity to vote on this particular matter?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I am the despair of some of my good friends, the newspapermen, who are much more interested in what is going to happen than in what has happened, because I refuse to make predictions. All I can say is that the committee will meet on next Wednesday, and that as, if, and when the resolution is reported, I am quite sure there will be no 15 months' delay in bringing it before the Senate.

Mr. BALDWIN. I take it from what my friend says that the present state of the matter is such that it is even beyond prophecy—and of course prophecy is rather an easy thing. The Senator from Arizona would hesitate even to make a guess about it, then; would he?

Mr. HAYDEN. I simply do not engage in predictions. In that way I keep myself 100 percent correct.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to the Senator from New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona yields for a question.

Mr. IVES. Does the Senator yield only for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule, that is all the Senator from Arizona can yield for at this time. However, the Chair would point out that this debate has been running along, by unanimous consent, in violation of the rule; so the Chair will not clamp down at this time and enforce the rule as against the Senator from New York.

Mr. IVES. I appreciate the Chair's position. Nevertheless I shall attempt to abide by the rule, by framing the statement in question form: Does the Senator from Arizona remember the statement of the Senator from California that two wrongs do not make a right? I refer to the Senator's statement that the Republicans by their delay had made a mistake, and we recognize the mistake, and we do not want the mistake to occur again and to cause, by unwarranted delay, a continuation of such a mistake or a repetition thereof?

Mr. HAYDEN. Does the Senator from New York insist that up to this moment there has been any unwarranted delay?

Mr. IVES. Yes; I do. However, I have not the floor.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have asked a question of the Senator. I should like to know what delay has been unwarranted.

Mr. IVES. The 10-day delay when the hearings were delayed from the 14th to the 24th.

Mr. HAYDEN. Oh, we should have conducted hearings during the period of the Presidential inauguration; is that the point? I am entirely willing to let the Senate pass judgment on that delay.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. IVES. Let me point out to the Senator that the time I referred to, in saying that the hearings should have begun on the 14th, was not during the inaugural period. There was ample opportunity on the 14th and 15th, at least, and perhaps on the 17th and 18th.

I wish to point out to the Senator from Arizona that we already have an excellent precedent for Saturday hearings because of what is going on before the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

To my mind, the delay which occurred in this case was inexcusable, and it may eventually prove to have been disastrous.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me again state that no motion was made at any time during the entire life of the Eightieth Congress to take up for consideration the cloture resolution reported from the Committee on Rules and Administration on April 3, 1947. The only reference ever made to that resolution occurred at the time when an entirely different proposal was under consideration.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. IVES. I do not think the Senator from Arizona quite understood what I was driving at. I tried to indicate that the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] pointed out to the Senate in his preliminary remarks, the first he made today on this question, that the Republicans had erred in that delay; and we admit it, but we do not want to see a repetition of it.

Mr. HAYDEN. Be that as it may, what happened was, as we all well remember, that the President of the United States, after the Democratic and Republican National Conventions had adjourned, called Congress into extraordinary session. In a message to Congress the President suggested there were certain bills which had passed one House or the other, that could be considered and passed, and if that action were taken, it would redeem pledges made in both the Democratic and the Republican national platforms. The Republican leadership of the House decided the particular bill which should be taken up, among all subjects mentioned by the President, was an antilynching bill. They well knew when they made that decision, that a similar bill had been rejected by the Senate on at least five different occasions. They also knew that the Senate had twice in 1938 and again in 1946 refused to vote cloture on a very similar bill.

What happened was exactly what the Republican leadership expected to happen. The antilynching bill caused a filibuster to take place in the Senate. The debate was unlimited. It went on and on until an attempt was made to file a cloture petition to close debate on the motion to proceed to consideration of the bill. Then, the President pro tempore, the very able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], ruled, and properly so, that the present rule XXII did not apply to a situation of that kind. Very shortly thereafter the Republican leadership determined it was useless to carry on discussion with respect to that bill. It was at that late date that notice was served upon the Senate that immediately upon the convening of the Eighty-first Congress an effort would be made to adopt an amendment to rule XXII, which would correct it to conform to what many Senators believed to be the original intent at the time that the rule was adopted in 1917.

That announcement was made, that pledge was given, on the assumption the Republicans would continue in control of the Senate. Let us suppose there had been a Nation-wide landslide, that the Republican Party had gained the Presidency and had retained control over both Houses of Congress. Let us imagine for a moment what the situation would have been at the beginning of this Congress, in January 1949. The very able Senator from Michigan undoubtedly would have been reelected President pro tempore of the Senate. If a motion had been made to proceed to the consideration of a resolution to amend rule XXII, no one would have expected him to reverse his ruling that the motion to proceed is debatable indefinitely. It is also reasonable to expect that extended discussion would take place on the floor of the Senate.

I assume therefore that if an effort had been made to rush the consideration of a cloture resolution we would have been faced with this dilemma: Could the Senate have attended the inauguation of President Dewey, if a filibuster were going on at that very time in this body?

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I may point out to the able Senator from Arizona that under such circumstances we certainly would have been very glad to attempt to do so.

Mr. HAYDEN. Furthermore, it is very doubtful whether the Republicans would have attempted to take up a change in rule prior to the inauguration, any more than the Democrats did. They would have known how the President pro tempore of the Senate would rule, and that debate could not be cut off. They might well have preferred to wait until after January 20, and then see whether Vice President Warren might be persuaded to modify the ruling made previously by President Pro Tempore VANDENBERG.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. At this very moment, with the resolution of the Senator from California pending, do we not have an excellent opportunity to see how the distinguished Vice President of the Democrats would rule on the same motion? Perhaps, if my friend were to press it, we might have that opportunity now.

Mr. HAYDEN. The question pending before the Senate at the time is whether or not the resolution offered by the Senator from California shall be adopted. The motion to take it up has been disposed of so there is no occasion for a ruling by the Vice President.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. A few moments ago the distinguished Senator remarked that the cloture resolution would come up for consideration before the Committee on Rules and Administration next Wednesday.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. The distinguished Senator stated he did not know what action would be taken, in the event the resolution is reported favorably to the calendar. The resolution in question is the Hayden-Wherry resolution; is it not?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is true, and the resolution offered by the Senator from California reads:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules and Administration is hereby discharged from further consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 15) relating to cloture.

Senate Resolution 15 is the particular resolution which the Senator from Nebraska and I have offered.

Mr. WHERRY. In the event the meeting is held by the Committee on Rules and Administration next Wednesday and favorable action taken, does the Senator from Arizona now say it will be immediately taken up for consideration in the Senate?

Mr. HAYDEN. No. I assured the Senate that such action would not be taken, because Republican Senators are entitled to be away from the Senate in order to deliver their Lincoln Day addresses.

Mr. WHERRY. How about next Monday? If it is reported Wednesday, would it be ready for debate next Monday?

Mr. HAYDEN. Whenever the resolution is reported to the Senate and placed upon the calendar any Senator may move to proceed to its consideration. I do not want to indicate that such a motion will be made on Monday. I do not want Senators to be hurrying back after they have been away to deliver their addresses. I do not think Democratic Senators who had been away for Jackson Day would want to be hurried back. All that I am trying to impress upon the Senate is that I know of no one who would expect that there should be any such delay in the consideration of a cloture resolution as occurred in the previous Congress.

Mr. WHERRY. I thought I understood the Senator to say there probably would be extended debate. But I was very greatly pleased with the statement he made, that if the resolution were favorably reported it would be taken up immediately for debate. I hope the Senator meant that he would not only report it to the calendar, but would move to take it up.

Mr. HAYDEN. I certainly would have to consult with the Senator from Nebraska and other Senators about what would be the proper time to do that.

Mr. WHERRY. I want the Senator from Arizona to know I am ready to have the resolution taken up at any moment, and the sooner the better. So if we can do it next Monday, that would be perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not anticipate, once the resolution is placed upon the calendar, there will be any interminable delay in its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Arizona concluded?

Mr. HAYDEN. I conclude by saying I hope the Senate will at this time vote down the Knowland resolution and reject any implication, any condemnation of the Committee on Rules and Administration, which committee I insist has been diligent in the service of the Senate, and will continue to be so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

THE WORK OF THE COMMISSION ON THE ORGANIZATION OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I should like to address myself today to the subject of governmental reorganization and the work of the Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, popularly known as the Hoover Commission. Today seems an appropriate time to offer a few remarks because ex-President Hoover has just released the first official recommendations of the Commission, and many more will shortly follow.

I wish to take this opportunity, Mr. President, to place myself in principle squarely behind the recommendations which the Hoover Commission has made, and will make in the future. I can think of no comparable objective from which the people of the United States can benefit more in the long run, than a thorough and meaningful reorganization of the Federal Government. Whether we like it or not, Mr. President, big government is with us to stay, but it behooves the people's elected representatives to grant the necessary authority, to allow the President and his executives to make it run efficiently, with an absolute minimum of overlapping jurisdictions, duplications of functions, and unaccountable waste.

A historic battlecry of both political parties in their campaigns for many years has been the reduction of Federal expenditures. A just concern over this subject has often resulted in negligence of well-considered programs of minimum proportions. How much more logical it would be, and how much more in keeping with our tremendous national responsibilities, if the Congress would adopt, with a minimum of qualification, the recommendations of the Hoover Commission. I would venture to say that millions of dollars would be saved, and unmeasurable benefits in increased efficiency would be realized.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the time is propitious for favorable action. Consider the makeup of the Commission. It is composed of 12 highly qualified men, 6 from each political party. It is headed by a man whose mature years have been spent in public service for his fellowmen. Since the Commission is nonpartisan, neither party can logically nor legitimately line up against its recommendations. The resolution sponsoring the study by the Commission was initiated in this body by that keen student of government, the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. The President of the United States, a Democrat, publicly endorsed the work of the Commission, after the recent campaign, in spite of its being headed by a former Republican President. Surely no more favorable political and psychological setting could be found.

But I am frankly worried, Mr. President, in spite of this apparent fortunate climate. The history of proposals for reorganization of the Government has been a dismal one. Rather than burden the Members of the Senate with a detailed summary of this history, I would like to ask unanimous consent to have an article written by Mr. James H. Rowe, a member of the Hoover Commission, in yesterday's Washington Star, made a part of my remarks at the conclusion of my remarks. This scholarly article is well written and to the point, in recognizing the difficulties inherent in any governmental reorganization, and is well worth the attention of the Members of the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit I.)

Mr. TOBEY. Let me say, Mr. President, that I want to serve notice here and now, as one individual Senator, that I will strenuously oppose any efforts by well-meaning Government administrators and their clientele to undermine the efforts of the Commission. It is a well-known occupational disease of all administrators, whether public or private, to seek to avoid the curtailment of privileges and prerogatives which have long been theirs. However, it is clearly evident to me that the burden of proof in the proposals to come before Congress will fall almost prohibitively on those who seek to retain the status quo.

The need for a thorough and complete reorganization of the machinery of government has been recognized for years.

The Hoover Commission is now ready to make its report. The time to meet and adopt these recommendations is now. It would be a tragedy if the long and sincere efforts of this committee to meet the need should die, or be shunted aside.

The responsibility to meet this need in the people's interest devolves upon the Congress. It has a great opportunity and a great privilege.

There is nothing that Congress could do, which, in my judgment, would meet with more universal approval by the people of this country than to carry out the recommendations which the Commission will make.

As always, when somebody's toes are stepped on, or some power is abridged, logrolling begins. Those of us who have been familiar with government down through the decades, recognize that this matter will be no exception. Just as in tariff legislation or tax legislation, those who in their judgment are being asked to give up some prerogative, seek to place the burden of the change upon the other fellow, so it will be with this.

Congress must rise to great heights. It must refuse to be led aside by these specious appeals; in other words, to use the language of Farragut of Mobile Bay, "Damn the torpedoes; go ahead!" And people will commend us for so doing.

The magnitude of the task is beyond the comprehension of any one man. I, for one, am willing to place my faith in the expert hands of the nonpartisan Hoover Commission, subject to a careful study on my part in each instance.

The time for constructive action is now. In my judgment, a similar favorable psychological and political climate will never be found.

The Members of Congress owe to their constituents an overwhelming obligation to apply logic and reason to the octopus of big government.

The Members of Congress owe to their constituents assurance that they recognize the attendant evils in administration of government. They propose to do something constructive about it, something more than merely to assail extravagance and inefficiency in government.

Here is the way. May we not be found wanting.

EXHIBIT I

FEDERAL REORGANIZATION LONG BUT FUTILELY SOUGHT—INDIFFERENT SUCCESS AT HANDS OF CONGRESS WAS THE FATE OF SIX MAJOR ATTEMPTS MADE BEFORE THE HOOVER REPORT

(By James H. Rowe, member of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government)

This week the Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government will send to Congress the first of a series of reports containing its recommendations for the reorganization of the Federal Government.

More familiarly known as the Hoover Commission (its chairman is the former President of the United States), this 12-man body is, at least in form, a new technique for an old problem: The task of bringing order out of governmental chaos, of making that hardy perennial, the Federal "bureaucracy," responsive, efficient, and economical. It is not the first time this has been tried, nor will it be the last. Our history is littered with the corpses of other bodies politic which have perished in similar adventures.

POLITICALLY BALANCED GROUP

Created by the Eightieth Congress in 1947, this Commission, however, is at least in membership a new departure. It includes legislators (two Senators and two Representatives), public administrators from the executive branch itself and six private citizens who have had previous Government experience. Although such bodies, named royal commissions, have long been used to study specific major problems in England and Canada, this is their first appearance in the United States. The sponsor of the act in the House, CLARENCE BROWN, of Ohio, is a member of the Commission. Secretary of State Dean Acheson was a private citizen when made Vice Chairman of the Commission.

To quell partisan political suspicions, which flower easily enough in the governmental arena, its sponsors provided that six members be Republicans, six Democrats. Although its Chairman, is, of course, a Republican, President Truman has consistently and publicly encouraged the group's work. The heads of the Government agencies, particularly the President's own staff advisers such as the Budget Bureau, have gone far beyond mere lip service in their cooperation and have been really helpful in every instance. Both the Eightieth Congress and its successor have been generous with money and support.

Such an agreement on all sides indicates general awareness on the part of the people and their servants, the public officials, that there is a problem. There is.

What is its nature? What are the chances of improvement?

Until the Commission has reported its findings to the Congress its conclusions cannot be discussed. The nature of the problem can, however, be outlined, previous attempts to meet it can be indicated. Success or failure of the Commission will depend in part on the merits of its proposals but also in part on the inherent difficulties of any thoroughgoing governmental reorganization in a democracy.

HODGEPODGE OF 1,800 UNITS

However one approaches it, reorganization is not a new problem. It may be more difficult, more complex, even more pressing. But it has been with us for a long time. Since 1900 the steady growth, in size and in variety, of Federal functions, have made the Government almost impossible to direct and coordinate. Its machinery has gradually become more disorderly and complex. For governmental growth is never at a steady, or even pace. It takes place in fits and starts caused by conditions Government itself does not control. The impact of two world wars, of several severe depressions, of new and compelling desires by the people it serves, has skewered the structure out of shape. And each need, once accepted as real by the Congress, was handled as it arose. Congress viewed only its particular solution with little or no concern for its relevance to an over-all pattern. Worn as it is, the most apt description is that the Government has just grown like Topsy.

Today it is a "combined hodgepodge" of more than 1,800 different units. The budget for the fiscal year 1950 is $45,000,000,000—$7,000,000,000 more than our entire national income in 1939. More than a third of today's budget, almost a tenth of our entire national production, goes to the military establishment alone.

After each sudden growth in governmental functions an inevitable attempt has been made to make the structure more business-like, more efficient and more economical. Almost all Presidents and Congresses have been increasingly concerned with reorganization. After each crisis of war or depression, proposals were made to rationalize the new agencies or bureaus into the over-all structure.

All serious recommendations were designed to repair three major flaws:

1. Activities had been placed in agencies which had no relation to the major purpose those agencies should perform.

2. Related agencies, which performed the same or similar functions, were put in different departments.

SIX OTHER ATTEMPTS MADE

3. The executive branch as a whole lacked definite direction and control.

Every major study of governmental reorganization has emphasized these defects. The one consistent thread which has run through all proposals to bring order out of this chaos is the constant reassertion of these three principals. Those of the Hoover Commission will be no exception.

It has been said that George Washington was the first President to try to reorganize the Government.

Certainly sporadic attempts were made in the nineteenth century to tamper with the Government structure. But it is only during the twentieth century, particularly since World War I, that the attention of public administrators, political scientists, and legislators has been scientifically fixed on this problem.

There have been six previous major efforts to reorganize the executive branch.

In 1912 President Taft presented to the Congress the report of his Commission on Economy and Efficiency, but no action was taken.

In 1923 President Harding sent his suggestions for improvement to a Joint Congressional Committee on Reorganization of the Executive Departments. Several of his most far-reaching changes were not accepted by the joint committee, which recommended its own plan instead. It, too, did not receive congressional approval.

The Institute of Government Research, a private organization interested in public administration, also in 1923 submitted a reorganization proposal, but Congress again took no action.

TWO SIMILARITIES

In 1932 President Hoover was granted broad powers to reorganize the executive branch by executive order with the provision that either house could nullify it by disapproval within 60 days of the transmittal of such order to the Congress. President Hoover submitted a wide-scale reorganization, but the House of Representatives disapproved his proposals.

The last major attempt to reorganize was the twofold effort in 1937. The Brookings Institution made a lengthy report to a select committee investigating the executive agencies, but no legislation resulted.

The report of the President's Committee on Administrative Management, a group of political scientists appointed by President Roosevelt, also made its report in 1937. Most of its recommendations did not become law.

If one reviews these past recommendations, he will be immediately struck by two things:

1. They have met with indifferent success at the hands of Congress.

2. All proposals center around several major problem areas. And although succeeding Congresses have refused to accept the suggested solutions, they are made time and time again. Once more the recommendations of the Hoover Commission will prove no exception to this general rule.

Why did Congress react so indifferently in the past to reorganization? The experienced members of the Congress are better informed and more concerned about our sprawling bureaucracy than any other group of American citizens. They struggle with its intricacies daily and they are sincerely appalled by their own inability to control it through legislation, investigation, and appropriation. They are intelligently disturbed, far more than the individual citizen.

NOT A JOB FOR CONGRESS

Past experience suggests there are several reasons.

For one thing, the Congress is unable to legislate every detail or to examine every one of the departments and agencies with sufficient precision to complete an over-all plan. Probably the hardest working body in the world, it is necessarily immersed in day-to-day problems which require immediate answers.

Also each Congressman is for many reasons more aware and more interested in the activities of one department or agency than in the many others. Each agency has its friends, its sponsors on the hill.

Students of the Federal Government have therefore long been convinced that only the President can really reorganize the Government on an over-all basis. He can do this only if Congress wil give him the power. For that reason a new technique was created in 1939 especially for reorganization. First suggested by Secretary of Commerce Hoover, this power eventually was granted to President Roosevelt. It allows the President to draw up and submit to Congress a plan for reorganization. If both Houses of Congress do not disapprove the plan within 60 days it becomes law. Since this is clearly a legislative function the Congress was long loathe to give up such a power. But over the years it too had grown to realize that this was the only way. Led by such able students of government as Senator James Byrnes, later Justice of the Supreme Court and Secretary of State, and Representative Lindsay Warren, now Comptroller General, the Congress temporarily granted this power to President Roosevelt in 1939. This power was once renewed but again expired in 1948.

Last month the Hoover Commission formally requested both Houses to grant it once more to President Truman and hearings on such a bill are now being held in both Houses.

Inevitably certain Government agencies will ask that they be exempted from the provisions of the new reorganization bill. Some have been so exempted in the previous acts. Once exempted that is the end of it, as a practical matter. Then the only way to reorganize such agencies is by the regular legislative method. Since 1939 no agency which has acquired an exemption has been reorganized by congressional statute.

EXEMPTIONS WILL BE ASKED

The trouble with exemptions is that if several of the most important segments of the Government can take themselves out of the reorganization game it is most difficult to create the necessary coherent pattern for the entire executive branch. This has been the big stumbling block since 1939.

Everyone believes in reorganization—for the other fellow. Every public administrator can, and will, give countless examples of duplication in effort, unnecessary waste, and ridiculous expenditure. But it is always the agency down the street, not his own. And every official knows various agencies pulling at cross purposes with each other or the President—but they are always two other agencies.

This is a natural, indeed human, quality. Each administrator, of course, knows much more about the flaws and virtues of his particular work than any commission however expert. It is not very surprising that he finds faults in an over-all plan because it has not been able to master all the detailed knowledge at his fingertips. But he forgets that such a commission sees the over-all pattern, something he does not.

And every agency has its clientele—citizens who as general taxpayers are properly horrified by cost and inconsistent administration of the Government, but who also derive special service from one particular agency. They, too, favor reorganization—but not of their pet agency.

The consequences are always the same. The particular department and the influential group who support its activities for their own specific reasons want to be untouchable. They sincerely think they are a special situation, so they make their views known to the Congress. Multiply each agency and its own group by the total number of agencies and groups, some of them far stronger throughout the Nation than others, and the opposition to reorganization is clear.

PRESIDENT HAS OVER-ALL VIEW

The only person on the other side of the fence is the President. He has a national, an over-all point of view. He is held responsible for making this "combined hodgepodge" work. So he wants it to be an efficient, businesslike, nonwasteful organization.

Standing with him—theoretically, at least—are all of us, the great mass of taxpayers and citizens.

It is unfortunately notorious that taxpayers and citizens while they complain bitterly about cost and inefficiency in Government, do nothing more than that. They fail to make their views known to the Congress.

In general, these are the reasons that reorganization proposals of the past have met with the indifference they have. The same fate awaits the Hoover Commission unless the attitude of the general citizen has changed remarkably.

There is good reason why he should have changed. The growth, the size, and the cost of the executive branch over the past few decades is apparent to him.

Perhaps Presidential reorganization plans should be sent to the Congress only on March 15—income-tax day.

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 47), which is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules and Administration is hereby discharged from the further consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 15) relating to cloture.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution of the Senator from California, Senate Resolution 47.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to address myself for a few brief moments to the resolution which is now before the Senate.

I am a member of the Committee on Rules and Administration, and I also have a resolution on the same subject which is before the Committee on Rules and Administration for consideration. That committee met on the twelfth of January, and during the course of its deliberations it was suggested that the committee should fix a date for hearings on these cloture resolutions. It was suggested that the committee should meet on the 14th, which was a Friday, and continue hearings to the 15th. We realized that we could not finish our hearings at that time. We well knew that the week of inauguration would intervene and we endeavored to get the committee to agree amicably that hearings would begin on the fourteenth of January. I was a good deal surprised to hear it said that a delay of 2 days might well be disastrous. We know that cannot be true. We cannot stretch our imaginations to such an extent as to think that a delay of 2 days would in any way destroy that resolution or its effect.

Committees do not usually sit on Saturdays, but the suggestion was made that the committee sit on Saturdays.

Several Senators asked the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] to waive a roll-call vote, but the Senator from California was adamant; he wanted to put the committee members on record as to whether they were in favor of beginning hearings on the 14th or on the 24th of January. In view of the record of the last Congress, it seems to me that was rather ludicrous. It was amazing. I felt that there was some reason, some purpose, for the suggestion other than merely having hearings 10 days later. So the question was put to a vote, and we had a party vote. The eight Democrats voted that the hearings should commence on the 24th of January. The five Republicans voted, in effect, to commence hearings on the 14th of January. We began hearings on the 24th, Mr. President, and we had hearings all that week. Then we had hearings on Monday and Tuesday of last week. Then the committee met on Wednesday. Some members of the committee wanted more time. There had been 7 or 8 days of hearings. Two of the committee were new Members of the Senate, and another was a new member of the committee. Although he had previously served in the Senate, and was somewhat familiar with the legislation in question, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], too, asked for further time to consider the resolution, or all the resolutions.

As has been said, I have offered a resolution providing that the Senate may impose cloture by a majority vote. My resolution is the first measure pending before the Committee on Rules and Administration, because I offered it as an amendment to the Hayden-Wherry resolution when it was brought up last Wednesday. But some of the Senators asked for another week. I said to the committee that I had been close to this subject for a long period of time, that I did not think I needed any further time to consider the resolution, that I had heard much of the evidence, was familiar with it. But we had to have a vote then, so I voted against continuing the matter until the coming Wednesday. But I certainly think when the chairman of a committee and some of our colleagues in the Senate ask that more time be granted by a standing committee of the Senate to consider legislation, that much courtesy is due them, and they should be given at least 3 more days, today, tomorrow, and Wednesday, in which to consider the testimony and the entire subject.

Mr. President, I see no reason for the pending resolution. I see no reason whatsoever for bringing the resolution before the Senate, and I am sure the author of the resolution and those on the other side of the aisle know that the committee is going to meet on Wednesday, and undoubtedly—I cannot predict, but I am quite convinced—the committee will come to a vote, and will vote on the pending resolutions. Although I can give such assurance to no one, personally I am convinced we will reach a vote. In view of that situation, I cannot quite understand the reasons or the motives for insisting that the committee be discharged.

One may say he has the greatest love and affection for the chairman of the committee, but I do not think the present move shows courtesy toward the chairman of the committee, and I think it is a discourtesy, too, to some other Senators who asked for a few days, and whose committee gave them the few days, which will expire on Wednesday.

Therefore, Mr. President, I sincerely trust that, in view of the record, the pending resolution will be voted down, and I hope we will not again be told, when we vote it down, that such action will be disastrous, for certainly a delay for these few days will not change anyone's mind and will not mean life or death to this cloture resolution.

I am convinced the committee will reach a vote, and I am convinced, too, that the Senators on this side who asked for just a few days should certainly be granted that time. I do not know of an instance in the history of the Senate when a committee has been discharged after 7 days of hearings when it could not come to a vote immediately on the day following the close of the hearings. I do not think there is of the Senate precedent for such action.

I repeat, I am for the resolution offered by myself, I am for a resolution pending before the committee to cut off debate, and to make cloture applicable to all motions; I believe the rule should be changed, as I have always believed; but, nevertheless, I think that the pending resolution should be voted down, and that the Committee on Rules and Administration, a standing committee of the Senate, should itself be given an opportunity on next Wednesday to determine this question.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Pennsylvania has referred to something that happened before the Committee on Rules and Administration with respect to the pending measure. I should like to know whether what I have heard is true or false, viz: that the proponent of the resolution to discharge the committee even requested in the beginning that no hearings whatsoever be held, that no Senator be permitted to testify before the committee, and that a vote be had immediately to report the resolution favorably.

Mr. MYERS. I hesitate to give a categorical reply to the question, but I do know that discussion was had in the committee, that hearings were held, lengthy hearings, complete hearings, and that there was no necessity for any further hearings. Then when it was said, "Senators should at least be permitted to testify," several times members of the committee desired to cut off their testimony and to give them only 2 or 3 days, and at the end of those 2 or 3 days cut off the hearings. That question arose several times, but fortunately it never came to a vote.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I to understand that no Senator who desired to testify was denied the privilege of testifying before the committee?

Mr. MYERS. That is very true; every Senator who indicated a desire to testify was given opportunity.

Mr. IVES and Mr. MORSE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. MYERS. I think the Senator from New York first asked for recognition, and I yield to him.

Mr. IVES. I appreciate the views of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I appreciate fully the situation with which he has been confronted, and I appreciate his interest in the proposed action, which I know is sincere. However, I wish to ask the Senator whether he does not believe that the sooner this matter is handled the more likelihood there will be that it will be handled successfully from the standpoint of the proponents.

Mr. MYERS. Of course, I believe that the sooner proposed legislation before the Congress is handled the better it will be for Congress and the country.

Mr. IVES. I refer to the particular resolution we are discussing.

Mr. MYERS. I thoroughly agree with the Senator that the sooner we can get to the consideration of this question, the better.

Mr. IVES. May I ask the Senator another question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield further?

Mr. MYERS. I am happy to yield.

Mr. IVES. Does the Senator believe that as soon as a resolution is reported by the committee, whether it be the Senate Resolution 15 or his own resolution it should have a position of priority on the Senate Calendar for consideration on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. MYERS. I would rather the Senator would address that question to the majority leader, but it is my understanding that at the moment there is nothing on the calendar. Something may have come in during the last day or so, but there is little on the calendar that would precede the resolution, I believe.

Mr. IVES. I know the sincerity of the Senator from Pennsylvania in this matter, and I am wondering if he does not agree with me that the best and the quickest way to handle this question is to handle it first and get it out of the way.

Mr. MYERS. Of course, the more expeditious attention we give to the resolution, the better. But that is not the question before the Senate. The question is, Should a standing committee of the Senate be discharged from consideration of a resolution after 7 days of hearings because it refused to vote to report the resolution a day after the hearings closed? That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. IVES. That is the question before the Senate, but it does not happen to be the question I raised to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania. Does the Senator agree with me that a question of this kind, this particular question should be given any priority on the floor once a resolution is reported by the committee, or once it is before the Senate, whether it be by report of Senate Resolution 15, or of some other resolution?

Mr. MYERS. I believe the sooner we can get to this resolution, the better, if we expect to have it adopted during the present session of the Congress.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania believe that the subject matter of this resolution is more or less complicated than the subject matter pending before the Labor and Public Welfare Committee on labor legislation?

Mr. MYERS. I will ask the Senator to repeat the question.

Mr. MORSE. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania believe that the subject matter of the resolution on cloture is more or less complicated than the subject matter of the labor legislation pending before the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare?

Mr. MYERS. That will depend on the definition of the word "complicated."

Mr. MORSE. I will take the Senator's definition.

Mr. MYERS. I would say that it is less complicated, probably, than the labor question, although feelings are just as deep and men on both sides have just as sincere convictions on this question as on the labor question.

Mr. MORSE. Then, in view of the answer of the Senator from Pennsylvania to that question, does he share the view of the Senator from Oregon that more time should have been allowed by the Democrats on the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare for extensive hearings on labor legislation?

Mr. MYERS. No; I think just the opposite; that the Republicans have been insisting upon more and more time on labor legislation, but have been insisting that we cut off debate on this legislation. It probably all depends on how the shoe fits, I may say.

Mr. MORSE. We will discuss that for a moment by way of questions and answers. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania believe that February 10 is a proper date to fix for the closing of hearings on labor legislation?

Mr. MYERS. Well, I think that the committee itself is probably more competent than I to give an answer to that question. I am satisfied with the date, February 10, if that is a sufficient answer, although I am not a member of the committee, and therefore was not present when all the arguments were advanced for closing off hearings on February 10 and all the other arguments were advanced for extending hearings beyond that date.

Mr. MORSE. But the Senator from Pennsylvania is not satisfied that the length of time which has elapsed in the consideration of the cloture resolution by the Rules and Administration Committee has as yet been adequate.

Mr. MYERS. I did not say that. I said that so far as I was concerned I did not need that week's time. But I did say that three or four Senators asked for that additional time, and when the committee voted to postpone consideration of that resolution 1 week, I thought that the Senate and the members of the committee should extend that courtesy to the chairman and to those members of the committee who had asked for additional time since the committee itself by majority vote had so determined.

Mr. MORSE. Now with reference to the observation of the Senator from Pennsylvania as to what foot has what shoe on it, does the Senator from Pennsylvania think that the same courtesy should have been extended Senators who felt that a longer period of time in the Labor and Public Welfare Committee for the consideration of the very complicated subject of labor legislation, should have been granted beyond February 10?

Mr. MYERS. The committee determined not to grant such time. The Committee on Rules and Administration determined to grant that additional time. The Committee on Rules and Administration having so determined, having so acted by majority vote, then I would think the Senate should sustain the Committee on Rules and Administration. On the labor question, the committee itself, by a majority vote, determined not to grant such additional time.

Mr. MORSE. Is it not true then that what the Senator's argument reduces itself to is that the Senate ought to approve whatever action the Democratic majority takes on any committee on which they have a majority?

Mr. MYERS. Oh, I would not hope that all votes would be along party lines. I would think that we would be able many times to cross the party lines. I do think there is too much of politics in this particular resolution before us today. Since the Senator from Oregon has brought up the question, I will say that I think there is too much politics in that resolution.

Mr. MORSE. I want to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I certainly share his hopes. I would like to join with him in eliminating partisan politics, and I most respectfully suggest to him that if the Democrats really want to eliminate party politics on the labor issue they will proceed to lift the February 10 ban, because the legislation cannot possibly be considered on its merits in that period of time.

Mr. PEPPER and Mr. STENNIS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Florida, because I believe he has an observation to make somewhat in line with what the Senator from Oregon has been saying.

Mr. PEPPER. Obviously, Mr. President, there are some of us who are on the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare who think the Senator from Oregon might more properly discuss the subject with his colleagues, with whom he has heretofore discussed it, than with the Senate as a whole, the Members of which are not so well acquainted with the details of what has happened as are the members of the committee.

I think it might be observed for the benefit of the Senator from Oregon that, if I understand the situation correctly, in the Committee on Rules and Administration all the Senators who desired to be heard were heard. I do not believe the public was heard at all. Senators were heard for 8 days. I understand that the print of the hearings before the Committee on Rules and Administration has not yet become available to Senators. However, the matter is being now considered by the committee, following the conclusion of the hearings, if I understand the situation correctly. I do not know that any limitation has been imposed by the committee on when they shall have to come to a final decision about reporting the resolution or not reporting it, although I am informed that the committee is going to act upon the matter when they next meet.

I suppose they will give consideration to it, and it is my assumption that whenever the committee feel that they are prepared to do so, they will report the resolution. Certainly my own vote, in voting against the resolution of the Senator from California does not indicate that I am not in sympathy with the two-thirds cloture rule applicable to any pending question in the Senate, but it means that I do not believe it is quite appropriate to demand the discharge of a committee which has had 8 days of hearings, which hearings have not yet been printed, and when the committee has only had a few days to deliberate upon the results of the hearings. I mention that because I want to contrast it with the situation in the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, of which the Senator from Oregon spoke. That committee, by a vote of 8 to 5, resolved to limit the public hearings, but specifically indicated that any Senator, of course, at any time could be heard before the committee, and made no limitation at all upon the period when the committee itself could deliberate upon and debate the matter in committee.

So I want the situation very clearly understood. It will be only fair to the committee if it be clearly understood that although the Labor and Public Welfare Committee fixed a limitation upon the time in which the public could be heard, until February 10, there has been no suggestion of a limitation as to the length of time the committee itself should take to debate upon or deliberate upon the subject of the hearings on the whole matter before the committee. As I understand, in this instance there remains the mere matter of the committee itself deliberating upon the subject to determine what action it will choose to take. I thought it was only fair to distinguish the cases.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the Senator from Florida for his statement.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] is on his feet, and I yield to him.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, at the time the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania was making his observation the idea came to my mind that possibly the matter could be settled by postponing the question to a date after the committee might have an opportunity to pass upon the matter next Wednesday. I happen to be a member of the Committee on Rules and Administration. I have worked faithfully with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to try to have resolutions and other matters before the committee disposed of speedily. If the motion to discharge the committee should prevail not much can be done before next Thursday. If the motion to discharge the committee should fail not much can be done until Thursday.

Mr. President, I submit to the Members of the Senate a mechanical solution to the problem, which is that we postpone further consideration of the resolution until next Thursday at 2 o'clock p. m. That will give the Committee on Rules and Administration, of which I am a member, an opportunity to do what I have been led to believe the chairman thinks might be done, and that is that the resolution be reported favorably. If that meets with the favor of the Members of the Senate, I suggest that it would be a satisfactory solution. I propound the question to the majority leader whether he does not believe that it would be a satisfactory solution of the problem to give the Committee on Rules and Administration a chance to report the resolution favorably on Wednesday. If it does not report it on Wednesday, the junior Senator from California, who is very anxious to have the resolution brought before the Senate, would lose but very little time. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he will yield to me further so I may again submit the question to the majority leader.

Mr. MYERS. I think it might be better if I were to yield the floor, and the Senator from Nebraska could then discuss the matter with the majority leader.

Mr. WHERRY. I propound that question to the majority leader.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is the adoption of Senate Resolution 47. That motion is open to debate.

Mr. STENNIS rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi wish to be recognized?

Mr. STENNIS. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield long enough so that the majority leader may answer my question? Will the Senator defer his remarks until the majority leader has had an opportunity to answer?

Mr. STENNIS. I do not care to debate the question, but I want to make a statement in regard to the facts, and will take but a few minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I think the chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration has been too modest in his statement of the actual facts as they occurred during the conduct of the hearings. Hearings were set for January 24. I do not think there was as much as 1 minute's delay in the start of the hearings each day. There was a good attendance of committee members. Senators who came there and testified apparently laid aside all other business and gave preference to this subject matter. Senators waited until their turn came to testify. I know that the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] had to return on the second day in order to have an opportunity to be heard. The chairman was always present, and the hearings were continually in progress.

Two days were taken by the proponents, and 4 days were taken by those who were opposed to one resolution or the other. I do not believe that anyone testified for longer than 30 minutes, except the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] and the time which he took was well taken. I believe also that the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND] took a little more than an hour. There was not much cross-examination. It was very brief and limited. The junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] had to condense his testimony to a great extent. He was pressed for time, and he waived the opportunity of extending his remarks further.

I believe that the record will show that all the testimony given on every day by all the witnesses was strictly on the merits, and to the point. I feel that the entire record will indicate that the chairman has been far too modest in his representations about the way the hearings were conducted. I know that other Senators wished to be heard, but could not find time within the limit of 6 days during which the hearings were conducted, and therefore waived their opportunity to be heard. There was no disposition on their part or on the part of any member of the committee to ask that the hearings be extended in order to give those Senators an opportunity to be heard, because they had not been able to obtain a hearing within the limited time.

In answer to the charge of unwarranted delay, let me say that I was greatly impressed with the very fine evidence which was brought out on both sides of this controversy. I was further greatly interested by the way in which the four new members of the committee were impressed. Members of the press who attended the hearings were impressed by what was said there.

Mr. President, I believe that there will be much food for thought in this record when it is finally printed. I know that particularly the four new members of the committee had their minds aroused. Points were brought to their attention that they had not previously considered. They have been wrestling with the question of what action they should take on this matter. I believe that their request for a little more time to weigh the evidence and think it over comes from their hearts.

It has been stated that we lost 10 days at the beginning. I believe that the great brevity and dispatch with which the chairman conducted the hearings under the circumstances I have outlined far more than outweigh the loss of the 10 days because of the inauguration ceremonies. The chairman of the committee and the ranking Republican member of the committee were both on the inaugural committee and were charged with official and specific duties in connection with that occasion.

I do not care to argue this question; but with due deference to everyone, it seems to me that instead of debating about discharging the committee, we ought to be considering a resolution of commendation praising the chairman for the fine example which he has set before the Senate in disposing of the business of the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, it is with some reluctance at this late hour that I rise to address the Senate on the motion of the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] to discharge the Committee on Rules and Administration from the further consideration of Senate Resolution No. 15, relating to an amendment to the cloture rule. However, in view of the debate which has taken place today, I believe that as majority leader I must say a few words.

Since the distinguished Senator from California has become a Member of this body, I have formed a very warm affection for him. I do not underestimate his ability. He is very gracious, and very personable. However, I confess that I have been a little disturbed and somewhat disappointed because of the procedure he has chosen to follow, which to my way of thinking is most unusual. It is very unusual to attempt to discharge a standing committee from the orderly transaction of its business.

Mr. President, committees of Congress have been with us as long as the Republic has been in existence. Standing committees are at the base of parliamentary rule. Unless the prerogatives and power of standing committes are protected, there can be no orderly business in the Senate of the United States or any other parliamentary body. The integrity of the orderly transaction of business is deeply involved in this motion to discharge the committee. A committee should not be discharged from its duties unless there is gross and palpable neglect on the part of the committee in delaying a report on important legislation which it is considering, or unless the committee, through arbitrary action or through some whim or caprice, or for some other unjustifiable reason, refuses to report a measure. The precedents show that it is only then that the motion to discharge a committee from further consideration of a measure has been used.

What are the facts in this case? We have heard the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, as well as other Members of the Senate who are members of that committee, disclose to the Senate exactly what happened by way of testimony before the committee. The sole question for the Senate to determine, if we want to be fair and honest about our decision, is whether or not the committee is guilty of lack of diligence in the consideration of the evidence adduced before the committee, and whether or not the committee has failed to report the resolution as soon as it should have done so. That is really all there is to this controversy before the Senate. If we want to decide it as fair and impartial jurors should decide the issue, that is the only question before us.

The evidence demonstrates beyond the shadow of a doubt that the chairman of the committee and the members of the committee have been extremely diligent in hearing the testimony and in scheduling hearings upon this measure. So far as I am concerned, I wish to have the RECORD show that I commend the chairman of the committee and the committee as a whole on the diligence they have exhibited in the consideration of this measure.

Mr. President, the present overzealousness on the part of my good Republican friends on the opposite side of the aisle is in sharp contrast to the inactivity and the lethargy they exhibited 2 years ago. Now those on the other side of the aisle want someone to specify the exact hour and minute when we shall begin debate on this matter. Yet the same Senator from New York, who a few moments ago was propounding questions to the Senator from Pennsylvania, was then and is now a member of the Committee on Rules and Administration. He was a member of that committee 2 years ago. With all the enthusiasm for action bubbling from every pore of the Senator from New York and the Senator from California, yet for weeks and months—yes, for almost 2 years—those Senators who now crave action sat silently by during that period of time and never once made a motion to take the then pending resolution from the calendar and have it debated.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. In just one moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois declines to yield for the present.

Mr. LUCAS. But now Mr. President, they complain—even the Senator from New York complains to the Senator from Pennsylvania—because the committee has not acted more promptly. Mr. President, I wonder what the Senator from New York would have done upon this issue, had his friend Mr. Dewey been elected President of the United States. Immediately before the inauguration, no doubt, the Senator from New York would have been conferring with Mr. Dewey insisting that the proposal to amend the cloture rule be taken up immediately upon the convening of the Senate, just as he is doing now.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I can imagine the Senator's following that enthusiastic course of action, and I know other Senators can imagine the same thing. The Senator from California no doubt would have again, again, and again insisted that Governor Warren, had he been elected Vice President, should call upon the Senate to take up his resolution and eliminate all the other business of the Senate from consideration. The Senator would have said, "Oh, let's postpone action on housing legislation, rent-control legislation, export-control legislation, labor legislation and everything else, but for God's sake get this resolution to the floor of the Senate, so we can debate it." I can imagine how the able Senator from California would have done that very thing if Mr. Warren were now in the chair of the President of the Senate.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. In a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I know what is behind this matter. No one can make me believe that Republican politics is not involved in this insistence and this enthusiasm for the setting of an exact date and time for the consideration of this matter. Republican Senators can use this point in the 1950 campaign if they choose to do so, Mr. President; they can do all they want to do on the question of civil rights; but whatever those on the other side of the aisle do, they will never take from President Harry Truman, in the White House, the credit for what he has done about civil rights, and what he believes, and he is the Chief Executive for another 4 years. As a result of the Republican lethargy and inactivity for the past 2 years, the people know that what the Republican Senators are doing here in insisting that we name the hour and minute, the exact time, when the committee will report and the Senate will take up the subject is political poppycock.

Let me say to the Senator from New York and the Senator from California that the Senators on their side of the aisle are not going to arrange the timetable of the Senators on the Democratic side, so long as we are in control. We shall take up the subject when we get ready to do so. We shall take it up in due course. Do not misunderstand me on this issue; everyone knows where I stand. Everyone knows how the people of my State stand upon the issue of civil rights and all other problems. The Democratic majority will handle this situation in the way we believe to be proper, and we do not propose to be pushed around for political reasons. Those who are truly interested in this great question understand fully our intention and our position—and yours. The Senator from California can file another resolution tomorrow if he wishes to do so, and can do the discourteous thing to the Senate of the United States and the comity which exists between committees, and we shall again debate that on the floor of the Senate.

I think the pending resolution is utterly unfair and unwise. During all the time the cloture resolution of 2 years ago remained on the calendar throughcut the life of a Republican-controlled Congress I did not see a single move or motion from the Republican side of the aisle to do anything about it.

Now, Senators on the other side say two wrongs do not make a right; they advise us they have learned a great lesson as a result of the past 2 years—a great political lesson, Mr. President. But what they are doing now will not result in what they hope for in the 1950 campaign, which they loudly proclaim to the country they have already started. We shall meet not only this but all other issues in proper manner here, Mr. President, and we shall meet them with another Democratic victory again at the polls.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief reply to the Senator from Illinois.

I wish to say that in my judgment the record of the Senate of the United States for some years past on the whole question of civil rights and cloture is a record where the Democratic Party has made very fine speeches about civil rights, but has made no record of really trying to pass some civil-rights legislation. My reply to the Senator from Illinois is briefly this: It is perfectly obvious what his floor generalship on this matter really seeks to accomplish. In my judgment, the Senator from Illinois is trying to keep in the background for a good many days and, I think, weeks, civil-rights legislation, on which the President of the United States has made so many fine speeches.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I will not yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon declines to yield.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to extend to the Senator from Illinois the same courtesy in that regard that he extended to Members on this side of the aisle.

I wish to say that the Democrats in the Senate of the United States have not made a record of delivering on their promises in the field of civil rights. I wish to say that if the Democrats in the Senate of the United States want to make a record, then let them come forward now with civil-rights legislation. My opinion is that they dare not do so because that would split that side of the aisle wide open, and they know it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I decline to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon declines to yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to say that so far as the junior Senator from Oregon is concerned, ever since I have been in the Senate, time and time again I have pleaded for action on both sides of the aisle; and last summer when the Republicans at their convention adopted the resolution pledging to the American people that they would proceed immediately in this field, that was our answer to the Senator from Illinois. Had we had control of the Senate of the United States in January 1949, our position would have been to press for the enactment of civil-rights legislation.

I say from this desk this afternoon to minority groups in America: You have heard another fine speech from a Democrat in the Senate of the United States in terms of promises, but in my judgment you are going to have to make very clear to the Democratic Party that you are tired of their speeches, and that you want some action on civil-rights legislation taken in the Eighty-first Congress; and the best time to take action to break the filibuster is at the beginning of the session, because, as the Senator from California has pointed out, it is almost physically impossible to break a filibuster at the end of a session.

I say to the majority leader that if he really wants to make good on his assertions about where he stands on civil-rights legislation, let him take such action that he can as majority leader in getting some civil-rights legislation before the Senate now, and see what happens.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I will not yield.

The Democrats in the Senate of the United States, with such legislation before the Senate, would very soon put on a spectacle, I predict, a spectacle that would show there is no unity on the part of the Democrats in this country to put through the President's recommendations on civil rights.

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. MYERS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I merely rise for a moment to answer my good friend from Oregon on some of the implications he has made with respect to my leadership, with which I wholly disagree. My people in my section of the country know me, and they know my record. They will know where I stand when the roll is called, or when debates are in progress, and they will not call on the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] to find out where I stand from day to day.

When the Senator from Oregon speaks about unity, I should think he would feel a little guilty in attempting to lecture the Democratic Party on that issue. If I read the newspapers correctly the Young Turks of whom he is one, have been trying to tell the Old Guard of the Republican Party what they should or should not do. Consequently it ill behooves the Senator from Oregon, as a result of the split that has existed on the other side of the aisle ever since I have been in the Senate, to try to lecture us or give us a lesson as to what we should do with respect to unity or disunity.

I heard a good many unity speeches in the last campaign. The Democrats did not have unity in that campaign. We had a lot of folks against us in the South and we had a lot of folks against us in the North. The Republicans had unity, but the Democrats with all of the disunity, won the election. I would rather have honest disunity than the phony unity I saw in the Republican campaign, and what I am seeing in this Chamber when I listen to some of the good speeches being made.

I wonder, Mr. President, since we are talking about unity, just what some of the Senators on the other side of the aisle will do on next Tuesday night when Mr. Dewey comes down to address the folks in Washington on Lincoln's birthday. I hope he continues to speak on unity, but not the kind of unity we recently saw at Omaha, Nebr., during the wonderful peace conference the Republicans held there, from which my friend, the minority leader, Mr. WHERRY, has just returned. Was that unity? [Laughter.]

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. There was much snow in Nebraska, but I got out from under it, and now I want to say that the meeting about which the Senator is talking manifested that honest disunity which exists in the Democratic Party. We had our family differences, but we had one of the finest meetings I have ever attended. In fact, a little disunity once in a while proves that a party is alive and ready for business. We are ready to go to work. For the life of me, I cannot see that all this argument has a thing to do with the vital legislation we are here to consider. Why talk about campaigns that have been won and lost? Why talk about unity and disunity? We should be talking here today about civil rights.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am not yielding for a speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois does not yield further.

Mr. WHERRY. We have been violating the rules all afternoon, Mr. President. The Chair indicated he would be rather lenient with Senators during the remainder of the afternoon.

Mr. LUCAS. The Chair has been lenient.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is within the province of the Senator to decide how long he will yield, without a violation of the rule.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield for 2 minutes more, in order that I may finish?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not want the Senator to make a speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield, or does he not?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I want the Senator from Illinois to show the unity he has been talking about. The Senator will agree with me, the only sensible thing to do in considering the question is to forget politics. Let us continue this matter until 2 o'clock Thursday, to give the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration a chance to call his committee together. Let the committee take action. Let them report the resolution favorably, and there will be no need of further speeches on unity or disunity in the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. I am not ready to agree to it.

Mr. WHERRY. It is merely a proposition.

Mr. LUCAS. I cannot agree to it. When the Senator talks about extraneous, immaterial matters that we are discussing, I agree with him. But I listened to the Senator this afternoon on his appeal from the decision of the Chair. That was strictly a legal proposition. The Senator took 2 hours to debate the power of the Small Business Committee instead of debating the ruling of the Chair. So the Senator is not in a very good position to tell me I should stick to my text. The Senator departed from his text considerably in the early part of the afternoon.

Mr. President, I merely want to conclude by saying that so long as I am a Member of the Senate, regardless of whether I am in the majority or in the minority, I shall never vote to take a matter from a standing committee unless there is a justifiable reason. Under the Legislative Reorganization Act, we have 15 committees with vast, unusual powers in connection with the handling of legislation. Once resolutions to discharge committees are freely permitted, the orderly transaction of business in the Senate will have been absolutely broken. If continued, it would ultimately destroy parliamentary law. Every Senator knows that.

There is no particular haste, Mr. President, unless we decide to play into the hands of Republican politics. The committee intends to meet on Wednesday and I am certain the Members will act with expedition and dispatch.

Your hustle and bustle, your stir and fuss amazes Republicans, as well as us.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution, on which the yeas and nays have already been ordered.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The question is on agreeing to Senate Resolution 47, offered by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], to discharge the Committee on Rules and Administration from further consideration of the cloture resolution.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a vote "yea" means to discharge the committee, and a vote "nay" means the contrary, does it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] are absent on official business.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, before the Members of the Senate start to leave the Chamber, I wish to announce that there will be a session of the Senate tomorrow, at which time we will take up the export control bill, and will also perhaps call the calendar for the first time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill to which the Senator has referred, which was made the special order for today, was displaced to take up the resolution just voted on.

REGULATION OF EXPORTS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 548, to provide for continuation of authority for the regulation of exports, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, is the Senator going to explain what the bill provides?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator want to have it taken up tonight?

Mr. MAYBANK. No; I merely wish to have it made the unfinished business.

Mr. WHERRY. With that in view, I should like to ask the majority leader whether there will be an adjournment this evening and a morning hour and morning business tomorrow, or will the Senate take a recess today?

Mr. LUCAS. I had planned to move to adjourn.

Mr. WHERRY. If there is an adjournment tonight there will be a morning hour tomorrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 548) to provide for continuation of authority for the regulation of exports, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, with amendments.

THE RACE QUESTION IN THE SOUTH

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, at a time when a contemplated change in Senate rules to limit debate is before the Senate Rules Committee for consideration, I think it appropriate to read into the RECORD a United Press dispatch, date lined East St. Louis, Ill., February 1.

The headlines read as follows:

WHITE PUPILS WALK OUT IN RACE PROTEST

I quote the story:

The Rock Junior High School here was closed today when about 400 white pupils walked out of classes when they learned Negro children were in the building attempting to enroll.

Small groups of students at East St. Louis High School also walked out of classes when six Negroes renewed attempts to enroll there. Classes, however, were not interrupted.

Ten Negro children, accompanied by adults, walked into the Rock school before classes began and were seated in a vacant classroom. The pupils, accompanied by scores of parents, immediately walked out and many of them, carrying signs urging the Negroes out, paraded around the school.

Two squads of police were on hand to keep order. The Negroes remained in the classroom.

The attempt to enroll the Negroes at three East St. Louis public schools, now restricted to whites, began yesterday when groups of them tried to register but were turned down. Miss Bernice Goedde, president of the board of education, said the policy of segregation would continue.

William Jones, Negro attorney, said Illinois law makes no provision for segregation in public schools and he would seek a writ of mandamus in circuit court to force enrollment of the Negroes.

Mr. President, my purpose in calling this report of an unfortunate incident in Illinois to the attention of the Senate is not to reflect adversely on the great State of Illinois.

I desire by calling attention to this case to point out specifically that so-called racial discrimination is not restricted to one region of this country, namely, the South. Quite frequently I see in the press of the Nation reports of this and other occurrences, many of them brutal and horrible. Never, however, do I observe the press of this country giving the same prominence of display to a story of racial strife that originates in New York, Michigan, California, the District of Columbia, Illinois, or some other area outside the South, as it does to the reports of infrequent instances below the Mason and Dixon's line.

I take this opportunity to again urge the Senate to deliberate a long time before it forces through a rule change which would permit drastic limitation of debate and thus pave the way for legislation which is designed to accomplish by coercion that which can only be rightly accomplished by education, patience, and persuasion.
